KYODO INTERVIEWS OUTGOING PRC ENVOY TO JAPAN

OW281007 Tokyo KYODO in English 0955 GMT 28 Jan 82

[Text] Tokyo, Jan 28 (IYODO) -- Outgoing Chinese Ambassador to Japan Fu Hao said Thursday that he was satisfied with the development in Japan-China relations during his four and a half year tenure. In an interview with KYODO NEWS SERVICE, Fu, who came to Japan as ambassador in August 1977, expressed satisfaction over the Japan-China peace and friendship treaty concluded in 1978 and the subsequent sharp development in mutual economic relations. Saying that Japan-China relations have a bright future, Fu said that he was deeply impressed by the Japanese people's friendly feeling for the Chinese people. Expressing admiration for Japanese diligence, intellectual appetite and aspirations, Fu said that the issues of an aging society and education of the young were likely to come to the fore in future. Referring to China's suspension of Japanese contracts covering Chinese plant projects, a matter which caused friction between the two countries last year, Fu said it could be attributed to China's economic readjustment policy and that the two countries ultimately resolved it through mutual faith and a respect for the contracts.

On a less positive note, Fu said that Japanese press reports on China were untruthful and thus the two countries would have to further deepen mutual understanding. He did not elaborate. He also stressed that the Taiwanese problem was China's domestic issue and China is opposed to interference or intervention by any outside force. In connection with the 1988 Seoul Olympic Games, Fu said China was carefully studying the matter of participation.

Fu is to return home next Tuesday and take up his former post as vice foreign minister. Fu is to be replaced by Assistant Foreign Minister Song Zhiguang.

XINHUA CITES SUZUKI'S SPEECH TO DIET SESSION

OW251640 Beijing XINHUA in English 1607 GMT 25 Jan 82

[Excerpts] Tokyo, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki told the Diet today that his government will carry out administrative and financial reforms at home and strengthen the realtions with the United States and ease trade friction with other countries. He laid down these main objectives in a policy speech delivered at the 96th Diet Session.

The prime minister said that effective efforts will be made to develop relations with China and to make sure that the Japanese and Chinese prime ministers will pay official visits to each other's country around the tenth anniversary of the normalization of Japanese-Chinese relations.

PAPER VIEWS DISMISSAL OF MONGOLIAN ACADEMY HEAD

["International Jottings" by Cun Xu [1317 3219]: "Injury"]

[Text] According to a report by UNEN of Mongolia, Badzaryn Shirendeb, president of the Mongolian Academy of Sciences, was removed from his post by the Mongolian People's Great Hural and given a "serious warning" by the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party [MPRP]. The reasons were that he only propagated in words the Soviet "profound experience" on scientific research, but actually ignored and forgot it, and that he failed to pay necessary attention to the "precious opinions and suggestions" presented by Soviet scholars.

Although the news was shocking, it was understandable. So a leading member of the Mongolian academy of sciences failed to pay "necessary attention" to the Soviet experience and suggestions. Can this be regarded as a sin?! For a long period, the elder brother in the "big family" has decided everything. Therefore, the opinions of Soviet scholars have become infallible and a criterion for testing one's loyalty to Moscow. Tremendous political pressure has brought out the dismissal of the president of the Academy of Sciences, who is an old man over 70 years old, a former member of the Central Committee and the Political Bureau, and a secretary of the MPRP Secretariat and a doctor of philosophy in history.

PRC-MPR BORDER COMMITTEE MEETS IN ULAANBAATAR

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, 5 Apr (XINHUA) -- In order to fulfill the taks of conducting joint border inspections as stipulated in the border protocol signed in 1964 between the Governments of the People's Republic of China and the Mongolian People's Republic, the Sino-Mongolian joint border inspection committee neld its first session from 18 February to 3 April in Ulaanbaatar.

The two sides discussed the issues concerning joint inspection, and signed the minutes of the meeting.

BO YIBO MEETS JAPAN'S ABE, FETED AT PARTY

OW021850 Beijing XINHUA in English 1835 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Tokyo, April 2 (XINHUA) -- Japanese government and business leaders and visiting Chinese Vice Premier Bo Yibo have repeatedly expressed the desire for steady development of economic relations between the two countries during the vice premier's visit, which began Thursday.

During meetings with Japanese International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe and Vice President of the Association for the Promotion of International Trade Shigeichi Koga, the vice premier discussed the two countries' economic relations. Trade between the two countries in 1981 exceeded 10 billion U.S. dollars.

Bo told Abe during a meeting today that the two countries should learn from and help each other to make up each other's deficiencies so as [to] develop their national ecnomies. This is a favorable condition for promoting their economic exchanges. China's market is promising while many countries of the world is in recession, he noted.

Abe told Bo that Japan is now plagued by a recession. Large companies are now operating with support from small- and medium-sized companies.

Abe said this is characteristic of Japan's industries, and proposed for closer cooperation between small- and medium-sized Japanese and Chinese industries. "Japan is engulfed in trade frictions with many countries. I hope that its trade with China will proceed on a stable basis," Abe said.

At a cocktail party this evening given by the Association for the Promotion of International Trade in honor of the visiting vice premier, Vice President Koga spoke for President Aiichiro Fujiyama when he called for fresh efforts by the two countries to establish closer bilateral ties.

Bo Yibo said: "Problems may occur during the development of bilateral economic relations, but as long as we face reality,use a practical approach and work in a down-to-earth manner, a new situation will surely be ushered in." The Chinese vice premier also reaffirmed that China will "firmly uphold its open-door policy and continue to work for extensive internati-nal cooperation."

More than 200 Japanese businessmen and politicians attended the cocktail party. The vice premier met the president of the association earlier today.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S.-SOVIET DISARMAMENT DISPUTE

HK140909 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Apr 82 p 7

[Report: "U.S.-Soviet Dispute Over Disarmament Continues To Unfold"]

[Text] On the nuclear disarmament problem, especially that of freezing nuclear weapons, an acute and complicated dispute has further developed recently between the United States and the Soviet Union.

On 6 April, the day after Reagan's statement, U.S. Secretary of State Haig gave a speech at Georgetown University, where he once again turned down the proposal to freeze U.S.-Soviet nuclear arsenals. This speech was a demonstration of the coordinated action of the Reagan administration. In his statement, Reagan upheld his "zero option" proposal and pointedly said that Haig would give an overall account of conditions concerning the balance of military forces between the United States and the Soviet Union. This was to prove that the U.S. standpoint is just and reasonable and provide a guarantee for safety -- a standpoint that calls for reducing the Soviet nuclear force to that of the United States prior to a freeze of the nuclear forces of the two. Such a coordinated move is obviously designed to achieve two aims: The first is to voice U.S. support for talks with the Soviet Union and to express its hope that Brezhnev is sincere in his expressed wish to use the occasion of his attendance at the special UN meeting to discuss disarmament problems in June to meet with Reagan. The second is to counter the domestic movement calling for the United States to be the first to initiate a nuclear weapons freeze and to stave off the international campaign, particularly on the part of its West European allies, calling for holding of U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks. This is to extricate the United States from the state of passivity into which it has been thrown since Brezhnev put forth his suggestion of instituting a "moratorium" on the deployment of intermediate-range missiles in Europe.

Haig's speech clearly showed that the United States cannot accept the proposal for freezing nuclear weapons at their current levels. This is because he thinks that after 10 years of continuous and all-round efforts on the part of the Soviet Union to strengthen its nuclear armed forces, a freeze at the current levels "would put the unstable and unequal balances of military forces on a permanent basis." In addition, this would "be an incentive to the Soviets' unilateral armaments expansion of 10 years' standing." At the same time, Haig also stated his opposition to the proposal put forth by people in the West that the United States should be the first to declare that it would not use nuclear weapons first. He holds that the acceptance of such a proposal will "ruin the strategy of flexible response" on the part of the West. He has reaffirmed that in order to achieve a real reduction in nuclear weapons, Western allies must maintain a position of strength. This speech was not only directed against Brezhnev's peace offensive, but also aimed at certain people at home and among the allies who oppose the existing U.S. disarmament policy.

Such an approach by the Reagan administration, which has kicked the ball back to Moscow as far as disarmament talks are concerned, has, in a certain sense, shown definite results. Public opinion in the United States has responded favorably to Reagan's invitation to Brezhnev to meet with him. It is pointed out that this shows that Reagan has become "flexible" and displayed a "sense of reality." Western allies have also generally hailed the move. This is of course, not what Moscow likes to see. Moscow will never allow the continuation of such a development of things favorable to the United States. Therefore, the Soviet Union has so far maintained a prudent attitude toward the Reagan administration's expression of a willingness to hold heads of state talks and, for that matter, Has refrained from saying much about it. But it responded to Reagan's and Haig's arguments on the U.S. stand on disarmament talks with an immediate counterattack. Apart from launching another propaganda campaign about Moscow's not having achieved nuclear superiority, it has accused the United States of "increasing strategic weapons in an overall manner" in an attempt to "upset the already-achieved balance of military forces."

In addition, it has concentrated on continuously singling out serious weaknesses that have appeared inside and outside the United States for scathing attack. A 7 April TASS commentary nakedly encouraged those people in the United States and Western Europe favoring the quickest possible freeze of Soviet-U.S. nuclear weapons to continue putting pressure on the U.S. Government. This commentary stressed that a campaign calling for an armaments freeze was afoot in the United States and was growing with every passing day. Haig's "attempt to slow down" the pace of this movement was "obviously a dirty and clumsy effort." TASS also made much of the point that Brezhnev's proposal had aroused "great interest throughout the world." But it complained about the Reagan administration's "not having come up with any new proposals" and also "not having made any response to the Soviet proposal." But Western observers in Moscow hold that it is unusual for the Soviet Union to have remained silent on Reagan's proposal for a meeting of heads of state. Such a situation has inevitably given rise to various conjectures. Some people say that Reagan's proposal is not an "official invitation" and may possibly be regarded as not serious and thus not to Brezhnev's "taste." Others say that Moscow's silence may be related to Brezhnev's health. Still others say that Brezhnev may hope to meet with Reagan in a third country. Other views can also be cited. But people can only note that a formal U.S.-Soviet discussion or a meeting of heads of state is nothing but an interlude in a protracted story marked by a long disarmament deadlock and an increasingly hot arms race.

[Text] Beijing, April 8 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, vice-premier and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, met this afternoon with a delegation from the U.N. Economic Commission for Africa. The delegation is being led by S.E. Julien Kamaya, secretary of state in charge of marine transportation in the Premier of Gabon's Office.

Chen Muhua said: "China and the African countries have a good cooperation. All of us are confronted with the development of our national economies. China is willing to strengthen its economic cooperation with Africa, supporting and learning from each other."

Present at the meeting were Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Alain Maurice Mayombo, Gabonese ambassador to China. The delegation arrived here April 6 at the invitation of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

YAO YILIN MEETS INSURANCE FAIR PARTICIPANTS

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met here today with all the participants attending the 22nd session of the executive committee of the federation of Afro-Asian insurers and reinsurers. Yao Yilin said that insurers and reinsurers in Asian and African countries should promote the development of national insurance industry in these countries.

The 22nd session of the fair's executive committee was held in Beijing from April 1 to 4, under the presidency of Mr. A. Yuchengco, chairman of Malayan Insurance Company, Inc. in the Philippines. Twenty-nine delegates from 11 countries were present, namely, the Philippines, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Morocco, Nigeria, Turkey, Zambia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and China. Present at today's meeting were Shang Ming, vice-president of the People's Bank of China, and Li Pinzhou, Lin Zhenfeng and Shi Zheming, general managers and deputy general managers of the People's Insurance Company of China.

U.S. DECIDES TO SELL SPARE PARTS TO TAIWAN

[Text] Washington, April 13 (XINHUA) -- The Reagan administration today formally notified the Congress of its decision to sell military-related spare parts and supplies to Taiwan at a cost of 60 million dollars. State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said at a press briefing, "this package is part of a long-standing supply arrangement and its inception dates back to last summer. No weapons of any kind are involved." He referred to a written statement he read at a press briefing on April 7, which said, "back in December, shortly after our informal notification to Congress, we told the Chinese: (1) the transfer involved no weapons whatsoever; (2) the transfer was part of a long-standing arrangement concluded many months before and before the President met with Premier Zhao at the Cancun summit; and (3) we contemplated no new decisions on arms sales during the next few months, when our talks were underway." The U.S. Government sent a copy of this statement to the Chinese Embassy in Washington earlier today.

An announcement read to reporters by a Defense Department spokesman today said, "the sale will provide the spare parts necessary for Taiwan to maintain its U.S.-origin aircraft." Under U.S. law, any foreign military sale valued at more than 50 million dollars must be approved by the Congress. But the sale goes through unless the Congress rejects it within 30 days of the submission of the notification.

The Chinese Government has repeatedly expressed its solemn opposition against arms sales of any kind to Taiwan by the United States and pointed out that any sales of weapons to Taiwan by the U.S. constitute a violation of China's sovereignty and an interference in her internal affairs.

Foreign Ministry Protest

[Text] Beijing, April 14 (XINHUA) -- The spokesman of the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of China issued a statement here today on the U.S. sale of military-related spare parts to Taiwan. The statement reads in full as follows:

"On 13 April 1982, the U.S. Government officially notified the U.S. Congress that it was going to sell military-related spare parts to Taiwan. The Chinese Government hereby lodges a strong protest with the U.S. Government against this act of infringing upon China's sovereignty.

"With regard to the U.S. Government's sale of military-related spare parts to Taiwan, back in December 1981 when the U.S. Government unofficially notified the U.S. Congress of the matter, the Chinese Government already expressed its strong objection. While making representations on the subject, the Chinese side was repeatedly given the explanation by the U.S. side that this batch of spare parts was not a new sale of arms but was something that had been promised to Taiwan before the Sino-U.S. high-level meetings held in Cancun and Washington respectively; that this batch would involve only spare parts with no supply of weapons; and that the United States would not consider military transfers to Taiwan while the two sides were continuing their bilateral discussions on a settlement of the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. The Chinese Government indicated that it had taken note of the above-mentioned three-point explanation and assurance given by the U.S. side.

"At present, the Sino-U.S. bilateral discussions on the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan are still under way. If the U.S. Government should continue to disregard China's sovereignty and go back on the above assurance given to the Chinese side, it must be held responsible for all the consequences arising therefrom."

The Chinese Government delivered a copy of the statement to the U.S. Embassy in China before its release.

CHINA DAILY: NO ROOM FOR COMPROMISE ON TAIWAN

[Commentator's article: "Principle vs. Expediency"]

[Text] When Leonid Brezhnev spoke on Sino-Soviet relations at Tashkent on March 24, the Western press did little to analyze the intentions behind his words, but rather turned their attention to how China would react. Some analysts predicted that China would not take it very seriously; others, however, speculated that China would seize Brezhnev's olive-branch, to "play the Russia card," especially now that Sino-U.S. negotiations over the Taiwan issue have entered "a sensitive stage."

The latter are "global strategy" experts who share the mentality of those who labeled the Nixon-Kissinger China policy as playing the "China card" and oversimplified China's rapproachement with the United States in the past 10 years as playing the "America card."

Foreign Policy

This way of viewing every nation's foreign policy in light of power politics, of playing one antagonist against another, can be traced back to the earliest days of tribal warfare, and it has been regarded all along as a generally correct synthesis of strategic practice. In the long history of feudal China, the Celestial Empire was so frequently invaded by alien neighbouring nationalities that wise Han sovereigns invariably abided by the watch-word of "putting one barbarous nation in check at the hands of another" (yi yi zhi yi).

But history does not repeat itself. It does not follow the Machiavellian model of political cycle. Even China has changed, and so greatly. Here in this vast country, a nation without social classes of opposing interests has emerged. No one group of men within the country is allowed to enrich itself by exploiting others; hence China does not permit herslef to seek exploitation of any foreign land. She is opposed to domination of any one nation over other nations. In short, she is against hegemonism, world or regional, in defence of peace. This is the fundamental principle which governs China's relationship with all foreign countries.

The failure to realize this principle of China's foreign, as well as domestic policies has led many "China watchers" to place her on par with other countries, and with old China, and to misrepresent her dealings in foreign relations as ones based on expediency.

Main Tasks

Two years ago China's leaders set forth three main tasks for the nation to accomplish during the forthcoming decade: socialist modernization, the fight against world hegemonism and the peaceful unification of Taiwan with the mainland. The people are marching towards these goals in stability and unity. They are convinced that the three tasks can be fulfilled not only because they are justified, but also because the very existence of 1 billion Chinese as an independent and steadily prospering nation hinges on the success of these tasks. That is why China's position against the threats of the superpowers to impair her national sovereignty and territorial integrity is absolutely unshakable. No consideration of expediency can ever distract her from the principle.

To get Taiwan united with the mainland would probably entail, according to the nine-point programme proposed by Ye Jianying, chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, certain modifications of China's existing political, economic and social set-up, but that is subordinate to the principle of national unity and sovereignty, which is the primary cause. It is understandable, therefore, that any action the U.S. Government might take in connection with Taiwan will be judged according to whether it would bolster the island's separation from the mainland, or leave it as a matter to be decided solely by the Chinese.

The whole world is watching closely whether or not the U.S. Government will stand by its own pledge to respect China's sovereign rights over Taiwan. As far as China is concerned, there cannot be any room for compromise when national sovereignty is at stake.

PRC-U.S. COMPANY PROVIDES WELL-LOGGING SERVICE

[Text] Beijing, April 9 (XINHUA) -- The China Petroleum Logging-Dresser Atlas Cooperation Service Company, a joint venture between the China Offshore Logging Service Company and Dresser Atlas of Dresser Industries, Inc., U.S.A., has signed a wireline service contract with the Chengbei Oil Development Corporation of Japan in Tanggu, Tianjin, to undertake well logging jobs at a development platform in Bohai Bay. The company uses new computerized well logging equipment, according to the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry.

The joint venture was set up on January 1, 1982 to provide complete well loggging services for exploration and development of offshore petroleum and natural gas. The new company's provisional head office is in Beijing, and operating bases are in Tanggu and Zhanjiang of Guangdong Province.

Before the company was officially set up, a preparatory group had already undertaken well logging jobs on two wells drilled and operated in the south Yellow Sea by British Petroleum Development, Ltd., and on two wells in the South China Sea's Beibu Gulf for Total-Chine S.A. of France. The company has contracted to continue well logging services for Total-Chine for one jack-up drill in the Beibu Gulf this year.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SOVIET CASUALTIES IN AFGHANISTAN

HK130524 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO on Chinese 11 Apr 82 p 6

["International Jottings" by He Li [0149 4539]: "No Silver Buried Here"]

[Text] Recently, the foreign minister of the Karmal puppet regime made a great show of telling Western reporters that the Soviet troops in Afghanistan "have suffered no casualties because they have never been engaged in any combat here." Such a monstrous lie can be considered as nothing but a big joke.

As everybody knows, the Soviet troops have been engaged in face-to-face combat against the Afghan resistance forces from the first day they invaded Afghanistan. The number of Soviet troops has kept on increasing ever since, and at present is maintained somewhere between 120,000 and 130,000. At the same time, the number of casualties of the Soviet troops in Afghanistan has also increased rapidly and exceeded 10,000 long ago. These casualties included major generals, lieutenant generals and other high-ranking officials. Even the Moscow authorities themselves cannot deny these facts but they pretend to be ignorant of them. However, the Kabul foreign minister wanted to simply cover up these facts by a single statement. How clever he was in putting on such a performance!

In ancient China there was a joke which told about a man who buried some silver in the ground and then put a sign on the spot which read, "there is no 300 taels of silver here." Indeed this is ridiculous enough. However, is it not more ridiculous for the lackey of that man to do this in order to ingratiate himself with the master?

FEBRUARY EXPULSION OF SOVIET SPY FROM UK NOTED

[Text] London, April 10 (XINHUA) -- The British Government has announced the expulsion of a Soviet spy from the country, according to press reports here today.

The expelled Soviet agent, V.F. Zadneprovskiy, was attached to the Soviet trade delegation in London and had been caught attempting to obtain classified information through agents. No details were given of his espionage activities, such as the nature of the information he tried to obtain.

Douglas Hurd, minister of state at the Foreign Office, announced in a written Commons reply on Thursday that Zadneprovskiy's withdrawal had been requested "because he had been engaging in activities incompatible with his status." It was noted here that identical wording had been used to explain the expulsion of Viktor Lazin, a second secretary at the Soviet Embassy in London last August.

Reports said the Soviet Union was asked on February 22 to withdraw Zadneprovskiy and he left Britain on February 27.

BO YIBO CONFERS WITH SUZUKI IN JAPAN 13 APR

[Text] Tokyo, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki met Chinese Vice-Premier Bo Yibo here today and said he is looking forward to exchange visits between government heads of the two countries. Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang will visit Japan in May and Suzuki will visit China later on. The exchange of visits are arranged to mark the 10th anniversary of normalization of relations between the two countries. Suzuki said that these visits will further strengthen ties between the two countries. He said Japan hopes China's modernization programme will be successful and that Japan "will do its best to cooperate with China."

Bo Yibo said economic cooperation between China and Japan will be even more promising after China's economy is strengthened by the current economic readjustment program. Bo said China has adopted an open-door policy but adheres to a policy of self-reliance. Suzuki said he appreciates China's policy.

Chinese Ambassador to Japan Sung Zhiguang also attended the meeting.

KANG KEQING, DELEGATION FETED IN JAPAN

Women's Group Reception

[Text] Tokyo, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Over 300 Japanese women from all circles held a cocktail party here this evening to entertain the Chinese women delegation headed by Kang Keqing, president of the All-China Women's Federation.

Fujida Taki, president of the Japanese Pan-Pacific Southeast Asian Women Association, now aged 83, told the party she liked very much the Chinese saying, "Women can prop up half of the sky." In this spirit, she said, she would "strive for the raise of the Japanese women's social status and for a lasting peace in the world."

Kang Keqing said at the party that "whatever storms and obstacles the Chinese and Japanese people might be confronted with in the future, they would remain friendly with each other from generation to generation." She said: "China is now engaged in the construction of socialist modernization. This is the eager desire of the Chinese people, including Chinese women. For the realization of the four modernizations, we ardently hope for a peaceful and stable international environment. "We, particiularly as mothers, all wish to see our children grow healthily in a peaceful and stable environment. Friendship and unity between the people of China and Japan are the common wishes of the two peoples. They will contribute to the defence of peace in the Asian-Pacific regions and the whole world."

Meeting With Suzuki

[Text] Tokyo, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki met Kang Keqing, head of the visiting Chinese women delegation, today and said that relations between Japan and China "are better than ever before." Suzuki noted that 1982 is the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between the two countries and said Japan and China now have a wide range of exchanges in the fields of politics, economics, culture, science and technology. "I hope mutual understandings between the two countries in all fields will develop further," Suzuki said.

In observance of the 10th anniversary, Suzuki said he will visit China in September and will make "an on-the-spot investigation" of China.

Kang, president of the All-China Women's Federation, told Suzuki that China and Japan are close neighbors separated only by a sea and should continue exchange visits to learn from each other. She said friendly relations should not only remain between the two governments but also among the people. She said she appreciated Suzuki's remarks about Sino-Japanese relations and reaffirmed that Sino-Japanese relations would last for generations.

Kang presented a painting by a female Chinese artist to Suzuki. The paining was inscribed with a message saying, " friendship lasts forever," as a symbol of the friendly relations between Japan and China. Earlier, the Chinese women delegation met the president and vice-president of the Japanese House of Councillors.

AUSTRALIAN PAPER CRITICIZES 'TWO-CHINAS' POLICY

[Text] Canberra, April 14 (XINHUA) -- It would be "foolish" for the U.S. Government to pursue a two-China policy, an Australian paper says editorially today. In its editorial THE AGE says: "It would be a foolish American administration which thought it could edge towards a de facto two-China policy." "Unfortunately, this (Reagan) administration has shown some foolishness and insensitivity in foreign policy. It should take careful stock of where America and China -- not to forget the Soviet Union -- stand," the paper notes.

The editorial indicates once again the concern and dissatisfaction of newspapers in Australia with the United States' China policy. Late last month, THE AUSTRALIAN and the Sydney MORNING HERALD also criticized the American position on arms sales to Taiwan and the revival in Washington of a two-China policy.

RENMIN RIBAO: KHMER ROUGE VICTORY IN PHNUM MALAI

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wang Zhiguang [3769 1807 0342] from Phnum Malai, Democratic Kampuchea: "Ieng Sary and Others Talk About the Battle Situation in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun [7456 0077] Mountain Region: Democratic Kampuchean Forces Crush Three Offensives by Vietnamese Troops, Annihilating Over 2,000 of the Enemy"]

[Text] For a certain period, the Vietnamese invading troops in Kampuchea transferred great number of their combat troops to unleash large-scale mopup operations in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun mountain region which is under the control of the Democratic Kampuchean armed forces.

These operations immediately turned this region into a focal point of the Kampuchean battlefield. On 2 April, Ieng Sary, deputy prime minister in charge of foreign affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, together with Ni Gang [1441 0474] and Suo Pei Te [4792 0160 3676], commanders on that battlefield, granted an interview to a team of Chinese reporters who were visiting the region, and gladly answered all of their questions.

According to the Kampucheans, the mop-up operations launched by the Vietnamese troops in mid-January this year in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun mountain region were long premeditated and elaborately planned. By these operations the Vietnamese authorities not only attempted to eliminate militarily the Kampuchean anti-Vietnamese forces in this region, but also tried to present a false impression to the world, making people believe that the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas were powerless so that they could make use of this situation to put pressure on Thailand and other ASEAN countries.

In support of their argument that the Vietnamese authorities' plot had failed, the Kampucheans displayed in detail the facts marking the defeat of the Vietnamese troops in the last few mop-up operations launched since mid-January. On 14 January in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun mountain area, the Vietnamese called out about 10,000 soldiers to unleash a large-scale offensive through several routes under cover of Soviet-made tanks and artillery. Their first offensive was defeated by 26 January, with 6 tanks destroyed and nearly 1,000 soldiers wounded or killed. On 17 February, the Vietnamese army regrouped and launched another offensive. During fierce combat which lasted for half a month, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army destroyed 2 tanks and wounded or killed nearly 1,000 Vietnamese soldiers. Thus the enemy were forced to stop their operations. After the losses were replaced, the Vietnamese troops launched the third offensive on 15 March. This time, they deployed three battalions and five tanks. However, this offensive lasted for only a short 3 days and was finally repulsed on 18 March with nearly 500 soldiers wounded or killed. Moreover, on 28 March and on the morning of 2 April, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army also destroyed three more Vietnamese tanks. Thus, since the beginning of the first offensive, 14 [as published] Vietnamese tanks were destroyed and more than 2,000 soldiers were wounded or killed.

Deputy Prime Minister Ieng Sary realized that although the enemy managed to occupy certain areas after these mop-up operations, their troops were seriously hurt. In particular, the Democratic Kampuchean guerrillas managed to penetrate behind enemy lines, taking advantage of the enemy's weakly defended rear. They used flexible combat tactics to destroy the enemy's communications and transportation lines and obstruct their logistics support and troop movements, and thus strongly supported the counteroffensive which was going on at the front in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun mountain region.

As we witnessed in the Democratic Kampuchean controlled Phnum Malai mountain region, on 2 April, the Vietnamese troops continued shelling the position of the Democratic Kampuchean forces for almost the whole day beginning in the early morning, and explosions were heard one after another. However, the Vietnamese never appeared even after stalling for a long time. According to an analysis by a source here, these Vietnamese troops have fallen into dire straits; and they are going to face greater and greater difficulties following the arrival of the rainy season. Obviously they will suffer even more disastrous defeats in the days to come.

THAI PAPER REPORTS SOVIET-MADE GAS MASKS FOUND

[Text] Bangkok, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Some 20 Soviet-made gas masks and helmets have been found at the Thai village of (Ban Klong) in Watana Kakhon District, Prachin Buri Province, according to a report today in the Bangkok POST.

Thai military sources said the gas masks and helmets were dropped by the intruding Vietnamese and Heng Samrin troops when they were attacked by Thai border forces April 3.

The Vietnamese and Heng Samrin intruders battled with Thai border troops before being repulsed that day. Vietnamese gunners supporting the assault fired about 200 shells into some Thai villages, killing two people and damaging several houses.

Thai (Major General Somkid Chongpayuha), commander of the Ninth Army Division stationed at the eastern border, said Monday that the gas masks and helmets were found by Thai infantrymen who combed the area after the intruders retreated across the border. He said the gas masks were made in the Soviet Union and probably had been worn when Vietnamese troops used chemical or biological agents against the Kampuchean resistance forces near the Thai border.

Meanwhile, it was reported that the Thai Government has instructed authorities in provinces that border Laos and Kampuchea to educate the people about protecting themselves against chemical warfare. A senior official said Monday that these instructions were announced following the discovery that chemical weapons had been used by forces near Thailand's borders.

General Saiyut Koetphon, supreme commander of the Royal Thai Armed Forces, reportedly said last week that Thailand's military had collected evidence which indicated that lethal toxins had actually been used by the Vietnamese forces against Kampuchean and Laotian resistance troops.

EDUCATION OFFICIAL GREETS BURMESE NEW YEAR

BK131403 Beijing in Burmese to Burma 1130 GMT 13 Apr 82

[(Shi Zhijian), alias U (Si), deputy head of the Asian and African Languages Department of the Beijing Foreign Language Institute, greets Burmese listeners on the occasion of Burma's Thingyan Festival — recorded]

[Text] Dear beloved Burmese friends:

On the auspicious occasion of the approaching Thingyan Festival, I extend my warmest felicitations to the Burmese people and and also wish them physicial and spiritual well-being in the coming new year.

Since Burma and China are neighboring countries linked by (?common mountain ranges), both the peoples have had friendly relations since ancient times and have exchanged visits to each other's countries like true kinsmen. This is particularly true after Burma won its independence and China its liberation. Kindred bonds of friendship between the peoples of China and Burma have grown stronger at a rapid pace.

The economic and technical cooperation and cultural exchanges between our two countries have developed and expanded with each passing day for over 30 years. As these friendly relations have developed, envoys of goodwill from both the countries have exchanged visits almost without interruption. I, for one, have visited Burma -- a country beautiful and pleasant in all seasons -- five times as a member of government, cultural, education and other delegations.

Thanks to the benevolent arrangements made by the Burmese Government and all others concerned, we have had the opportunity to visit -- in addition to the capital of Rangoon -- Mandalay, Maymyo, Myingyan, Mulmein, Bassein, Kalaw, Taunggyi, Pegu and many other cities. With my very eyes I have witnessed, and still recall to this day, the grand Shwedagon Pagoda glittering with gold in Rangoon; ancient structures in the last capital of Burmese kings — Mandalay; the vast timber factories in Moulmein; the famous umb rella manufacturing in Bassein; and the beautiful flowers of Maymyo — famous as the city of flowers.

The most interesting place for us was the visit to the Inle Lake on our way to the scenic mountain city of Taunggi. This is where people travel by boats instead of (?cars), where boats are rowed by legs instead of hands and where houses are built on water instead of on land.

Everywhere we went, we were hospitably and cordially received by the officials concerned as well as the people. We were really moved by people braving the weather -- rain or sun -- who had traveled great distances just to stand by to welcome us -- a Chinese delegation. People -- both male and female -- dressed in national costumes and welcoming us with bouquets; the masses chanting "long live the friendship between China and Burma;" and Burmese audiences cheering enthusiastically to the show staged by our cultural troupe, having friendly chats with our artists backstage, their gifts to Chinese friends, and particularly their request to take home with us the great love of the Burmese people toward Chinese people -- all of these memories remain fresh in my mind.

I have also had the chance to play host more than 20 times to Burmese Government, cultural, education, agricultural, motion picture and athletic delegations when they visited China. Moreover, I have also had the opportunity to become friends with teacher U (Win Maung), who taught Burmese at the Beijing Foreign Language Institute, and with teacher U (Kan Nyunt), who helped compile a Burmese-Chinese dictionary at Beijing University. Chinese teachers and students will always remember the endeavors teacher U (Win Maung) and teacher U (Kan Nyunt), who contributed to Sino-Burmese cultural and education exchanges.

Our country has also sent scholars to Burma in order to strengthen and further develop the friendly relations between our two countries as well as to establish better understanding and friendship between our two peoples. Burmese teachers were patient and took special interest in teaching these scholars. They were ready at all times to help solve the difficulties and problems of the scholars. I wish to express my gratitude to the Burmese experts and teachers who contributed to the friendship and cultural exchanges between our two countries.

In conclusion, I wish for the perpetuation of the structures of friendship built by the leaders and peoples of both countries and for Sino-Burmese friendship to last eternally like the continuously flowing waters of the Yangtze and Irrawaddy Rivers.

Hu, Ceausescu Address Banquet

[Text] Beijing, April 13 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and the State Council gave a banquet this evening to warmly welcome Nicolae Ceausescu, general-secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, Elena Ceausescu and their party.

The brightly-lit banqueting hall was decorated with the national flags of China and Romania. President Ceausescu and Elena Ceausescu entered the hall amid gay melody in the company of Chairman Hu Yaobang, Premier Zhao Ziyang, and Vice-Chairman Li Xiannian and his wife Lin Jiamei. Hu Yaobang and Nicolae Ceausescu delivered heart-warming speeches at the banquet.

Hu Yaobang said that the relationship between the parties and countries of China and Romania has been developed in a complicated and erratic international situation. "We, the Chinese communists," he said, "will never forget it was the Romanian communists with you, Comrade Ceausescu, as their representative, who dared to uphold justice, proletarian internationalism and the fundamental norms of international relations at a time when we used our brains to ponder over things and walked on our own legs and met with blatant interference by others. This is the most precious trust and support you have given us."

Hu Yaobang praised Romania's achievements in socialist construction. He said the Romanian party and people have firmly safeguarded their state sovereignty and national dignity, opposed power politics in international affairs, defended world peace and the progress of mankind. "Your principled stand and heroism have won acclaim from peace-loving countries and people throughout the world," Hu Yaobang said. Referring to Nicolae Ceausescu's visit, Hu Yaobang said they will discuss new ways to cooperate and define the goals of economic cooperation in a spirit of mutual support and understanding. Along with the development of both nations' economies, he said, prospects for economic cooperation are very bright. The promotion of political, economic, scientific and technical, cultural and other cooperation will be a powerful impetus for the two countries' common prosperity.

Hu Yaobang said China's economy is on a road of sound development and the political situation is the best since the 1949 founding of the People's Republic. He said that during the four years since Nicolae Ceausescu's last visit to China in 1978, the Chinese people have worked hard to eliminate the grave consequences of the "Cultural Revoltuion." The nation's economy has turned for the better and living standards have improved step by step. Unity among people of all nationalities and of all walks of life in the country has been strengthened. An improved socialist democracy and legal system have yielded results. "At present," he said, "we are working hard to streamline government structure, foster socialist ethics, improve our work style and combat corruption among party and government cadres so as to ensure the progress of socialist construction." "Although we are confronted with a host of difficulties and problems, we are confident that sustained and unremitting efforts by the party and the Chinese people will transform China into a powerful, modernized socialist country," he said.

Nicolae Ceausescu said, "We treasure the friendship and cooperation between Romania and China, which developed under difficult conditions and in a complicated international environment. It resulted from the two sides' unremitting efforts through long years. Under all circumstances, the people of our countries have acted jointly as good friends do, and joined efforts for strengthening cooperation and unity."

After reviewing his previous visits to China and his meetings and talks with Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai and other Chinese leaders, Nicolae Ceausescu said, "The talks which began today provide us with an opportunity to continue our fruitful dialogue. During the talks, we will probe new possibilities for expansion of cooperation between our two parties, countries and people. We feel cooperation and coordination in the economic, scientific, technical and cultural fields and the exchange of experience in party and state affairs are entirely in the interests of the progress of our peoples and the common cause of socialism and peace," he said.

He praised the Chinese people's efforts to build a powerful socialist country with modern agriculture, industry, national defense and science, and the commitment to raise the living standards of the laboring people. He also praised China for its constructive role in international life, in solving problems facing the world, in the struggles against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, in supporting freedom and independence for people everywhere and efforts for progress and world peace.

He said that the people of Romania, rallying round the Romanian Communist Party, are working hard to build a well-rounded, advanced socialist society, advancing toward communism. "We are making great efforts to develop productive forces, increase national wealth and raise peoples' living standards. We pay particular attention to socialist democracy to ensure direct participation of workers, peasants and the people as a whole in the leadership of society and all departments. This is the basic condition for building well-rounded, advanced socialism and striving towards communism."

Nicolae Ceausescu said that internationally Romania is struggling for detente, peace and wide-ranging cooperation among nations. "Never has it been more necessary for people everywhere to close ranks and act firmly to prevent confrontation and war, to check the worsening of international situation, and restore and develop detente and peace, cooperation and respect for national independence," he said. "We set great store by cooperation with all socialist countries, the growth of our solidarity and cooperation with developing and nonaligned countries, and expansion of our relations with all countries of the world regardless of their social system in a spirit of peaceful coexistence," he said. Nicolae Ceausescu said, "We are struggling to remove what is least developed, eliminate the gap between rich and the poor nations and establish a new international economic order."

Hosts and guests toasted to the growing friendship between China and Romania. A military band played music of both countries. Present also were Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Chen Muhua, vice-premier of the State Council and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Ji Pengfei, vice-premier of the State Council; Huang Hua, vice-premier of the State Council and minister of foreign affairs; Liu Lantao and Zhou Peiyuan, vice-chairmen of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; Chen Shuliang, Chinese ambassador to Romania, and state and Beijing government officials. Romanian Ambassador to China Florea Dumitrescu and Mrs. Dumitrescu were also present.

Soon after touch-down, the distinguished guests drove to the Shenyang No 3 machine tool plant and were given a rousing welcome by workers beating drums and gongs, playing musical instruments, waving flowers or dancing at the entrance of the factory. Plant Director Liu Hongwei told the visitors that his plant, employing 4,000 workers and staff, produces more than 2,000 automatic multi-axial lathes, turret lathes and other types of machine tools a year. Its products are exported to over 50 countries. The plant, he added, has produced 150 machine tools for Romania in the past few years.

President Ceausescu and his party were shown round the shops making gears, automatic horizontal multi-axial lathes and turret lathes. The president shook hands with workers and chatted with them. At the end of the visit, President Ceausescu said, "We congratulate your success in production. It is our hope that the machine builders in both Romania and China will cooperate more closely and produce more and better machine tools to speed up socialist construction in their countries."

The workers were elated to have the Romanian president amongst them. They pledged to work hard for the development of Sino-Romanian friendship.

Romanian Foreign Policy Noted

[Text] Beijing, April 13 (XINHUA) -- The Romanian Government pursues independent external policy and is opposed to imperialist policies of strength and dictation. It also supports the struggle of middle and small nations to preserve national independence and state sovereignty, thus winning prestige in the international arena. Romania has diplomatic relations with more than 130 countries, and in the past decade its political, economic, scientific and cultural relations with these countries have been expanding.

For years, Romania has played an active role on the international arena. It has based its foreign policies on "the principles of full equality of rights, respect for national independence and sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs, mutual benefit, no threat of force in relations between nations and the entitlement of people to determine their fate." Romania has always taken a clear-cut stand against imperialist policy, opposing power politics and all forms of interference in the internal affairs of other countries. As written in the Romanian Communist Party's program, Romania is against "hegemonism and big-power chauvinism." And Romania has always stood for the dismantling of foreign military bases, withdrawal of foreign troops and the abandoning of military blocs.

Romania deems that the current international situation has deteriorated, attempts at dividing the world into spheres of influence have been intensified and instances of dominating and intervening in internal affairs of other countries have come to pass on the heels of the other.

In view of this, the National Working People's Council, the Socialist Democracy and Unity Front and the Grand National Assembly of Romania issued appeals in 1981 calling on all countries to join efforts to check the policy of creating tension.

Because it is a European country, Romania is particularly concerned about peace and stability in Europe. It has called on the United States not to deploy additional nuclear missiles in Europe and has called on the Soviet Union to remove medium-range missiles from Europe. Romania also wants European countries to participate in the Soviet-U.S. Geneva talks on missiles and nuclear weapons in Europe.

Romania has persistently supported struggles against foreign aggression. For example, it has always opposed the overthrow of the legitimate Government of Democratic Kampuchea, stressing that Vietnamese troops should withdraw from Kampuchea to allow the Kampuchean people to solve their own problems and to restore independence and sovereignty.

On the Middle East, Romania has said Israel must withdraw from occupied Arab territories taken in the 1967 war. It also has said an independent Palestine state should be set up in accordance with the principle of self-determination to protect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of every country in this region. Moreover, Romania has condemned Israel's aggression against Lebanon and its annexation of the Golan Heights.

Romania has always stressed that important world problems should be settled on the basis of equal involvement of every country, whether it is large or small, strong or weak. To Romania, this is "a fundamental condition to ensure world peace." President Nicolae Ceausescu pointed out: "We admit the role of big countries and superpowers, but problems today cannot be settled by a few countries alone." Romania takes the view that small countries, developing countries and non-aligned countries have entered the world stage and have "played a more and more important role" in international affairs.

Romania also has paid attention to developing and strengthening relations with Third World countries. In February 1976, Romania was accepted as a member of the "77 group;" in August 1976, the non-aligned summit in Colombo agreed that Romania should participate in "a guest capacity" in the activities of non-aligned countries.

Romania also has taken an active role in the struggle for setting up a new world economic order and has considered the new economic order a component part of the struggle against imperialism. Romania has held the gap between developed and developing countries has expanded. To eliminate this gap, it has said that old unequal relations must be firmly uprooted, the policies of imperialism must be ended. Every country has the right to ensure without outside intereference its own social and economic development, to guarantee proportional relationship between prices of raw materials and industrial products and to ensure that every country enjoys equal rights in sharing raw materials, energy and modern technical achievements.

LEBANON ASKS PRC AID TO PREVENT ISRAELI ATTACK

[Text] Beirut, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Lebanon has asked China to use its international influence to prevent Israel from launching an attack on Lebanon. The request was made by Kesruan Labaki, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Lebanon, during talks today with Yang Yihuai, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Chinese Embassy in Lebanon. Yang Yihuai reportedly reiterated China's policy of supporting the Lebanese Government and people for their struggle to maintain independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. He also stressed China's condemnation of Israel's aggression.

Lebanon has recently held talks with representatives of the U.N. Security Council's five permanent members in hopes of mobilizing international opinion against an Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Lebanese Government officials have disclosed that these talks have been constructure, but that "danger has not been eliminated." Israeli radio has reported that Israeli Prime Minister Begin in a speech Monday claimed that Israel should "keep restraint in response to a U.S. appeal" so that the United States will "have an opportunity" to stabilize the situation. Nonetheless, Begin said Israel will defend "the security of Israeli residents" at all times.

PEACEFUL SOLUTION TO FALKLANDS CONFLICT URGED

PY131713 Beijing in Spanish to Latin America 2300 GMT 12 Apr 82

[Unattributed article: "The Need To Resolve Conflict Through Negotiations"]

[Text] Since 2 April, when Argentina sent its troops to take over the Malvinas Islands, Argentina and the UK have been deploying troops to the South Atlantic region. The development of events is still quite serious. On 3 April, the British Government dispatched a fleet comprised of several kinds of ships which is on its way to the area, while Argentina is intensifying diplomatic negotiations and making war preparations to repel an eventual British attack.

Since the two countries are on the verge of an armed conflict of great magnitude, other countries are quite concerned over the tense situation over the Malvinas Islands. The majority of Latin American countries, among them, Uruguay, Guatemala, Bolivia, Peru, Panama, Mexico and Venezuela, have expressed their support for Argentina's right to recover the Malvinas. However, they have also expressed the need for seeking a peaceful solution to the controversy. But, the EEC, Guyana, Barbados, Portugal and New Zealand have condemned Argentina's position. Moreover, the United States has expressed its regret over the situation and noted its desire to help both parties involved to find a peaceful solution of the dispute. Therefore, it sent Secretary of State Haig to Argentina and the UK as a mediator.

China has always expressed its opposition to colonialism and supports the right of every country to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. China has expressed its concern over the situation in the Malvinas. Moreover, at the UN Security Council meeting held on 3 April, through its permanent representative, Ling Qing, China expressed its hope that Argentina and the UK would arrive at a peaceful solution of this century-long dispute through negotiations.

Moreover, several countries -- both those that support Argentina and those that are against it -- have urged both parties involved to adopt a moderate attitude so that the conflict will not spread to other sectors. They expressed their hope that Argentina and the UK will resolve the situation in a peaceful manner. It must be noted that only in this manner will they be able to find an effective solution to the problem, and one that will be in keeping with the interests of both the Argentine and British peoples.

In addition to the mediation efforts that are being carried out by the United States, Uruguay has expressed its willingness to be the site of negotiations that may be held by the two countries. Moreover, the Peruvian foreign minister has noted that if U.S. efforts fail, Peru is willing to proceed with a new mediation effort. What is more, the Peruvian Government has already made a specific proposal. It is therefore obvious that a peaceful and reasonable solution to the Argentine-UK conflict can be achieved, and that this is the desire of all peoples of the world. The Chinese Government and its people also hope that this may be achieved.

CCPCC, STATE COUNCIL DECISION ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Text] Beijing, 13 Apr (XINHUA) -- Decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field adopted on 13 April 1982:

I

In order to effectively develop a socialist material civilization and socialist culture, the CCP Central Committee has particularly tackled two major tasks since early this year: One task is to streamline the administrative structure, a component part of the reform of the system; and the other is to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. The whole party, the entire army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country warmly support these two major tasks and are very concerned about them. They earnestly hope that we will thoroughly carry out these two tasks and win victories.

Streamlining the administrative structure is proceeding well in party, government and army organizations at the central level. The State Council has decided to establish a committee for restructuring the economic system which will be in charge of the overall research and planning for the restructuring of the economic system and leading this work in a unified manner. The struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is developing step-by-step throughout the country. The central authorities issued an "urgent circular" in January, held a forum on the situation in Guangdong and Fujian and approved and transmitted a summary of the minutes of the forum in February. In March, the NPC Standing Committee adopted the "resolution for severely punishing criminals who do serious damage to the economy." In the past 3 months, serious cases of smuggling, selling smuggled articles, corruption and bribery have been initially exposed or dealt with, and some cases which remained unsolved for long periods are being solved. Criminals who have done serious damage to the economy are frightened, and unhealthy trends and evil practices are restrained to some extent. Thus, initial results have been achieved in the struggle. All party, government and army comrades, especially the leading bodies at all levels, must be determined to carry this struggle through to the end.

II

Leadership by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council has been correct since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. We have successfully shifted the emphasis of our work. Implementation of the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading has brought remarkable achievements in economic construction. Effective work is being done in carrying out the policy of opening to the outside world and revitalizing the domestic economy. The living standards of people in both town and countryside have noticeably improved. Party discipline has been strengthened and the party's work style has been improved.

However, while fully affirming these achievements, we must clearly see that there are indeed some dark aspects in our economic and political life. What is particularly shocking is the fact that over the past 2 or 3 years, serious criminal activities of smuggling, selling smuggled articles, corruption, bribery, speculation, swindling and theft of state and collective property have markedly increased, and that such activities are quite rampant in a few places and among a small number of personnel. These serious criminal activities, which cause serious economic damage, are often carried out by a few individuals working in government offices, enterprises and institutions in collusion with lawbreakers in society. Sometimes such activities are carried out under the signboard of state or collective undertakings and some are even backed by leading cadres. The problem now is far more serious than during the movement against the "three evils" in 1952.

The main reasons for the occurrence of this situation are: The Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique seriously undermined our party's work style and our people's morale, and the pernicious influence of anarchism and ultraindividualism spread by a few people is widespread; failing to stand the test in the new situation, some weak-willed people in our ranks seek ease and comfort and are blinded by lust for gain; in the past few years, while efforts have been made to carry out the two entirely correct policies of opening to the outside world and revitalizing the domestic economy, the party's ideological and political work and some necessary management measures taken by government departments have failed to keep pace with the situation and no timely, effective blows have been dealt to some criminals who have seriously damaged the economy. Serious criminal activities in the economic field have corrupted and are corrupting our cadre ranks; have damaged and are damaging the bodies and prestige of our party, government and army; have poisoned and are poisoning people's minds; have polluted and are polluting the general atmosphere of society; have undermined and are undermining economic construction; have hampered and are hampering the correct implementation of the policies of opening to the outside world and revitalizing the domestic economy and have affected and are affecting social stability. The future of our country's socialist cause will be seriously endangered if this state of affairs is allowed to continue.

The struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is a major manifestation of class struggle in the economic sphere of China's socialist society under new historical conditions. The struggle currently launched among Communist Party members and state functionaries for communist purity and against corruption and degeneration is vital for the success or failure of China's socialist modernization and for the prosperity and decline and even the life and death of our party and state. Being launched under special historical conditions, this struggle is bound to be protracted. The whole party must have a sober view of this, be highly vigilant, achieve unity in thinking and keep in step. Party members must not treat this lightly or go their own way.

Failing to see the tremendous harmfulness of serious criminal activities in the economic field, some comrades have not yet clearly understood the necessity and urgency of this struggle. They worry lest this struggle lead to a departure from our central task of economic construction, hamper the development of modernization and adversely affect the implementation of the policies of opening to the outside world and revitalizing the domestic economy. This view is entirely wrong and a major ideological obstacle to carrying out the current struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field. It must be soberly understood that our modernization drive cannot be smoothly carried out if the serious criminal activities in the economic field are allowed to spread unchecked. Only by severely punishing criminals who do serious damage to the economy while resolutely implementing various economic policies will we be able to ensure the development of our modernization drive along the socialist road. Only thus will we be able to correctly implement the policies of opening to the outside world and revitalizing the domestic economy.

III

In order to safeguard the communist purity of our party, the socialist system of our country and the interests of our people of all nationalities, we must unswervingly and unremittingly deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. On the one hand, we must take a firm attitude and deal effective blows in this struggle; and on the other hand, we must take steady and proper steps and do painstaking work. We must catch criminals who have done serious damage to the economy, not let them go, and deal with them resolutely. Cadres who have committed serious economic crimes must be investigated and punished according to law. In dealing with general and major cases, stress should be placed on handling the major cases; in dealing with long, pending cases and those that have just occurred, stress should be placed on handling the latter; in dealing with general cases in society, cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions or cases of crimes committed by them in collusion with lawbreakers in society, stress should be placed on handling the cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions. In short, it is necessary to concentrate forces to pay close attention to handling major or serious cases and to make particular efforts to consolidate party organizations, rectify cadres' work style and strengthen various management systems. To facilitate the division of work, the central and provincial authorities should jointly pay particular attention to tackling problems at the prefectural level or above, and problems at the county level should be generally tackled by the provincial authorities. However, the central authorities may also handle particularly serious problems at the county level. As for particularly serious problems below the county level, they may be handled by the provincial authorities.

The law must be enforced strictly and impartially to penalize offenders who have seriously harmed the economy, no matter who they are, what units they belong to, or whatever official posts they hold. There must be no exceptions. It is absolutely impermissible for anyone to try to shield them or plead for mercy toward them. Anyone who violates this principle will be investigated to establish his responsibility. While dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, it is also necessary to resolutely investigate and deal with other serious violations of the law and discipline. However, this struggle must not be willfully expanded among the masses or ordinary workers, peasants and other working people (exclusive of a few serious criminals) in town and countryside. Minor criminal cases of a mass character should also be dealt with and not be allowed to spread unchecked and escalate. In dealing with such cases, emphasis should be put on persuasion and the improvement of the management system. This is because such cases are not the focus of the current struggle and may be handled later so that our energies and target will not be diverted.

To smoothly and correctly deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, leading party, government and army organs and leading comrades at all levels must currently put emphasis on overcoming the attitude of turning a blind eye to the seriousness of the matter and being unconcerned, as well as the fear of the difficulty of waging this struggle, as reflected by copious misgivings, irresolution and indecisiveness. At the same time, in view of the lessons from past political movements, it is necessary to guard against and oppose various wrong work styles, such as refraining from making investigation and study, failing to grasp the actual situation, setting up goals and progress plans on the basis of subjective assumption, wantonly making someone the target of struggle and arbitrarily escalating the issue. In addition, it is necessary to guard against the schemes of a few individuals who themselves have problems but who deliberately create various false impressions to shift the blame onto others.

Policies must be correctly executed in striking at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, and a strict distinction must be made between the two types of contradictions of a different nature, and they must be handled correctly.

A clear differentiation must be made between errors in work and violation of the law and criminal offenses, between unhealthy tendencies in economic affairs and economic offenses, and between smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, embezzlement, accepting bribes, speculation and swindling on the one hand, and problems arising from imperfections in the system and methods for implementation of the economic policies of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy on the other. In judging criminal responsibility, we must draw a clear demarcation line between personal embezzlement and the act in shifting from the interests of a big group to that of a small group. Those whose economic offenses are not so severe may be given lighter, or no punishment when they have decided to repent and have returned illicit money and goods.

In dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, we are resolutely against making the work a mass movement; still less should universal screening be allowed. However, in dealing with major and key cases which are relatively complicated and which involve more people, we must completely follow the mass line; that is, we must, within a definite scope, mobilize the masses knowing about the cases to factually expose and inform against those who have committed serious crimes. Some cases may be subject to discussion by the people who are directly concerned, so that we may acquire the opinions of these people, handle cases fairly and, at the same time, educate the masses. There must be serious investigation and study, and under no circumstances should evidence be obtained through coercion and credence given to it and under no circumstances should innocent relatives or friends be implicated. Each and every case must be handled prudently on the basis of true facts and their different situations and according to party, government or army discipline and the state law.

Smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, embezzlement, accepting bribes, speculation and swindling, and stealing the state and collective property are all criminal activities. This is clearly stated in our country's constitution and law and in the party constitution and the guiding principle for inner-party life, and so there is a clear distinction between the cardinal issue of right and wrong. Regarding some major and key cases, there are certain people who allege that "it is hard to deal with them because there is no clear-cut policy." This is absolutely mistaken. As long as we act strictly according to party regulations and rules, government or army discipline, judicial procedures and the relevant provisions of the law, firmly base ourselves on facts, use the law as the criterion, insist on evidence instead of easily giving credence to the statement of the accused, make public beforehand the scope of our policies and set up strictly varying work methods, we will surely be able to strike steadily, accurately and relentlessly at all criminal elements who have seriously undermined the economy.

IV

"The resolution on severe punishment for criminals who seriously undermine the economy," adopted by the 22d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee, properly supplements and amends the relevant articles in the "criminal law" of our country according to the new situation. This provides a more powerful legal weapon to deal resolute blows at criminal activities seriously undermining our economy and to give harsh punishment to the criminal elements involved. For this reason, party, government and army organizations at all levels must make a resolute effort to ensure the implementation of this "resolution."

The NPC Standing Committee's "resolution" unequivocally stipulates: "All those who commit crimes before the present resolution comes into effect and give themselves up to the police before 1 May 1982, or those who have been arrested and have frankly admitted all their crimes and factually reported the criminal offenses of other people before that date, will be dealt with according to the stipulations of the relevant laws applicable before the present resolution comes into effect. All those who continue to conceal their criminal offenses and refuse to give themselves up to the police before 1 May 1982, or those who refuse to frankly admit all their crimes and report the criminal offenses of other people before that date, will be considered as committing continued crimes and will be dealt with according to this resolution." After its publication, the "resolution" immediately showed its power as socialist law.

Many criminals have surrendered to police, returned their spoils of their own accord, confessed their activities and exposed others. We welcome such actions. After investigation is made and facts confirmed, they must be dealt with leniently according to law. All criminal offenders must be clearly aware of the current situation and firmly grasp this opportunity to take the path of "receiving lenient treatment by frankly confessing their crimes." If they have thoughts of leaving things to chance and thus miss this opportunity, they will certainly be dealt with seriously according to the "resolution" adopted by the NPC Standing Committee. Of course, after the previously mentioned time limit, if some people truly repent, give themselves up to police, factually confess their activities, expose others and return their spoils of their own accord, then will still be dealt with rather leniently according to the relevant policy and the pertinent provisions of the law. However, the policy and law will in no way permit absolute leniency. Criminals who continue to conceal their offenses and carry out criminal activities cannot escape the severe punishment by the law and the people.

V

The policy of opening to the world and of enlivening the domestic economy and the work of striking at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere can both be resolutely implemented without conflicting. Opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy is an unswerving policy which our party has established to meet the needs of socialist modernization by proceeding from concrete conditions. This policy will by no means be changed or affected by our striking at criminals who severely undermine the economy. Of course, as everyone knows, while we are implementing this policy, some irresolute individuals will inevitably become corrupt and deteriorated, and some lawless elements are bound to take this opportunity to undermine our socialist economy. For this reason, we must take appropriate control measures, define the accurate scope of the policy, strengthen ideological and political education and resolutely and seriously wage an anticorruption and antideterioration struggle. This is the only way to correctly and healthily implement the policy of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy. If this fails, China's external economic activities and its modernization program will not produce the expected results, but will depart from the socialist track, take the vile road and even end in failure. We should not ignore this struggle, relax our efforts for it or dare not proceed with it simply because we are implementing the policy of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy. Moreover, we should not lessen our confidence in the policy which has been proven to be correct by practice because of this struggle.

In carrying out the policy of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy, it is imperative to persist in the fundamental principle of relying mainly on the planned economy and supplementing it with regulation through the market. All important economic activities must be incorporated into the state plan and unified leadership over external economic activities must be strengthened. It is imperative to strictly control foreign exchange, rigorously abide by the unified foreign exchange rate set by the state and sternly forbid private dealings in foreign exchange between units and individuals or units and those staying abroad which are not according to the state rate.

Resolute efforts should be made to correct the dangerous state of affairs in some localities where rampant foreign exchange black markets exist and remain unchecked. External economic activities should be carried out only by the state-approved units in accordance with the principles and procedures set by the state. Other units and all individuals are strictly prohibited from carrying out such activities on their own, in any name or in any way. Personnel of state organs and of enterprises and establishments are strictly prohibited from engaging in business.

In carrying out the policy of opening to the world, we have the help and support of our compatriots overseas and in Hong Kong and Macao. Many foreign industrialists and businessmen of insight have also sought economic cooperation and expanded trade with us. In this connection, we have created a new situation and achieved remarkable success.

We must persevere in implementing the open policy, absorb foreign investment, correctly introduce advanced science and technology from foreign countries and vigorously develop our economic relations with other countries. International monetary institutions and foreign industrialists and businessmen are welcome to invest in China and their legitimate rights, interests and profits will be guaranteed provided they observe the laws of China and adhere to the principle of equality and mutual benefit. We speak highly of our Overseas Chinese compatriots and our compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao who show concern for and give support to the motherland's modernization. They are also welcome to invest in the motherland and their legitimate rights, interests and profits will also be guaranteed according to state law. Our struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere has nothing to do wtih people from foreign industrial and commercial circles who engage in normal, legitimate business operations and do not conduct illegal activities. On the contrary, the purpose of the struggle is to ensure the continued development of healthy exchanges with these circles and avoid their being deceived and blackmailed by some lawbreakers of our country.

All comrades engaging in economic work with foreign countries must study hard to become professionals who are politically strong, professionally proficient and honest in performing their official duties. While engaging in economic operations with foreign countries, our comrades must not only adhere to their purity of communism and safeguard the motherland's interests and honorable patriotic stand, but also be good at developing exchanges with people from foreign industrial and commercial circles. We will continue to welcome people from foreign industrial and business circles, Overseas Chinese businessmen and industrialists and businessmen from Hong Kong and Macao who use legitimate means to do business and make economic cooperation with us. They will be accorded a courteous reception. We must take the initiative to discuss questions, hold trade talks and develop normal exchanges with them.

VI

The purpose of our struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere is to eliminate obstacles, promote the development of industrial and agricultural production and guarantee success in all work so as to quicken the pace of modernization. Party, government and military leading organs at all levels must resolutely carry out the general and specific policies laid down by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council, make proper arrangements, give guidance with the best of care, strengthen ideological and political work and prevent the occurrence of negative factors which may affect production and work. They must regard this as the major sign to examine the quality of their work.

We must persevere in implementing the policy of enlivening the domestic economy. It is necessary to maintain -- on a long-term basis -- the various forms of the economy along with the diversification of the economy on the condition that the socialist economy of public ownership is absolutely predominant. It is necessary to properly develop the collective economy and laborers' individual economy in cities and townships in accordance with the needs of the national economy so more people can be employed. It is necessary to persist in the fundamental principle of relying mainly on the planned economy and taking the whole country into account while continuing to transfer part of the power to local authorities, give enterprises greater power for making decisions, carry out and improve the various forms of the economic responsibility system among enterprises and the responsibility system in agricultural production and strengthen the effective policies and measures for the interflow of commodities between cities and the countryside and the briskness of urban and rural markets.

It is necessary to protect the legitimate management and normal business activities of the collective economy in cities and townships, laborers' individual economy, petty traders and peddlers.

To deal blows at profiteers, thieves and swindlers, it is necessary to punish criminals by strictly following what is stipulated in article 118 of the criminal law: "Those who make a regular business of smuggling, speculating and profiteering, engage in smuggling, speculating and profiteering in a big way or are ringleaders in smuggling, speculating and profiteering groups" and article 152 of the criminal law, "a habitual thief or swindler or anyone who takes away a huge amount of public of private property by stealing, swindling or plundering."

It is also necessary to investigate and punish, according to law, criminals who have not seriously undermined the economy but have evidently disrupted urban and rural market management, impaired the purchasing and marketing of state goods and materials and damaged the interests of the people in cities and the countryside. However, except for the particularly serious cases of violating the above-mentioned criminal law, problems must be gradually solved by instituting appropriate industrial and commercial management laws and regulations, improving the way goods and materials are purchased and marketed and strengthening the market management system. Regarding unhealthy trends in the relationship between enterprises run by rural communes and brigades and industrial and commercial enterprises in cities, they must be solved by restructuring the commune- and brigade-run enterprises and strengthening industrial and commercial management and management of goods and materials, except for a few major cases which constitute serious crimes. As for the grave question of plundering state goods and materials in some localities, they must be seriously dealt with. The State Council will make a special decision on this question.

Cadres who are active, work hard, are honest in performing their official duties and have achieved remarkable results while enlivening the domestic economy and developing production, must be encouraged and commended. It is necessary to help them sum up their experience, advance on the basis of their achievements, overcome their shortcomings and protect and develop their enthusiasm for work. The party Central Committee and the departments concerned under the State Council must seriously investigate and study questions already discovered while implementing the policy of enlivening the domestic economy, and after understanding the situation, work out separate, appropriate measures to solve them. Questions not accurately understood must not be handled in a hurry.

Under the new historical conditions, in the prolonged struggle for the four basic principles and against corruption and degeneration, many of our party members and cadres will have to go through repeated severe tests. We must strengthen education in communist ideology and education in the socialist legal system among our party cadres, particularly middle and high ranking cadres, as well as among their relatives, and strengthen party discipline and supervision. Our party cadres, middle and high ranking cadres in particular, must study again the related writings by Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, solemnly and resolutely preserve our party's characteristic as the vanguard of the working class and keep their integrity as Communist Party members. They must never be allowed to lower their ideological level and political awareness as party members, much less allow the corruption and degeneration of party members. All Communist Party members must honestly fulfill the solemn pledge they made when joining the party, keep firmly in mind that wholeheartedly serving the people is our party's fundamental purpose, bear in mind that our party's ultimate goal is to carry out the lofty ideals of communism and dedicate their lives to the struggle for communism.

The struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is one of the most realistic and effective measures for consolidating the party organization and rectifying the party's work style under present conditions. Party members must have a clear-cut, resolute stand. Those who remained passive and flinched, connived with criminal elements, tolerated their mistakes and even shielded them in the course of this struggle showed that their party spirit is very impure and therefore they are not qualified to be party members, much less party members with leadership responsibility. Those so-called party members and state cadres who have abandoned communist ideals and engaged in all kinds of criminal activities to undermine the cause of socialism must be given the punishment they deserve according to party, government and military discipline and state law respectively.

All cadres who are party members and have committed serious crimes must be punished by law. They must be resolutely removed from their posts and expelled from the party no matter how long they have been in the party or how high their positions. The few party and government organizations which are very impure ideologically, politically and organizationally must be rectified resolutely and in a planned way under guidance. The few party and government organizations, enterprises and institutions which are really rotten to the core must be reorganized or dismissed after an investigation by capable cadres or work teams dispatched by the party committees and governments concerned at a higher level and other departments concerned. Reorganization must also be done well. By doing so, we will bring a new look to our party and government, enhance the people's spirit and change the social mood. Our rank and file will become stronger and more vigorous and our socialist modernization will advance in bigger strides.

VIII

The struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is a major task of the party this year and will be for a long time to come. While grasping industrial and agricultural production well, party and government organizations at all levels must currently concentrate more of their energy on conducting this struggle. Principal responsible party, government and military comrades at all levels must personally organize forces, earnestly conduct investigation, study and take a firm hold of principles and policies.

Various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional party committees and governments must pay close attention to dealing with major, important cases from now on and assign capable cadres to be specifically responsible and take a firm hold of them to the end. Various localities must continue to make public, according to actual conditions, several major or important cases that have been tried and on which correct decisions were made in order to inspire and educate the broad masses of cadres and people. Various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional party committees and governments, and party, government and military departments at the central level should submit monthly reports this year to the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the Central Discipline Inspection Commission on work progress and problems.

The party's discipline inspection committees at all levels should be the strong and vigorous working bodies of the party committees in leading this struggle. Problems coming under inner-party discipline should be handled by the party's discipline inspection committees, whereas extraordinarily important problems should be referred to party committees of equal or higher level for disposal. Problems involving and violating criminal law should be dealt with by judicial organs according to law. Public security departments, procuratorates and courts concerned at all levels must closely coordinate work and fully fulfill their solemn, binding duty.

Localities and army units should mutually support and coordinate with each other. Without exception, army units stationed in various parts of the country must, under the leadership of various local party committees, strike at the serious criminal activities in the economic field.

It is necessary to carry out vivid, specific ideopolitical education among party members, cadres and the masses in close keeping with work progress by adopting various forms and applying typical cases and examples. Wide publicity should be given to the seriousness and danger of criminal activities in the economic field and to the necessity and urgency of opposing decadence and moral degeneration. Efforts should be made to publicize the overriding importance of upholding the socialist road, the love of the socialist motherland and the interests and honor of the motherland; to publicize that it is praiseworthy to be honest in performing one's official duties and in abiding by law and discipline, and shameful to be corrupt and accept bribes, to smuggle and to steal; to publicize that it is praiseworthy to oppose bad persons and evil deeds, and shameful to shield them; to publicize the party's principles, policies and measures for successfully carrying out this struggle; and to publicize and commend all good persons who valiantly and obdurately carry forward this struggle and good deeds.

Energetic efforts should be made to support and protect the activists in the struggle and to resolutely strike at evil deeds and bad persons who threatened, bribed, persecuted and even resorted to violent retaliatory actions against these comrades. It is necessary to raise the ideopolitical consciousness of party members, cadres, PLA commanders and fighters, and the people to enhance their ability to recognize and boycott the influence of decadent capitalist ideology and remnants of feudalism and other decadent ideologies, as well as their ability to resist the bourgeois lifestyle, and to encourage all party members, CYL members, state personnel, PLA commanders and fighters, the people and all noble-minded patriots to consciously wage a resolute struggle against unhealthy tendencies and criminal acts.

Leading party, government and military organs at all levels should continually study new things, seek solutions to new problems, set up and perfect rules and regulations to cope with the loopholes exposed in work and promptly improve work. Attention should be paid to solving all matters under one's scope of responsibility. For those matters which one has no right to handle, suggestions should be positively submitted to higher level authorities for instructions.

Our party is a long-tested, revolutionary contingent of powerful fighting strength armed with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and is the core of leadership of our country's socialist cause. Our party, army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country have, in the heroic protracted struggle, defeated all forms of attack by the class enemy. By uniting as one and working in concerted efforts under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee in the new historical period, the whole party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country will certainly win complete victory in the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field.

HONGQI ON CADRES BEING CLEAR-HEADED MARXISTS

HK141156 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 7, 1 Apr 82 pp 11-14

[Article by HONGQI editorial department: "Be a Clear-Headed, Staunch and Promising Marxist"]

[Text] We are going through a historical stage of great changes and development, from chaos to order and from poverty to abundance. The task of the party during this stage is to lead our 1 billion people to gradually build up the country into a modernized, highly democratic and highly civilized socialist power. Faced with this new situation and new task, party members and cadres, especially high and middle-level leading cadres, must strive to become clear-headed, staunch and promising Marxists.

In order to be staunch and promising, one must first of all be clear-headed. As a Marxist, in order to be clear-headed, the most fundamental question is to have a farsighted and comprehensive view and accurate analysis and assessment of the present situation.

In the more than 5 years since the smashing of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, our party has reestablished the Marxist ideological, political and organizational line; formulated a series of principles and policies for socialist modernization that are suited to our country's national conditions; adopted many effective measures to improve the party's work style, enforce party discipline and restore the party's fine traditions; completed the task of bringing order out of chaos in guiding ideology; and made tremendous achievements in practical work. Our party and country have thus passed through the crisis caused by the decade of disorder of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and embarked again on the road to prosperity. This is the mainstream of the present situation and is a basic fact that no one can write off. If we take a wavering attitude or have doubts in this assessment of the present situation or if we take the nonessentials of the present situation for the essentials, we will commit grave mistakes. Does this mean, however, that other than war, there are no major dangers to our party, our country and our socialist cause and that we can sit back and relax? Of course not. Dangers exist even in time of peace.

Lawbreaking criminal activities in the economic field are now much more widespread than they were during the movements against the "three antis and the five antis" 30 years ago. Corrupted by capitalist ideas, some party members and cadres and even party organizations have degenerated. Of course, this phenomenon is only relatively more outstanding in a small number of localities and among a small number of cadres. It is only a countercurrent in the constant advancement of our party and country. If the whole party unifies its understanding and action and is united in waging an unremitting struggle, this countercurrent will certainly be overcome. However, if the whole party does not pay sufficient attention to this countercurrent and does not wage a resolute struggle against it, this countercurrent will undoubtedly exert a serious corrosive influence on the ranks of our party, undermine our social values and destroy the cause of socialist modernization. This clearly shows that other than war, there are dangers that will cause the decline of our party and country. We must have a clear-headed understanding of this important question which concerns the future and destiny of the party and country.

What do these dangers stem from? It goes without saying that we must maintain vigilance against the aggression and subversion of imperialists and social imperialists. Neither must we lower our guard against the activities of the remnants of the counterrevolutionary cliques headed by Lin Biao and Jiang Qing. But we should be even more aware that fortresses are most vulnerable to attacks from within. Our party is the vanguard of the working class. As long as the body of our party is healthy, maintains the purity of communism and is always linked with the people, no enemy forces will be able to defeat it. In this sense, the main danger lies within the party itself and in the possible moral degeneration of wavering members.

As to the party itself, the key is held by its high and middle-level leaders, its principal leading cadres. In the article "The Role of the Chinese Communist Party in the National War" written in 1938, Comrade Mao Zedong said, "So far as shouldering the main responsibility of leadership is concerned, our party's fighting capacity will be much greater and our task of defeating Japanese imperialism will be more quickly accomplished if there are 100 or 200 comrades with a grasp of Marxism-Leninism which is systematic and not fragmentary, genuine and not hollow." This passage correctly and clearly states the position and role of leading cadres with a good grasp of Marxism in the revolutionary cause. In leading a population of 1 billion people toward socialist modernization, our party now needs 10,000 or 20,000 such Marxists instead of 100 or 200. If our leading cadres at high and middle levels are clear-headed Marxists, are staunch Marxists and are promising Marxists, the party will be built better and its fighting capacity will be greatly increased. Thus, our party will be able to correct all mistakes and overcome the phenomenon of corruption.

At present, we are faced with a fierce struggle between the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and the resistance of socialist ideas to this influence. Viewed from what has already been exposed, a relatively serious tendency of bourgeois liberalization has emerged in many areas of China's social life. Decadent capitalist ideas and ways of life have exerted a rather serious corrosive influence on the ranks of the Communist Party and are rather seriously poisoning the general mood of society. Indeed, many party members and cadres have been roped in within a very short period. Some old cadres who were not conquered by the enemy's force of arms or the suppression of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques have been conquered by the bourgeois "sugar-coated bullets" in the past few years and have become captives of the bourgeoisie. That capitalist ideas have intruded into the militant Communist Party is a fact that brooks no neglect. Facts have clearly shown that bourgeois liberalization is not just a question of the cultural and ideological fronts but is a common question facing all fronts. On the economic front, phenomena such as smuggling, selling contraband, offering and accepting bribes, corruption, theft, speculation, swindling and appropriating large quantities of state property are not isolated or accidental occurrences.

They are outstanding expressions of bourgeois liberalization under new historical conditions, that is, at a time when an open-door policy and a policy to enliven the domestic economy are being implemented. They are also an important manifestation of class struggle under socialist conditions. These facts have proved that under the new historical conditions, if we do not strengthen ideological and political work, do not establish and perfect corresponding management systems, do not adopt effective management measures and do not wage a struggle to resist the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas, we will not be able to smoothly carry out modernization. In the face of the serious corrosive influence of decadent capitalist ideas and ways of life, we must have the understanding that the present struggle against the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and bourgeois liberalization, including the struggle to hit out at crimes in the economic field, is a protracted struggle that concerns the success or failure of China's socialist modernization and the prosperity or decline of the Communist Party and the country. The whole party must attach great importance to this struggle.

However, we must not forget historical experiences and lessons. Although the question of corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and bourgeois liberalization is rather outstanding at present, it is not after all the principal contradiction in our country. The principal contradiction in China is the contradiction between the people's growing material and cultural needs and the backward social production. This contradiction must be resolved by means of socialist modernization. The political line formulated at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee is precisely to unite the people of all nationalities throughout the country to gradually build our country into a modernized, highly democratic and highly civilized socialist power. This is a Marxist line. It reflects the common desire and demand of the people of all nationalities throughout the country and represents the greatest interests of the masses of people. We must resolutely implement this line. The reason why we wage the struggle against the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and bourgeois liberalization is also precisely to promote a fundamental change for the better of the party's work style, the people's practices and social order, to eliminate all interferences and obstacles in implementing the party's political line and to ensure smooth progress in our efforts to achieve socialist modernization. Therefore, if we want to be staunch Marxists, we must first firmly adhere to the line. We must not obscure the orientation of our advancement, must not shift the focus of our work and must not repeat the mistake of "taking class struggle as the key link." For over 20 years after the socialist transformation of the private ownership of the means of production had basically been completed, we did not shift the focus of our work to socialst construction. We thus regarded class struggle as the principal contradiction and committed the mistake of magnifying class struggle, causing the country and the people to suffer a lot. We should not do such foolish things again. In his report "The Present Situation and Tasks" given on 16 Janaury 1980, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said, "Starting from the new year of the first year of the 1980's, we must not waste even one single day. We must concentrate all our attention on building the four modernizations." "Unless a large-scale war breaks out, we must be determined to persist on doing this. Everything should center round it and it should not be interfered in any way. Even if a large-scale war breaks out, we must continue to do it or begin our efforts again after the war is over. Our whole party and all the people must set this as the high aim and lofty aspiration. We must grasp it firmly, be more 'stubborn' and not be irresolute." We must always bear these words in mind.

Some people attribute the emergence of bourgeois corruption and bourgeois liberalization to the party's open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic economy. This is totally wrong. We must make it explicit that such policies are firm and unshakable and introduced in accordance with the needs of our socialist modernization and with the international situation. It is of great strategic significance to implement such policies because our country is a big country which has a vast population, a poor foundation to start with and a relatively backward economy.

In order to change this backward situation, we must make breakthroughs and learn the skills to manage the domestic economy and develop economic relations with foreign countries. We must devise a path of socialist construction which suits actual Chinese conditions and must never again take the old road which adopted a closed-door policy toward foreign nations and rigid management of the domestic economy. These correct policies of an open-door policy and policy to enliven the domestic policy will still be enforced even after our economy is developed. We should realize that there are numerous factors accounting for notable criminal activities in the economic field in some areas. For instance, there are still remnants of the ancient society and ideological influences of the exploiting class in our country; the pernicious influence of anarchism and extreme individualism which had been instigated by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the 10 years of disorder is far from being eliminated; while implementing the open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic economy, we have not been able to keep pace with the ideological and political work and with some necessary systems and measures of management, with the result that the influence of decadent capitalist ideas and the bourgeois way of life has multiplied, and so on. These are very important reasons. How can we attribute the rampancy of illegal and criminal activities in the economic field to the implementation of the open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic economy? Our party has drawn a clear demarcation line regarding these policies. The criminal activities in the economic field have nothing to do with these policies. In view of our party's principles, all these evil deeds have always been considered as illegal and are impermissible under party discipline and state law. All practices under the pretexts of being "special and flexible" which distort such policies and which are divorced from the socialist orientation, divorced from the communist stand and are contrary to party spirit and the party's principles, can only sabotage such policies. What we should do now is to sum up past experiences, carry forward the achievements obtained, overcome shortcomings and correctly and healthily implement the policies which have been formulated. We absolutely should not change the policies. Regarding this question, we must not waver in the least extent.

The revolutionary history of our country has shown that both the question of upholding the proletarian stand and maintaining the party's communist purity and the question of taking precautions against and opposing class capitulationism exist whenever we make contact with the bourgeoisie. Chen Duxiu's class capitulationism was manifested during the period of the great revolution. Wang Ming's class capitulationism was manifested in the early years of the war of resistance against Japan. In the early years since the founding of the country, it was perfectly correct and extremely necessary for us to cooperate with the national bourgeoisie. It also proved to be a complete success. However, some of our party members and cadres were hit by the "sugar-coated bullets" of the bourgeoisie despite Comrade Mao Zedong's warnings released on the eve of the liberation to the whole party against the attack of the bourgeoisie's "sugar-coated bullets." We are in a poorer situation at present compared to the situation then. Such circumstances are unavoidable in the new historical era. We must not lose our confidence in the party's policies because of the launching of the anticorruption struggle; similarly, we must not neglect, or slacken our efforts or be afraid to wholeheartedly launch the anticorruption struggle because we want to uphold and implement the party's policies. All our party members and cadres, and particularly the high- and middle-level party cadres, must have a firm proletarian stand, bear in mind the party's fundamental aim of wholeheartedly serving the people, bear in mind the party's ultimate goal of realizing the communist ideals, bear in mind the party members' vocation of maintaining the party's communist purity, and must always guide our actions with the communist ideological system during this struggle.

The present period we are in is a historical period of great significance, and also one in which there is plenty of scope for our talents. We should not be satisfied in being mediocre, decrepit and muddleheaded, but try our best to become useful and promising people.

At present, the most important thing for us to do is to combine political steadfastness with scientific foresight, proceed from the higher plane of strategic ideology, shore ourselves up, be bold and resolute in our work, and try our best to create in the next few years a really new situation in various fields of our construction, including the development of our economic relations with foreign countries. In order to fulfill these targets, we must uphold the four basic principles, correctly carry out the line, guiding principles and policies of the party, go deep into the reality of life, strengthen investigations and studies, repeatedly study the new situations and solve new problems. We must master two skills: the skill of managing construction at home and that of developing our economic relations with foreign countries. We must carry out our work in two ways: developing the material civilization and improving the spiritual civilization, while correctly understanding and handling the relationship between the two civilizations. We must carry out reform and readjustment to eliminate the irrationality and shortcomings existing in the production relations and in the superstructure, resolutely carry out the streamlining of administrative organs and reform the cadre system with revolutionary spirit. We must regard opposition to the bourgeois liberalization tendency as an important part of party building and of consolidating political power for a certain period in the future, and attach importance to it. On the other hand, we must unswervingly carry on the struggle to seriously crack down on illegal and criminal activities in the economic field. We must fix our attention on and seriously and speedily handle those severely illegal and criminal activities, such as smuggling and selling contraband, bribery, corruption and theft, speculation and swindling, appropriating state and collective properties, and so on. We must punish those cadres who engage in serious crimes, especially those who are occupying important posts, and should never hesitate in taking actions against them, and not appease or shield them. With this struggle, we not only can resolutely stop unhealthy tendencies in the economic field, but also give the vast number of party members and cadres a profound Marxist education on party character, party work style and party discipline.

If we recall our party's militant course over the last 60-odd years, we can see that our proletarian revolutionaries of the old generation headed by Comrade Mao Zedong and others never failed to put forth to the whole party the task of strengthening studies whenever the revolution arrived at a turning point. Now, as the vast number of party members and cadres are to make themselves clear-headed, staunch and promising Marxists, they have to strengthen their studies in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Some articles written by Comrade Mao Zedong during the period of the anti-Japanese war, such as "The Situation and Tasks in the Anti-Japanese War After the Fall of Shanghai and Taiyuan," "Introducing the Communist," "Preface and Postscript to Rural Surveys," and so on are especially worth being reviewed. Although all of them were aimed at the concrete circumstances of the time, and our situation today is quite different from the historical conditions then, the basic standpoint, points of view and methods embodied in these articles remain very educational to us. All of our party members and party cadres, in particular leading cadres at middle and high levels, have to study anew and solidly master Comrade Mao Zedong's theory and tactics of the dual nature of the united front which promoted unification along with struggle. Under all circumstances we must resolutely safeguard our purity as communists, and we are not allowed to lower our ideological understanding and political consciousness as communists. All communists should never be corroded by the bourgeoisie. Under the new historical conditions, we must creatively apply this magnificent thought to developing our economic relations with foreign countries, to carrying out the policy of enlivening the domestic economy and all fields of social life, so as to overcome the tendency of bourgeois liberalization, to resolutely resist and oppose the corrosion of capitalist ideas. Thus, we will be able to stand invincibly and be unremitting in our advance toward winning new victories.

CCP COMMISSION ON EDUCATING CADRES' CHILDREN

[Text] Beijing, 13 Apr (XINHUA) -- The CCP Central Committee's Discipline Inspection Commission on 10 April issued a notice in connection with a gang rape case involving He Deming and other criminals in Chengdu municipality. The notice said: Crimes committed by children of leading cadres are rare but have strong repercussions and, if not duly handled, can directly undermine the party's prestige and its relations with the masses. The whole party must be on guard against this problem which merits our full attention.

Entitled "Paying Keen Attention to Children's Education Is the Responsibility of Revolutionary Cadres," the notice said: In order to call the whole party's attention to this problem, the CCP Central Committee's Discipline Inspection Commission demands that the following must be observed:

1. Leading cadres at various levels must regard the education of their own children as an unshirkable duty. They must not take a laissez-faire, or casual attitude toward children's education, which is in essence an important aspect of the struggle against corrosive capitalist ideology. Neglecting or slackening efforts in this work shows one's irresponsible attitude toward the party's undertaking and is an indication of one's impure party spirit.

2. Children of cadres, especially those who have already started to work, assume responsibility for crimes they commit. If leading party cadres at various levels find that their children have violated law and discipline, they must ask the department in charge to handle the case impartially. Relatives and parents have the responsibility to help the department in charge handle the case and should by no means provide shelter for criminals or cover up crimes.

3. Party organizations of all political and legal organs at various levels must educate their staff members to uphold principles and dispel their worries in handling cases involving violation of law and discipline by children of cadres. No matter who their parents are, they must be punished in accordance with law as long as their crimes are proved with evidence.

4. It is necessary to include the question of educating children at meetings on party life. Before the end of this year, leading cadres at various levels must examine the education of their own children at meetings on party life. Those who have erred should offer self-criticism. Parents who have successfully educated their children to become advanced elements should be commended.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES ISSUE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

[Article by Hao Ru [3185 1172]: "Human Rights -- Past and Present"]

[Text] From its termination to its formation as a theoretical advocation, from a kind of theory to being affirmed as a principle of domestic law of certain countries, from a principle of domestic law to expanding into economic, social and cultural rights and into the rights of self-determination and development of the people of colonies and dependent countries, human rights have thus been constantly injected with new contents and may be said to be developing continuously and unabated.

At the beginning, because the people were unable to endure the barbaric, cruel, stupid and backward domination of monarchical power and theocracy of the Middle Ages, human rights emerged as the result of long fermentation. Moreover, when they first appeared, they possessed progressive and revolutionary significance and function. The American "Declaration of Independence" of 1776, called by Marx the "first declaration of human rights," and the French "declaration of human rights and citizens' rights" 13 years later affirmed them in the form of law and "sovereignty belonging to the people" replaced "monarchy and theocracy."

The supremacy of God collapsed as a result, human value was respected and the dignity of the people was established (naturally, the people referred to here were the bourgeoisie. As for the proletariat and the broad masses of working people of that time, they only changed from the old form of slavery into a new form of slavery). On the road of social progress and mankind's search for emancipation, this of course was praiseworthy.

The human rights clamored for by the bourgeoisie and the slogan of democracy, liberty, equality and fraternity, which emerged with them, made use of the forces of the workers and peasants as well as other laborers to gradually overthrow the old feudalist world and created a new capitalist world on earth, and "used the form of human rights to recognize and approve modern bourgeois society, or an industrialized and generally competitive society motivated by unrestrained pursuit of private interests, an anarchic society filled with self-alienating, natural, conscious individuality." ("Completed Works of Marx and Engels," vol 2, p 156) Human rights at that time were based on bourgeois private ownership with bourgeous rights as their contents and within the framework of the domestic laws of capitalist countries.

In the first half of the present century, two World Wars occurred in a row within an interval of less than a quarter century causing casualties in the tens of millions. During World War II, the inhuman bloody massacre of noncombatants, including old people, women and children, by the German, Italian and Japanese fascists revealed to people that aggressive wars are the most serious infringement upon human rights. Therefore, after the war, the "Charter of the United Nations" approved in 1945 declared: "Determination to preserve posterity from experiencing the unspeakable tragedy of war which our generation has twice been through and to reiterate faith in fundamental human rights, human dignity and value, equality among men and women and equality among nations big and small." In the following year, the United Nations established the Commission of Human Rights. The "Universal Declaration of Human Rights" adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1948 further enriched and amplified the content of such fundamental points of traditional human rights as equality, freedom, safety and property and standardarized them. From then on, human rights have exceeded the limits of domestic law and become a principle of international law. However, the interpretation of human rights is still dominated by the European standard.

As more and more countries have cast off the yoke of colonial rule, gained their independence and take part in international political activities, the Third World nations have lashed out at the European standard of interpretation of human rights. In 1966, the UN General Assembly adopted the "International Conventions on Civil Rights and Political Rights" and the "International Conventions on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights." In 1977, the UN General Assembly passed a resolution on the new concepts of human rights proposed by the Third World nations. In 1979, the UN Human Rights Commission also adopted a resolution which stressed that development rights were a kind of basic human rights. Therefore, in the economic field, the sacred and inviolable right of private property has been turned into the right of the people of various countries, the Third World nations in particular, for freely handling their natural wealth and resources and developing their own economies. In the political field, the basic civil rights or human rights of the bourgeoisie have developed into the collective rights to self-determination and to safeguarding national independence and opposing foreign invasion and oppression of the people of former colonies and dependencies.

The above development of the contents of human rights is in accord with international law. It is beneficial to the efforts of the people of the Third World nations to turn human rights on paper into real human rights. When a country has been turned into a colony and dependency or invaded, occupied and controlled by imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism or economically plundered and exploited and politically oppressed and enslaved although it has gained its independence, the people of this country will have no say about their own individual human rights.

The catastrophe brought by the war criminals of the two world wars to the people of their own countries and the export of refugees by the Vietnamese authorities have shown that those countries which covet after other countries' territory and natural resources not only trample on and violate the human rights of other countries, but also disregard the human rights of their own people. Just as Engels profoundly pointed out: "When a nation is oppressing other nations, it cannot become a free nation." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 1, p 288)

From the above analysis, we realize that in international political life, human rights have already produced fairly broad concepts of rights whose influence, appeal and actual role cannot be ignored. Therefore, various countries and various kinds of people are utilizing and viewing them from their own angles. Some of them have made human rights their tools for deceiving public opinion and protecting their own private interests. Of course, most countries and people are trying to solve some practical and pressing problems by utilizing human rights. While firmly flaunting the slogan of human rights to attack the United States, the Soviet Union is invading other countries, interfering in their internal affairs and speaking out in defense of the Vietnamese authorities' practice of forcing a mass exodus of its people. While claiming that human rights are the soul of its foreign policy and a basis for deciding its relations with other countries, accusing the Soviet Union of violating the human rights of the East European countries and showing special concern for the human rights of the "dissidents" in the Soviet Union, the United States lacks a positive attitude toward settlement of the practical problems of human rights and supports the racism of South Africa and the expansionism of Israel. Human rights have become their weapon for attacking each other and contending for hegemonism. While taking human rights as their weapon for opposing the Soviet hegemonism, some capitalist countries in the West oppose the demands of the people of the Third World nations for their rights to self-determination and to develop by using their tradition and standard for human rights.

The Third World nations are resolute in safeguarding their people's rights to self-determination and to their own state sovereignty. This is a prerequisite for safeguarding human rights of the individual. They stress development rights and guarantee the civil economic, social and cultural rights. This is a reliable foundation for safeguarding human rights for the individual. Without national independence, economic and cultural development, by just merely relying on propaganda and the mercy of other countries, a country will never establish human rights. It is precisely these facts that prove the ideas and demands of the Third World nations are correct and justified; thus, they have gained more and more support from other nations.

Ours is a socialist country and a developing one at that. We have been advocating respect for and protection of human rights for a long time and the constitution of our country has stipulated in explicit terms the basic civil rights which are guaranteed by means of law and the state system. Our country's economic, political and legal systems such as the public ownership of the means of production, the system of distribution according to work, the people's congress system, the socialist democratic system and the legal system have provided new forms, contents and methods to guarantee human rights in our country. While developing along the socialist path, in spite of severe setbacks, our country is able to correct the mistakes through our own efforts and we have derived a new path for economic development and other undertakings. People throughout the country are now united under the leadership of the party to strive for the realization of the four modernizations. In the course of building a powerful, modern socialist country which is both highly civilized and democratic, the substantiated, and they will be further guaranteed by abundant materials. Regarding international affairs, since the restoration of China's legitimate seat in the United Nations in 1971, Chinese representatives have made many speeches at the UN General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other relevant meetings to sternly state the consistent and firm stand of China regarding state sovereignty, nations' rights to self-determination, development rights, basic human rights and other relevant human rights issues. We will continue to oppose imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism; we work to safeguard world peace, support the righteous struggle of people all over the world; and we will make due contributions to promoting the progressive undertakings of mankind.

WENYI BAO URGES EMPHASIS ON INDUSTRIAL THEMES

[Text] Beijing, April 14 (XINHUA) -- The national literary gazette WENYI BAO this month calls for greater literary attention to industrial themes, devoting 15 pages to the discussion. The gazette, which last year called for wider attention to rural life, features in its April issue summaries of 14 speeches from a diccussion organized in February by the journal and the PEOPLE'S LITERATURE magazine. This issue also carries a paper analyzing the literary characters of Jiang Zilong, who is a Tianjin ex-worker-turned-writer, and an article by Shi Quan calling for greater insight and innovation in literature dealing with industrial themes.

Shi Quan's article says since Jiang Zilong published in 1979 his "Plant Director Qiao Takes Office," a number of short stories, novelettes and full-length novels on the same theme have appeared with varying success. He says the new works have departed from the traditional theme of conflict over a particular factory's production plan, or disagreement between a party secretary and a conservative plant manager, with an engineer as the usual target of criticism.

Newer works, the article says, have attempted to explore the problems and conflicts that arise in efforts to modernize, and they present images of resourceful, competent and self-sacrificing pathbreakers. On the whole, however, the article says, industrial subjects have not been presented with a full understanding of the immense changes currently taking place on the industrial scene. The focus should be on people and not so much on simple production.

The writers participating in the February discussion offered suggestions for new approaches to the subject. One Shanxi Province writer suggested portrayal of the impact of modern large-scale production on the mentality of small producers. A young writer from Beijing suggested exploration of the moods and lives of young workers who have matured in an environment vastly different from that of the 1950s. Chen Jiangong and Guo Derun, both from Beijing, said writers should not use characters as mouthpieces for their own ideas of reform, but should familarize themselves with current developments, presenting characters that grow through the conflict between new and old.

JIANGXI DEFENSE INDUSTRIES IMPROVE PRODUCTS

OW050325 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] Leading comrades of the provincial national defense industries office have achieved good results in grasping production by giving specific work guidance at the grassroots level. As a result, the total industrial output value plan was fulfilled by 121.4 percent during the first quarter of this year, 20 percent of the annual plan. This figure also represented an increase of 116 percent over the same period last year. The following specifically helped to bring about these results:

1. They earnestly strengthened weak links in key enterprises. For example, the people's machine building plant, a key enterprise in the provincial-run national defense industries, whose output value and profits constituted one-sixth of the entire network, had been having trouble raising economic results because its products failed to meet peak quality standards. To cope with the situation, leading comrades of the provincial national defense industries office visited the plant twice and analyzed the problem, together with other leading comrades at the plant. They decided, after discussion, to tighten overall quality control and rebuild and expand the production line for new products step by step. As a result, there has been noticeable improvement in economic results.

2. They guided production closely. The (Fenyou) brand bicycle is an important product of the provincial-run national defense industries, turned out by combined army and civilian effort. In order to quickly expand production and improve quality of this product, the principal leading comrades of the provincial national defense industries office visited the (Liansheng) bicycle factory early this year and called meetings to help solve specific problems on the spot.

As a result, the production of bicycles was overfulfilled during the first quarter.

3. They helped those enterprises experiencing difficulties. The Jiangxi No 2 machine tool plant may incur serious losses this year, as the gas tank, a major product, does not sell well on the domestic market. The plant has been under pressure and the workers are grumbling. To cope with this situation, the principal leading comrades of the provincial national defense industries office led management personnel to chat with leading comrades at the plant, called a number of meetings and carried out ideological work. Today, cadres and workers of this plant are working in a coordinated manner to expand production of other products in an effort to reduce losses to a minimum.

DAZHONG RIBAO ON PURSUIT OF FOREIGN THINGS

HK121003 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Li Kuilin [2621 1145 2651]: "Thoughts on Premier Zhou Wore a Chinese-Made Watch"]

[Text] Throughout his life our beloved Premier Zhou Enlai wore a Chinese-made watch. Though this may seem a trivial matter, it reflected his true heart and sense of pride in our nation, and it has profound significance in our actual life.

In the past, when China was backward, our markets were flooded with foreign goods. Looking at the present situation, we can see that more and more Chinese-made products are entering the markets daily. Though some of our products are still below the advanced world level, all those who are resolved to build our motherland into a land of prosperity are very proud and elated with the goods labeled "made in China." Preference for and use of Chinese-made goods by the broad masses of people is not only convenient, but is even more conducive to the growth of our own industry, strengthening the socialist economic force, increasing funds for our modernization drive and reducing outlay of foreign exchange. However, a small number of people, especially some young people, lack such an attitude. They blindly worship everything foreign and run after Western things. They think goods are only "prestigious and appealing" if they are foreign-made. Of course, we do not advocate shunning of all foreign-made goods, but should not be slavish worshipers of foreign things. What is meant by this is that we should be discriminating and critical in purchasing and using foreign-made goods in accordance with the principle of "making foreign things serve China." We do not mean that our life should follow one pattern, but we should consider all things favorable to the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization. Our people's standard of living is improving with each passing day as our country's economy continues to rapidly develop. Our life should be varied and colorful. We should not seek uniformity in headgear and footwear or apparel. But we must understand that everything has its own limits. A correct theory may become absurd if it goes one step too far. Should there be differences in our daily life? If we go against the norms of our country and public feeling by abandoning our own styles and traditions which are products of an ancient, civilized country, and if we run after everything foreign, we will divorce ourselves from the majority of the masses. Even more, we will be gradually contaminated by the bourgeois ideology and become captives of the bourgeoise. From the recently uncovered cases of smuggling and peddling contraband and of violations of discipline and law, we can see that some of these criminals were worshipers of foreign things, who at first only bought some foreign goods from smugglers and later themselves engaged in the peddling of contraband. It is thus clear that our attitude toward Chinese goods and foreign goods and our taste in clothing are by no means trivial matters in daily life, but a problem which relates to one's moral character. So we should know how to distinguish between right and wrong and between what is beautiful and what is ugly. We should never drift with the tide and adopt an indifferent attitude.

By recalling the past and comparing it with the present, we can see that there are three distinct attitudes toward foreign goods: First, resolutely boycott them by closing the country to international intercourse; second, worship blindly and promote the sale of foreign goods by advertising; and third, assimilate essential goods and use them as references in striving to advance.

We do not accept the first two attitudes. The third is the one we must adopt. We say that it is important to spread the idea of using Chinese-made goods because it has an important bearing on the revolution and construction of the country. At the time when they were struggling against the aggression and plunder of Japanese imperialism, the Chinese people launched the campaign of "boycotting Japanese goods" in order to develop our country's national industry and commerce. This was a patriotic act. In other countries of the world, many nationalists have also implemented similar measures. For instance, Gandhi, leader of the Indian national independence movement, greatly advocated using Indian goods and took the initiative of wearing native homespun clothing as he led the people in fighting for independence. No doubt, things have changed today. In the wake of international trade development, it is entirely necessary for the economically underdeveloped countries to properly import some advanced technology, equipment and products, but this does not mean that they should import, with no restrictions, those products they themselves can manufacture, and let foreign goods come flooding in to disrupt their own markets. In the meantime, as for each and every one of us, we should not think that foreign goods are all so good that we overstate their prominence and even feel proud of possessing and using foreign goods. In this respect, we should also do our best to learn from Premier Zhou.

ZHEJIANG MEETING ON PARTY-NONPARTY RELATIONSHIP

OW300458 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1040 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] A provincial conference on united front work concluded on 29 March. The conference emphatically pointed out: The united front will still be a magic weapon of our party and full of vitality for a fairly long time to come. The realization of the four modernizations and the reunification of the motherland would be out of the question without full cooperation between and concerted efforts by nonparty comrades and us.

The conference relayed and studied the documents of a recent national united front work conference as well as the important speeches by leading comrades of the central authorities. In light of Zhejiang's actual conditions, those present discussed concrete measures to effectively implement these documents and important speeches. Comrades at the conference unanimously voiced their determination to perform united front work successfully in the province.

All the delegates attending the conference met on 26 March with Li Fengping, secretary of the provincial party committee and governor of the province; Chen Zuolin, secretary of the provincial party committee and vice governor of the province; Wang Fang and Xue Jue, deputy secretaries of the provincial party committee; and Mao Qihua, chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee. At the meetings, Comrade Wang Fang made a report on behalf of the provincial party committee, and Comrade Li Fengping delivered an important speech.

After reviewing the historical status and important role of united front work in the Chinese revolution, Comrade Li Fengping said: The concept of the united front as one of the three magic weapons [the other two are armed struggle and party building] has dimmed in the minds of some comrades. Others have even forgotten this concept, holding that the united front is not essential. This view should be changed. Leading comrades of party committees and governments at various levels should clearly understand the importance of united front work. Arrangements should be made for democratic personages to participate in the work of governments, people's congresses and CPPCC organizations at various levels.

In his speech, Comrade Wang Fang said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the situation of the province's united front has developed very fast. The situation has radically changed compared with that of 5 years ago. However, cadres at various levels, especially some leading cadres, have not yet understood the importance of the united front in the new period.

Some comrades even have some confused ideas about the united front. In short, this is because the leftist influence has not yet been complete eliminated. The united front work cannot be done well without first eliminating the leftist influence.

Comrade Wang Fang said: The united front is still full of vitality and a magic weapon of our party in the historical period in which we are concentrating our efforts to undertake the four modernizations. If we should fail to attach importance to the united front and work by ourselves without the alliance of party and nonparty comrades. our cause would inevitably meet with great difficulties or even serious setbacks. Therefore, we must conscientiously implement the party's policies on the united front, strengthen our unity with nonparty personages, forge a truly close, openhearted relationship with them and be willing to share honor and disgrace with them. We must work together with them to build a socialist material and spiritual civilization and to accomplish the great cause of reunifying the motherland.

At the conference, Yu Jiyi, director of the united front work department of the provincial party committee, made a report on united front work over the past 3 years and on views concerning the future tasks in this regard. Nearly 300 persons attended the conference, including responsible persons of the provincial party committee; responsible persons of various departments, commissions, offices and bureaus of the provincial people's government; responsible persons of various prefectural, municipal and county party committees; responsible persons of various university, college, school and scientific research unit party committees; responsible persons of the party committees of factories and mines directly under the provincial authority; and leading cadres of united front work departments at various levels.

NANFANG RIBAO ON BANNING 'SPIRITUAL OPIUM'

HK130325 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Mar 82 p 2

["Nanfang Forum" article by Zhao Zhen [6392 4176]: "People Are Not Allowed To Make a Profit by Peddling 'Spiritual Opium'"]

[Text] Opium is a narcotic drug. People who smoke it regularly can become addicted to it. Opium addiction can ruin people's health and make them listless. Over 100 years ago, the British imperialists, with the aim of plundering China's wealth and making staggering profits, smuggled vast amounts of opium into China, and thus brought catastrophe on the Chinese people. In order to ban opium, the Chinese people carried out brave and unyielding struggles. It was precisely because the poison of opium is terrible that people later likened all those decadent capitalist ideologies which severely poison people's thinking to "spiritual opium." Marx also called religions which anesthetize the people's thinking "the opium of the people."

Those recording tapes, video tapes, books and pictures with reactionary and pornographic content which have been spread in quite a few places in our province in recent years can also be called "spiritual opium." This is because these reactionary and poronographic things can deeply and widely poison the masses, especially young people and teenagers, while tremendously polluting social customs. Some relatively seriously poisoned people are fascinated by these decadent things, just like being addicted to opium. In minor cases, people are demoralized, in no mood for working or studying, and try every means to seek a bourgeois way of life. In serious cases, people even commit crimes. Having watched a showing of pornographic video tapes, some young people began to imitate the rogues in the show, and took liberties with women in the street as soon as they left the projection room. Social order and social customs deteriorate wherever video tapes with violent and obscene contents are more widely shown. Therefore, we should never underestimate the perniciousness of this "spiritual opium" to our society. A tremendous disaster will result if we just take a laissez-faire attitude toward these activities and let them spread everywhere.

Like opium in the olden times, this "spiritual opium" has been illegally imported from outside. Why can these things spread unchecked in many places? One of the important reasons for this is that some people, even the leading people of certain units and departments, who consider money as everything, have openly played, reproduced and sold these things. Video tape projection rooms have been opened in some places under "government ownership," "private ownership" or "joint ownership." These projection rooms publicly put up posters, wantonly play video tapes with violent and obscene contents, force up ticket prices and thus make windfall profits. Some people clearly understand the serious perniciousness of these tapes to the masses, but, in order to make money, they disregard party discipline and state law, ignore people's denunciations and continue committing crimes and poisoning the masses. They have been so blinded by lust for gain that they dare to engage in criminal activities. Their activities are absolutely intolerable and demand serious punishment.

From this, we can reflect on another phenomenon. In the last few years, with the corrision of the capitalist ideology that "money is everything," some people have wrongly regarded the cultural activities in socialist society as a kind of commodity. They are only interested in profits and disregard the social effects of their practices. In order to make money, they would rather yield to some people's base tasts and try their best to satisfy those people's improper demands. For example, some decadent music is played or sung in some tea houses; some signers imitate those female singers in bars in Hong Kong and Macao, giving unbridled and base performances. The main purpose of our socialist cultural cause, which is a kind of spiritual production, is to upgrade the people's realm of thought and satisfy their needs for a healthy spiritual life.

Being different from commercial businesses, the cultural cause must not be solely profit-oriented, but must be guided with a view to its influence on social customs. All our cultural recreational establishments should redress their service orientation, and take the building of socialist spiritual civilization as their most important task.

HENAN URGES PUBLICIZING RURAL MEETING 'MINUTES'

HK130147 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "Publicize With Great Fanfare the Minutes of the National Rural Work Conference"]

[Excerpts] The minutes of the national rural work conference are another programmatic document of the party for rural work, following the Central Committee's decision on a number of questions regarding speeding up agricultural development. Vigorously publicizing the spirit of the minutes will have inestimably far-reaching influence on stabilizing and perfecting the production responsibility systems, further promoting the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas and developing the excellent situation. Following initial publicity of the minutes in the previous period, the rural grassroots cadres and peasant masses are in high spirits and have mobilized an upsurge of spring farming. However, certain places lack correct understanding of the spirit of the minutes, mistakenly holding that they will "lead to deviations." Hence, certain ideological waverings have appeared. It is therefore extremely important to publicize the minutes in full with great fanfare, especially the policy of upholding one thing, keeping two things unchanged and taking simultaneous account of three things.

The recent forum convened by the provincial CCP committee propaganda department made arrangements for rural propaganda work and studied and exchanged many new experiences in strengthening ideological work in the rural areas. The party organizations and propaganda departments at all levels must respect the masses' pioneering spirit, seriously sum up experiences and advocate and publicize them.

LIU JIE AT HENAN FORUM OF YOUNG LEADING CADRES

HK060701 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandrin 1130 GMT 5 Apr 82

[Summary] "The organizational department of the provincial CCP committee recently held a forum attended by some young and middle-aged cadres. Most of the attendees were professional or technical cadres who had been promoted to the leading posts in the prefectures, municipalities and counties in the past 2 years. They spoke glowingly of their impressions since taking up leading posts and put forth a lot of valuable proposals on future work. The provincial CCP committee attached great importance to this forum. Provincial CCP committee First Secretary Comrade Liu Jie attended the forum and held an informal discussion with the attendees. At the end of the meeting he delivered a speech."

The attendees held that it is imperative for young cadres to foster the ideal and conviction of fighting for the cause of communism all their lives and set demands on themselves according to the standards of a communist. It is necessary to be on guard against the corrosive influence of unhealthy tendencies and to strive to be models in implementing the guiding principles of the party. It is also necessary to learn modestly from veteran cadres. "In his speech, Comrade Liu Jie asked the young cadres who had taken up leading posts to step up their training in party spirit, improve the art of leadership and cultivate a good work style. He also encouraged everyone to study hard, become competent in their jobs as speedily as possible and be brave in shouldering new and heavy responsibilities."

GUIZHOU COUNTY CURBS RURAL LIBERALIZATION

HK120345 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 11 Apr 82

[Text] The 12 April GUIZHOU RIBAO carries on page 2 an investigation written by a provincial CCP committee work group on correcting liberalization trends in the rural areas of Shiqian County, entitled, "They Have Effectively Corrected Liberalization Trends in the Rural Areas."

The investigation says: Leaders at all levels in Shiqian County have overcome laxness and weakness, strengthened socialist education in the rural areas and effectively curbed and corrected the liberalization trends of small production. By now all 202 households who had occupied collective farmland to build houses have moved out, and the practice of 906 households in 200 production teams in dividing up the land among themselves and excluding households from elsewhere has been corrected. Last winter and this spring, they have also taken stock of arbitrary felling of mountain forests by over 200 production teams, and dealt hard blows at embezzlement, speculation, pursuit of feudal superstitions, collecting crowds for gambling, sabotaging planned parenthood and other sinister and unhealthy trends in violating law and discipline. Thus they have stimulated the smooth progress of all rural work.

Their main work methods consist of the following: 1) They have unified ideological understanding and launched all-round socialist education in close connection with the current central tasks; 2) the county CCP committee first solved the problems under its own nose, starting with the county organs, thus setting an example for the grassroots levels; 3) they vigorously grasped typical cases and handled them according to law, and expanded the effects of this practice; 4) they drew strict policy demarcation lines and upheld the principle of concentrating on education.

GUIZHOU RIBAO also carries an editorial note on this investigation. The note says: In close connection with the central tasks of the moment, Shiqian County has vigorously promoted ideological education -- the cardinal link -- and, starting with the county CCP committee and organs, has carried out education in socialist law and discipline and policy concepts. The county has punished typical cases according to law, effectively curbed unhealthy trends in the organs and enterprises, corrected liberalization trends of small production in the rural areas, hit at illegal and criminal activities in the economic field and promoted a turn for the better in the party work style, the popular mood and social order. Their methods are very good. The province should use this as reference material.

HK140637 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Apr 82

[Excerpts] From 10 to 12 April, the Chengdu Intermediate People's Court tried the case of (He Deming) and other cadres' children who raped women on the strength of their powerful connections. The principal criminal (He Deming) was sentenced to life imprisonment and was deprived of political rights for life. Criminals involved in the same case (Zhang Jianmeng) and (Cao Jingping) were sentenced to 15 and 10 years' imprisonment respectively.

(He Deming) was originally a worker in the rear base of a certain unit of the PLA Railway Engineering Corps stationed in Chengdu. His father is a deputy commander of the PLA Engineering Corps. (Zhang Jianmeng) was a policeman in a transportation escort team in a Lanzhou public security sub-office under the public security office of the Lanzhou railway bureau. (Cao) was a young worker in a guesthouse in a certain unit of the PLA Railway Engineering Corps stationed in Chengdu. The principal criminal (He Deming) was once sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment in 1975 for making love with an armyman's wife. However, after he was released upon completion of that sentence, he did not mend his ways and continued to commit crimes. On the evening of 1 February this year, he called (Cao) with him to meet a female sanitation worker who works in one of Chengdu's parks. Under the pretext of being in love with her, he inveigled her to go to his room and raped her.

Later, (Zhang) and (Cao) came into the room and also raped the girl. While raping the girl, the three criminals threatened the victim by showing off their powerful connections. When the victim tried to defend herself, one of the criminals said ferociously: You must obey us and try to resist no more. All the girls who ever came to this room were beaten until they lost consciousness. You are not the first, and you will not be the last. When the victim said she would accuse them, (He Deming) threatened that if she did not succeed, for his father was a cadre at the corps level and he himself had good connections with the public security organs, he would take revenge. On the morning of 3 February, the victim filed charges in the Chengdu Intermediate People's Court. The three criminals were detained on the morning of 4 February.

HEBEI HOLDS FORUM ON STRIKING AT ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK071123 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] The Hebei Provincial People's Procuratorate held a forum 15-19 March of the entire province's procuratorial system on striking at and dealing with crimes in the economic sphere. The forum studied the situation of further striking at unlawful and criminal activities in the economic sphere.

At present, crimes in the economic sphere in our province have spread into the industrial, communications, financial, trade, agricultural, forestry, cultural, education and public health fields and other trades. They have seriously corrupted our cadre forces, impaired the structure and prestige of our party, polluted the general atmosphere of society and affected the economic construction, stability and unity of our province.

The forum stressed: Procuratorial organs at all levels must fully understand the seriousness, harm and danger of unlawful and criminal activities in the economic sphere and regard striking blows at unlawful and criminal activities in the economic sphere, including smuggling, trafficking in smuggled goods, speculation, deception, graft and receiving bribes, as one of the central tasks for this year. It is essential to concentrate our energy on grasping major and important cases. Leaders must personally grasp them to the end and achieve good results. In dealing with cases, we must correctly grasp policies, give prominence to striking blows at key cases and pay attention to dealing with each case on its merits. We must deal severely with smuggling, trafficking in smuggled goods, graft, receiving bribes, appropriating large amounts of money and state and collective property as one's own and other serious unlawful and criminal actions. In accordance with the law, we must severely punish cadres who commit serious crimes, particularly cadres in important posts who commit crimes. In accordance with the law, we must deal leniently with those who unintentionally commit crimes, young delinquents and those who voluntarily surrender themselves to public security organs, confess their mistakes, voluntarily return ill-gotten gains, expose and accuse other people and render meritorious service. We must carefully deal with each case and avoid miscarriages of justice. Meanwhile, we must help units where cases occur to investigate hidden trouble and stop up economic loopholes.

Wang Dongning, standing committee member of the provincial CCP committee and vice governor, attended the forum and spoke. In his speech, he emphatically pointed out: We must deal with economic cases under the unified leadership of CCP committees. Procuratorial organs must actively coordinate with public security organs, courts, industrial, commercial, financial and tax departments, banks, discipline inspection and personnel departments and other relevant departments. Regardless of how important and complicated the cases are and who is involved, we must be bold in adhering to the principles and impartially enforcing the law. We must have the spirit of defying powerful and influential people and daring to touch a tiger's backside and must unswervingly, quickly and effectively strike blows at economic criminal activities.

HEBEI PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION CONCLUDES 3 APR

HK130231 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 4 Apr 82

[Summary] The Fourth Session of the Fifth Hebei Provincial People's Congress concluded in Shijiazhuang on 3 April. Session Executive Chairman Jiang Yizhen presided at the closing ceremony. The session adopted resolutions on the provincial government work report, the report on the 1981-82 economic situation and the budget report. The session also adopted a decision on implementing the NPC Standing Committee's decision on severely punishing criminals who do serious economic sabotage.

The session's resolution on the government work report affirmed the successes scored since the previous provincial people's congress session 5 months ago, but went on to note: "We must clearly realize that Hebei still faces very arduous tasks in turning chaos into order in guiding ideology and in practical work. Problems of bad enterprise management and poor economic returns exist everywhere. The gap between social purchasing power and commodity availability is still very great. We will have to exert enormous efforts to balance the budget this year. There are great shortages of raw materials and energy needed for developing production. In particular, as a result of 4 successive years of drought, there is serious difficulty in supplying water for industrial and agricultural production and for some urban and rural residents. The government at all levels in the province must attach a high degree of importance to these problems and launch the cadres and masses to work hard to overcome all difficulties in our advance."

The resolution also noted: "Under the guidance of the spirit of the third and sixth plenary sessions, governments at all levels in the province must continue to implement the spirit of the Hebei work conference and further promote turning chaos into order in guiding ideology and in practical work. We must rectify the leadership groups at all levels. We must certainly not allow the people of three caterories -- people who boycott the line, principles and policies of the third plenary session -- and people who commit serious economic crimes to enter the leadership groups. Those who are already in the leadership groups must be resolutely purged.

"It is necessary to seriously implement the 10 guiding principles for economic construction put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang, persistently shift the focus of all work to socialist modernization and shift economic construction onto the track of improving economic returns." The province should do a good job in economic construction, based on its actual conditions; develop production; and further perfect the production responsibility systems. At present, prominence should be given to the struggle against drought.

The resolution called on the province to make great efforts to build socialist spiritual civilization and develop the fruits of the decorum and courtesy drive. It is necessary to deal hard blows at people who engage in economic crime, and strive for a still greater turn for the better in social order. State work personnel must improve their work style and efficiency and overcome bureaucratism.

Commenting on the province's 1981 performance, the session held: "The development of industrial production is not good enough, and economic returns are low. A balanced budget was achieved only amid declining revenue and tightened expenditure." In view of these problems, the session instructed the provincial government to take effective steps to promote production development and improve economic returns. The session called on the province to work hard to build material and spiritual civilization and strive to fulfill the tasks for 1982.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN PLANTS TREES 10 APR

SK120416 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 11 Apr 82

[Text] According to our sources, leading comrades of the Heilongjiang Provincial CCP Committee, including Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee; Chen Junsheng, secretary of the provincial CCP committee; (Zhang Xianglin), permanent member of the provincial CCP committee and secretary of the Hejiang Prefectural CCP Committee; and (Zhang Qingjiu), permanent member of the Hejiang Prefectural CCP Committee and deputy director of the provincial leading party members' group, recently made an imspection tour in Hejiang Prefecture. On the afternoon of 10 April, they plunged into the afforestation activity with over 200 cadres from the Boli County government organs at the (Tongtianyi) tree farm, which was founded in 1956 and has been commended as a national-level advanced forestry unit. The farm has over 130,000 mu of mountainous forests, of which over 110,000 mu are afforested areas. In the past 27 years, the farm has never had a fire. Most of its trees can be used for timber. The farm has handed over more than 1.3 million yuan of profits to the state in the past few years.

After being briefed by the farm's responsible comrade on the forest situation, leading comrades including Yang Yichen heartily praised its achievements in forest cultivation and its good job in protecting forests. While planting trees, Comrade Yang Yichen told personnel that our province's vegetation area is only 30 percent, which is located primarily in several forestry areas.

Excess felling of trees and the slow operations of sapling nurseries over the past few years have resulted in denuding many natural forests. As a result, forests only grow in mountainous areas. Plains are without trees. Trees grow on the fringes of villages and fields and both sides of roads which have not been fully afforested. Therefore, we should adopt every possible means to do a good job in conducting afforestation and protecting forests to achieve a vegetation area of about 50 percent in the province as soon as possible.

LIAONING RIBAO VIEWS MACHINE BUILDING INDUSTRY

[Editorial: "Liaoning's Machine Building Industry Must Achieve 'Two Breakthroughs'"]

[Text] On the machine building industry front in our province, we have put forth the tasks of making both a breakthrough in supplying mechanical and eclectrical appliances at home and a breakthrough in increasing exports this year. We should do this on the basis of raising both the economic effect and the quality of our products in order to make greater contributions to the economic construction of the country. This target of struggle is not only a requirement resulting from the objective situation, but is also what the machine building industry in our province is capable of achieving. Therefore, we should be determined to fulfill it.

Liaoning is one of the important machine building industry bases in our country. It has a strong and sound foundation in this industry and it can produce nearly all kinds of products in this line.

During the economic readjustment over the past 2 years, the machine building industry in Liaoning has changed the structure of its products, expanded its field of service, raised the quality of its products and improved the management in its enterprises. Thus, it has further increased its capacity to meet the demands of the markets both at home and abroad. At the same time, along with the current healthy development of our national economy, there will be an increasing demand for renewing equipment and technical reform in various departments. This will open up a broad market for our machine building industry. Moreover, our light and textile industries, our agriculture and the people's livelihood will create new demand for machine building industrial products. Furthermore, we should emphatically point out that quite a few mechanical and electrical products of our province are marketable abroad, but as yet, we have exported very few of them. This shows that we have much room for change.

From the above we can see that during the period of readjustment, the machine building industry is by no means in the predicament of having no prospects. On the contrary, it has great prospects. We should not shrink back to our small market, but should continuously venture into the national and international markets.

In order to realize the two "breakthroughs," we should conscientiously carry out the principle of taking the planned economy as the core and supplementing it with the regulation of market mechanism. Naturally, we should put an end to the malpractice of blindly pursuing high output value and high profit regardless of both the state plan and the situation of supply and demand in the society. Nevertheless, taking the planned economy as the core by no means signifies that we should return to the old way of "three dependings" (depending on the state to draw up the plans, depending on the state for supply of raw materials and depending on the state for marketing). The fact is that this year, most of the machine building industrial enterprises will be divided into three categories. Some will organize their production in accordance with the demands of the market within the scope allowed in the state plan. Others will conduct most of their production in accordance with the state plan and the other part of their production in accordance with the demands of the market. Still others will conduct a small part of their production in accordance with the state plan and most of their production in accordance with the demands of the market. We must have a clear understanding of this situation and adhere to the correct principle of enlivening our economy under the unified leadership of the state and under the guidance of state planning. We must continue to carry on the spirit of "being responsible for producing and marketing as many varieties of products as possible," continue to expand the field of our service, vigorously improve our management and intensify the advertising of our products and improve our technical service in marketing our products. Thus, we will be able to break through various kinds of regional economic blockades and enable Liaoning's mechanical and electrical products to enter the national market. As long as we are adept at bringing the economic activities of our enterprises into line with the state plan by various means, we will be able to achieve the aims of observing the state plan without losing flexibility and enlivening our economy without causing confusion.

Achieving the "two breakthroughs" demands, in the final analysis, that we raise the quality of our products. This is the principal contradiction that our machine building industry is faced with and this is the key problem we now have to solve. Why do quite a large number of customers lack confidence in our mechanical and electrical products? Why are we importing the products that we can produce ourselves? Why do our products have poor competitiveness in the world market? Indeed, there are many reasons, but the main reason is the poor quality, few varieties and backwardness of technology in our products. This is a fundamental problem that is vital to the prosperity and existence of our machine building industry and we must not continue to neglect it. It is very clear that only by striving to improve the quality and increase the variety of our products and only by striving to make our products advanced can we achieve a high speed of development as well as high economic effect. Only by so doing can we meet the demands of the markets at home and abroad. This is the only way to make our machine building industry prosper. In order to achieve this aim, we should pay attention not only to present work, but also to the long-term development of the industry, and we should not only meet the present quality standards, but should also strive to meet the international standards. In short, regarding the problem of raising the standard of our products, we must unify our thinking, make up our minds to make tremendous efforts to deal with the problem and do our best to achieve good results as soon as possible.

SHAANXI RALLY ON STRIKING AT ECONOMIC CRIME

HK060225 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 5 Apr 82

[Summary] The provincial CCP committee propaganda department held a mobilization rally of the propaganda system on 5 April for striking at economic crimes. Provincial CCP committee Secretary Yan Kelun, who addressed the rally, demanded that people who had committed economic crimes clearly understand the situation, give themselves up and make a clean breast of things before 1 May, and also expose and report the criminal activities of others. Otherwise, they will be severely punished in accordance with new regulations.

Yan Kelun said: "Viewing the province as a whole, the initial investigations in various localities show that economic crimes are extremely rampant, and are much more serious than during the 'three-anti' and 'five-anti' period of 1952. The economic criminal cases have the following characteristics: 1) Large amounts of money are involved; 2) there is a lot of collusion between inside and outside; 3) many cases involve stealing things entrusted to one's care; 4) many cases involve gangs and rings; 5) many criminal elements have backers in higher authority; 6) many people carry out criminal activities while waving the signboard of legality; and 7) many cases involve the remnants and dregs of Lin Biao and the gang of four, persons released from education through labor and hooligans. This situation fully shows the gravity, harmfulness and danger of the current economic activities in the economic field.

"In the past some people said that the propaganda system was not concerned about money or material and was a clean department. The case of speculation in cultural relics by (Cui Guang) and others, which was tried on 3 April, has given us profound education."

Yan Kelun said: "There has been some increase in cases of speculation in cultural relics in Shaanxi in recent years. Some relics have been exported for profit, causing the state serious political and economic losses. The leadership of certain cultural relics management units is lax and weak, and there are many loopholes in the system. As a result, the criminal elements can seize their chance. It is, therefore, necessary to seriously absorb the experiences and lessons, strengthen ideological and political work, improve the rules and regulations and block the loopholes."

Yan Kelun put forward the following demands for the next stage in striking at economic crimes in the province: 1) Continue to study the spirit of the relevant central and provincial documents and also carry out propaganda with great fanfare; 2) grasp key cases at all levels, especially those involving leading cadres; 3) teach the masses to strictly act according to policies in the drive against economic crimes; 4) persistently carry out investigation and study, verify the facts and refrain from forcing confessions from people and giving them credence; 5) party committees must regard this struggle as one of the key tasks for this year and grasp it to the end.

Provincial CCP committee Deputy Secretary Bai Wenhua presided at the rally.

SOFTBALL OFFICIAL CRITICIZES ISF'S PORTER

["Chinese Softball Association Exposes Porter's 'Two-China' Scheme" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 13, (XINHUA) -- Wang Yizhou, vice-president of the Softball Association of the People's Republic of China said China will not tolerate the "two-China" policy adopted by Don Porter, secretary general of the International Softball Federation (ISF), and called for relocating the venue of the forthcoming world women's softball championship scheduled to take place in Taipei, China, next July.

Speaking at a press conference here this afternoon, Wang Yizhou pointed out that to carry out his "two Chinas" policy, Porter has set a trap for tempting more ISF members to take part in the championship by announcing at the end of his recent trip to Taipei that political problems surrounding the world women's softball championship have been resolved.

Wang elaborated in detail the prolonged consultations of the Chinese Softball Association with the International Softball Federation on the issue. He said, "Early February this year, our delegates met Mr Porter, general secretary of the ISF, in the United States... during the talk with Mr Porter we explained our position to him, pointing out that the ISF's resolution regarding the name, flag and anthem of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association must be strictly observed on any occasion during the world championship including the opening and closing ceremonies and at the play grounds. Porter said clearly that the ISF would not allow Taiwan to use the name of 'Republic of China' and it could only use the name of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association. With regard to the flag and anthem, Porter also said that within the jurisdiction of the ISF he would request the Chinese Taipei Softball Association to follow the ISF resolution on the Chinese Taipei Softball Association. Only several days later, Porter went back on his word when he declared in Taipei that the Chinese Taipei Softball Association could use the flag and anthem of the so-called Republic of China at the opening and closing ceremonies of the championship. Our association immediately sent a telex to Porter on Feb. 29th, pointing out that to allow the use of the flag and anthem of the so-called Republic of China is in violation of the ISF resolution and requesting him to strictly observe the ISF resolution."

"On Feb. 27, March 4 and March 14, we further stated our stand to Porter by telexes and in the meantime refuted his groundless excuses."

On the "cable invitation" issue, Wang Yizhou said before the cable was sent out, "Porter sent us a telex and gave us assurance that only the name and symbols of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association would be used in the documents of this world championship. He told the press that the 'invitation' originally printed by the Taiwan organization was declared invalid because it violated the ISF resolution and that he had requested the Chinese Taipei Softball Association to extend another invitation and in case the invitation was still against the ISF resolution another venue would be chosen for the championship."

However, Wang Yizhou pointed out, "the new 'invitation' sent out by the Chinese Taipei Softball Association on March 13th, still retains the name of 'Republic of China.' Right on the following day, that is, on March 14, Porter sent us a telex saying that the reference of 'Republic of China' in the invitation was included 'inadvertently' by the organizing committee.

"He asked us to 'disregard' this reference. This is a premeditated political scheme designed for a flagrant act of creating 'two Chinas.' On March 16th, our association lodged a strong protest to Porter and requested the ISF to declare this 'invitation' null and void."

Wang said, "All these maneuverings on the part of some Americans in the ISF and certain persons in the Chinese Taipei Softball Association have met with strong opposition of most ISF member associations, who resolutely demand that the International Olympic Committee [IOC] and ISF resolutions on the issue of Chinese Taipei [as received] be observed during the 5th women's world softball championship; otherwise they would not send teams to the championship."

"Under these circumstances," Wang said, "Mr Porter told our delegates in Hong Kong on April 2 that only the flags of IOC and ISF and the anthem of IOC would be used during the world championship. We made it clear to Mr Porter: Since the Chinese Taipei Softball Association violated the resolutions of IOC and ISF, the championship should be moved out of Taipei to another venue. Mr Porter then said that if the Taipei organizing committee did not follow the resolutions of IOC and ISF on issue of the Chinese Taipei [as received] considerations would be given to the relocation of the championship."

Wang said, two days later, however, Porter went to Taipei and talked at length with some persons of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association. He even described the Chinese Taipei Softball Association as a "national body governing softball." He said nothing about the resolution that the Chinese Taipei Softball Association was forbidden to use the flag and anthem of "Republic of China." As soon as Porter left Taipei, the leading members of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association and the Chinese Taipei Olympic Committee declared that they had not given up the right of using the name, flag, and anthem of "Republic of China" during the championship.

Whereas, Wang pointed out, "Porter neither refuted nor negated such declaration. In a telex the ISF told its member associations that 'the Chinese Taipei Softball Association has agreed not to raise the flag or play the anthem at the opening ceremonies or any time during the 5th women's world championship.' But facts prove that what was written in the ISF telex is sheer deceptive talk. Mr Porter and the Chinese Taipei Softball Association are putting on a fraudulent farce in an attempt to lure more associations to the championship."

Wang said in conclusion: "In view of the above situation, our association already sent a telex to Mr Porter, ISF secretary general, on April 10, stating that we fully supported the proposal of the Japan Softball Association regarding the relocation of the 5th women's world softball championship and hope that the ISF would immediately make a decision on the relocation of the championship.

U.S. ANNOUNCES PLAN TO SELL ARMS TO TAIWAN

["New Talk" column: "U.S. Arms Sales: Old Arrangements and New Explanation"]

[Text] The Reagan administration officially delivered to Congress yesterday its proposal to sell $60 million worth of weapons [junbei 6511 3962] to Taiwan. The Chinese people will definitely lodge a strong protest against this move.

The spokesman of the U.S. State Department and Defense Department said that before the Reagan administration delivered the proposal to Congress, it had already notified the Chinese Government of its intention. The U.S. spokesmen were neither willing nor had the nerve to comment on the reaction of the Chinese officials upon receiving notification.

Early last week, Chinese Ambassador Chai Zemin met U.S. Secretary of State Haig in Washington. After the meeting, the Chinese officials said that while striving to improve Sino-U.S. relations, they are also preparing for the worse. After the Reagan administration delivered its proposal to Congress, well-informed American sources in Washington immediately spread the news that Chai Zemin would return to Beijing. They also believe that this has something to do with the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

Many countries, including the allies of the United States, are worried about a deterioration of Sino-U.S. relations. They do not want to see the occurrence of events which would harm Sino-U.S. relations and adversely affect the overall strategy. While continuing to sell weapons to Taiwan, the Reagan administration is also trying to lessen the effects of its act of interfering in China's internal affairs.

A spokesman of the U.S. State Department said last week: "Last December, not long after we had presented an unofficial report to Congress, we told the Chinese: 1) This transfer does not involve any weapons; 2) this transfer was part of a long-term arrangement made before President Reagan met Premier Zhao Ziyang in Cancun; 3) in recent months, that is, during the time when the talks are being held, the United States has no intention of making any new decisions on arms sales."

It is obvious that the Reagan administration does not want Beijing to downgrade its relations with the United States on account this transaction which arrangements had been made long before the talks began and involves only spare parts and not weapons. It will not sell weapons for the time being, and whether there will be future weapon sales will be determined by the results of the Sino-U.S. talks. The distinction between "spare parts" and weapons is rather murky. The United States has said that it will only provide Taiwan with necessary parts needed for the maintenance of the U.S.-made aircraft. However, last week a Japanese visitor quoted Liao Chengzhi as saying that this transaction will include radar equipment.

A spokesman for the Pentagon said this would not affect the military balance in the Taiwan Strait region. Of course, Beijing does not think that these weapons [wuqi 2976 2892] supplied by the United States will constitute a military barrier to the unification of China. The problem is that Beijing regards the U.S. persistence in selling weapons to Taiwan indefinitely as a hegemonist act which violates China's sovereignty. It will definitely constitute a psychological barrier to the Taiwan authorities when they are considering the proposal of peaceful reunification.

What the United States has now said is that it will only transact the $97 million arms deal (the $37 million deal has been carried on clandestinely). Whether there are more transactions in the future will be determined by the results of the talks. The way of handling this matter has at least poisoned the atmosphere of the talks. Since Washington is acting so willfully, it is not very difficult for the U.S. Government to anger Beijing.

WEN WEI PO ON PRC NUCLEAR, SPACE TECHNOLOGY

[Dispatch from correspondent Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "China's First Nuclear Powerplant To Be Built in Shanghai in 2 Years"]

[Text] According to an authoritative person in Beijing's science circles, China will score successes of great significance in advanced branches of science in the next 1 or 2 years.

China is going to apply nuclear technology to the civil industries in the next 1 or 2 years, said this authoritative person at a news conference held here today. The first nuclear powerplant in the country will be built in Shanghai. This nuclear powerplant, to have a capacity of generating 300 billion watts, will be a pressurized water-type reactor. At present, all the design work has been completed.

This authoritative person said that in view of the technological level in the world today, only a nuclear powerplant with a designed generating capacity of 900 billion watts is commercially feasible. Even so, it must be recognized that this project will mark tremendous progress for China. China has decided to first build a small experimental nuclear powerplant. Then, from the experience gained, it can improve on design work, and thus speed up the application of nuclear technology to civil industries.

As reported, this nuclear powerplant project has been designed and most of the equipment and accessories required, except two essential component parts, will be made by China itself. The production of these two component parts, namely, the steam generator and the major pump, is still beyond China's capability. Therefore, it is believed that China will have to import them from foreign countries.

This authoritative person also disclosed that China would launched a synchronous satellite in 1983 or 1984. This project, if successful, will push China's space technology a great step forward.

As he explained, in order to launch a satellite which moves at the same speed as that of the earth's rotation so that it can permanently stay at a relatively fixed point above the earth, two technical problems have to be overcome. First, the satellite must be kept under control at all times, and second, rocket thrust must be powerful enough to inject the satellite into orbit. China's performance in solving the first problem has already been outstanding. After the United States and the Soviet Union, China is the third country in the world to have successfully retrieved a satellite. This shows that China has reached a certain level in satellite control techniques. In the future, China will improve its techniques by launching a synchronous satellite. The second problem will be a test for China's ability or rocket propulsion as a synchronous satellite needs to be injected into a higher orbit. At present, China possesses two-stage rockets. To inject a satellite into a higher orbit requires a three-stage rocket and, moreover, the use of liquid propellent. This is really a severe test. Now, China is conducting research in this field. If this research is successful, China's space technology will be pushed up to a higher level.

This authoritative person said that the transition from theory to practice marks a leap, and the course from experiment to commercial product marks another leap. Actually China is not weak in terms of basic theory, but relatively weak in the fields of experimentation and application. Therefore, based on the outcome of the above two projects, we will be able to estimate in general the level of science and technology of China in the 1980's.

DPRK'S KIM IL-SONG DELIVERS POLICY SPEECH

[Text] Pyongyang, April 14 (XINHUA) -- Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, today stressed that the Korean revolution and construction should be vigorously pushed ahead under the banners of the people's power and ideological, technical and cultural revolutions set forth by the fifth congress of the party.

In his policy speech entitled "Tasks of the People's Government in Modeling the Whole of Society on the Chuche Idea" and addressed to the joint meeting of the party Central Committee and the Supreme People's Assembly, Kim Il-song emphatically pointed out that today the Korean people are "confronted with the task of further strengthening the people's power and elevating its function and role in every way to meet the requirements of the new phase of revolutionary development."

Dealing with the future economic tasks, Kim Il-song said that his government would organize and mobilize the entire Korean people to strive to accomplish the economic goals set forth by the party's sixth congress. Vigorous efforts should be made to develop agriculture, fishery and light industry and boost chemical, electrical and metallurgical production, he added. He called on the Korean working people to fulfil the grand economic tasks by carrying forward the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and creative wisdom. He said: "To maintain independence in state activity is the first criterion of an independent, sovereign state," which "should map out all lines and policies on its own in accordance with its actual conditions, implement them by itself and exercise a full sovereign right in foreign relations."

Referring to the question of national reunification, Kim Il-song said: "The basic principle followed consistently by our party and the government of the republic in the struggle for national reunification is that the Korean people themselves reunify the country independently without any foreign interference." "The question of national reunification is, after all, an internal affair of the Korean nation, and it is a matter concerned with the right of our people to self-determination." "Outside forces have no reason and ground whatever to meddle" in it. He added: "The most important thing in achieving national reunification independently is to get the U.S. troops withdrawn from South Korea and put an end to the interference of U.S. imperialism in the internal affairs of Korea. Occupying half of our territory by force and meddling in our internal affairs, U.S. imperialism is trampling on our national sovereignty, and is hindering our country's reunification with its 'two Koreas' policy. U.S. troops' presence in South Korea is the greatest obstacle to the independent reunification of our country. As long as the U.S. imperialist forces of aggression are left alone in South Korea, the reunification question can never be solved independently." He pointed out: "In order to reunify the country independently it is essential to check resolutely the policy of depending on foreign forces pursued by the South Korean authorities."

He said: "We will meet and consult with anyone who is opposed to U.S. imperialist occupation and interference in South Korea and keep an independent stand about the reunification question in real earnest."

The most realistic and reasonable way to achieve the independent reunification of Korea lies in the establishment of the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo as proposed by the Workers' Party of Korea at its sixth congress. The government of the republic will make every effort to carry into effect the proposal for reunification through the establishment of a confederal republic, he said. He stated that the Korean people "will not only reunify the country independently, but, after reunification, too, will follow as ever the road of independence."

Dwelling on global issues, Kim Il-song said: "Those countries which champion independence must categorically reject all foreign interference and refrain from dancing to the tune of others or from blindly toeing others' line. Then, imperialism and dominationism will become powerless, and any power politics or batons will be rendered helpless." Kim Il-song declared:

"Non-alignment is a progressive movement which is opposed to all domination and subjugation, and struggles for the sovereignty of countries and nations. This movement reflects the contemporary trend towards independence and embodies in it the noble idea of independence against imperialism. Only through the expansion and development of this movement can the newly-emerging countries firmly defend their sovereignty and check and frustrate the arbitrariness of the imperialists on the international scene," he said. "An important question in extending and developing the Non-aligned Movement is to strengthen the unity and solidarity of this movement. This is all the more important in view of the persistent moves pursued by the imperialists today to split the newly-emerging countries and set them at variance with each other."

"As in the past, so also in the future, the government of the republic will unite solidly with those countries which advocate independence, and develop the relations of friendship and cooperation with them and strive to check and frustrate the imperialist policy of aggression and war and safeguard world peace and security. Our republic, as a dignified member of the Non-aligned Movement, will always be faithful to the principles and ideas of this movement and extend unflagging support and encouragement to the people of the world in their struggle for national independence and a new society," he said.

MOUNTING OPPOSITION TO LE DUAN CLIQUE CLAIMED

OW140459 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1400 GMT 13 Apr 82

[Article by "Vietnamese patriot" Xuan Hung: "The Armed Struggle Against the Le Duan Clique Is Spreading"]

[Text] Previously, the Le Duan clique strictly prohibited reporting on the armed activities of the opposition forces at home. Only by secretly listening to foreign radio stations could the Vietnamese people learn about such activities. Late last year, however, Hanoi press and radio openly carried a number of reports on these activities. The Le Duan clique's propaganda apparatus wanted to use such reports to boast about its "victories." However, through these boasts and foreign press reports, we can clearly see the following:

1. The activities of opposition armed forces are developing daily. In 1978, the Le Duan clique mentioned in an internal report that antigovernment armed activities existed in the Central Highlands area. Late last year, Hanoi press and radio revealed that antigovernment forces had also appeared in the north. Rebellions had successively broken out in one village or another in Ha Tuyen, Hoang Lien Son and Quang Ninh Provinces. Foreign press and news agencies report that opposition armed activities have been noted from Hau Giang to Danang. The most active opposition armed forces are concentrated at the areas bordering Laos and Kampuchea. In April 1980, Nguyen Huu Tho said that there were only isolated bandit activities occurring in a few places, that these activities had been rapidly repressed and that there was nothing to worry about. In August and September of last year, however, there were reports that opposition armed forces in the Central Highlands region killed or wounded more than 100 Le Duan troops. In the north, according to reports from Hanoi, the Le Duan clique has had to muster forces of battalion or company strength of the regular army to fight antigovernment forces in many battles, some of which lasted more than 10 days.

2. The opposition forces have acquired a mass base. The Hanoi press reveals that the opposition forces in the Central Highlands have controlled a number of hamlets and villages in remote border areas creating a deep, wide network and a long-term foothold. They have set up liaison corridors in deep jungles. Members of the opposition forces have infiltrated mass organizations. Some have become village commanding cadres. The local people often supply the "reactionaries" deep in the jungles with food, arms and ammunition.

At present, the opposition armed activities have become a great worry for the Le Duan clique. In February of 1980, due to deteriorating public order and security, the Le Duan clique successively held security meetings from the central to the regional level and launched the so-called movement to strengthen public order and social security, aimed at maintaining its fascist rule with repressive measures. Pham Hung, deputy secretary [as heard] and interior minister, said in an article in the June 1981 issue of TAP CHI CONG SAN that to protect political security and maintain public order and safety is an extremely complex, difficult and fierce struggle and that this constitutes an extremely important and urgent task of the party and state. Such remarks by Pham Hung can be considered as an objective conclusion. However, even with this conclusion, the question is not yet resolved because it has not gotten to the cause of the situation, namely, the Le Duan clique's extremely reactionary policy -- the policy of national oppression and border purification.

KHIEU SAMPHAN REPORTS ON DK-SRV BATTLES

[Text] Beijing, Apr 15 (XINHUA) -- Khieu Samphan, prime minister of Democratic Kampuchea, pointed out today that the Vietnamese aggressor troops have been bogged down in their dry-season offensives and mopping-up operations against Democratic Kampuchea.

He made these remarks in a speech marking the Kampuchean New Year and the seventh anniversary of the founding of Democratic Kampuchea.

Analyzing the military situation in the dry season of 1981-82, Khieu Samphan said: "Generally speaking, the combat capability and military quality of the Vietnamese aggressor troops have been greatly weakened in the current dry season." Their strength in eastern and central Kampuchea has become thinner and weaker as a result of their concentration on western Kampuchea, he said. Their mopping-up operations are carried out only in company strength in the northeastern region comprising Ratanakiri, Stoeng Treng and Kracheh Provinces, as well as in the eastern and southwestern regions. These operations have also dwindled in Kompong Speu, Kompong Chhnang, Kompong Thom and Western Kompong Cham Provinces in central Kampuchea. In western Kampuchea, the Vietnamese operations are less vigorous than the previous dry season, he said. Up to the present, Khieu Samphan said, Vietnam is unable to carry out mopping-up operations in Leach District and Sisophon area. In Samlot area, the Vietnamese forces are also strained.

He listed a number of areas where the Vietnamese troops have some initiatives, such as northern Koh Kong, Siem Reap, Oddar Meanchey, Preah Vihear and western Kompong Thom Provinces, as well as Chhep Teareabarivoat and Sisophon areas. In northern Koh Kong Province, he said, almost all the Vietnamese troops stationed there, plus those called in from Highway No four, have been concentrated to launch three attacks on the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas. All the attacks ended in failure. Last October, 10,000 Vietnamese troops were massed in Siem Reap, Oddar Meanchey, Preah Vihear and western Kompong Thom Provinces and launched large-scale offensives, capturing a number of villages under the control of the National Army and guerrillas. These troops have encountered great difficulties and suffered heavy casualties as a result of the guerrilla activities of the National Army and guerrilla units, highlighted by the cutting off of enemy communication lines in the rear and wearing down of the enemy. By February this year, Democratic Kampuchea had recovered all these villages. Since March the National Army and guerrilla units have stepped up actions along Highway 6 between Siem Reap and Kompong Thom and in western Siem Reap Province, extending their manoeuvres to the bank of the Tonle Sap Lake. Thus, areas under the control of Democratic Kampuchea have been expanded around the Tonle Sap Lake in the Chikrieng District of Siem Reap Province and in the Stoung District of Kompong Thom Province.

On the Chheb-Reabarivoat battlefront, Vietnamese remnant troops from this battlefront plus other units called in from the eastern and central parts of Kampuchea attacked Democratic Kampuchean forces from behind. They set up a defence line to protect their rear. However, Vietnamese troops still suffered heavy casualties and material losses and retreated.

Referring to the military situation south of Sisophon, Khieu Smaphan said: "The Vietnamese mounted an attack in this area by massing all their remnant troops in a bid to dislodge us and eliminate our forces in the Phnum Malai-Phnum Mak Hoeun area so as to coordinate their psychological warfare in hoodwinking the world into believing that they have taken full control of Kampuchea, and the Kampuchean problem no longer exists. However, though the vietnamese troops have seized from us certain places south of Sisophon, they have failed in their political plot and psychological warfare.

"As we succeeded in destroying more roads with mines and hitting the enemy from behind, regular Vietnamese troops have to be assigned to protect their communication lines. This is why more and more Vietnamese troops have been bogged down, surrounded, and decimated day after day. The National Army and guerrilla units south of Sisophon are determined to turn the battlefield in this front into graves for Vietnamese troops. They have pledged to deal Vietnamese heavier blows in close coordination with their compatriots in other battlefronts. In general, the Vietnamese are finding their going tougher and tougher in all the battle fronts in this country."

During the current dry season, he said, Vietnamese troops have used chemical weapons more frequently to massacre the Kampuchean people. In a sense this also shows Vietnam's shortage of manpower and is an attempt to check attack from Democratic Kampuchean forces. This can only mean their strategical weakness and is certainly not a sign of strength.

Khieu Samphan reiterated that the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and the Patriotic and Democratic Front of the Great National Union of Kampuchea will share weal and woe with the nation and people of Kampuchea and lead them to carry on the fight by surmounting all difficulties. He urged the Kampuchean people, the National Army and the guerrillas to hit harder at the Vietnamese aggressors until they are driven out of the country. He also appealed to all peace loving and justice upholding countries to continue to support the Kampuchean people's just struggle and exert more pressure on Vietnam and force it to withdraw from Kampuchea.

Ceausescu, Hu Address Rally

[Text] Shenyang, April 14 (XINHUA) -- More than 10,000 people gathered at Liaoning stadium this afternoon to welcome Romanian President and General Secretary of the Romanian Communist Party Nicolae Ceausescu. The stadium was decorated with the Chinese and Romanian flags and two streamers saying: "Long live the revolutionary unity and military friendship between the parties, countries and peoples of China and Romania!" and "Long live the great unity of the people of the world!"

At 1630 President and Elena Ceausescu and other distinguished Romanian guests took the rostrum with CCP Chairman Hu Yaobang. They were greeted by a standing ovation as a band played the Romanian and Chinese national anthems. Young Pioneers presented bouquets to the guests.

Li Huang, secretary of the Liaoning Provincial CCP Committee, spoke first. "Comrade Ceausescu has come to visit Liaoning Province, bringing us the profound feelings of the Romanian people. This will always remain in the hearts of the people in Liaoning. The people in Laioning will regard this visit by Comrade Ceausescu as a motive force and an inspiration for them to further consolidate and develop the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two parties, the two nations and the two peoples of China and Romania."

Nicolae Ceausescu then took the floor amid prolonged applause. In his speech, he expressed his pleasure at having the opportunity to visit Shenyang municipality, Liaoning Province. He said: On behalf of the Romanian Communist Party and people and in the name of the Romanian delegation and myself as an individual, I wish to extend to the people of Liaoning Province and Shenyang municipality my best wishes and sincerest greetings. I would like to relay the warm greetings from the Romanian people to the great Chinese people and wish you every success in developing socialist construction and safeguarding the cause of peace. "I have visited China several times," he said, "during which I have met with Chinese leaders. I reached agreements with Chinese party and government leaders including Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai. These meetings and agreements laid a foundation for friendship and cooperation between the two countries and contributed to our socialist construction.

"During the current visit," he said, "we will, together with Comrade Hu Yaobang and other Chinese party and government leaders, explore ways to further the cooperation between the two parties and countries. This cooperation will help develop the countries' socialist economy and better people's lives. It will also help consolidate and develop world peace. We are elated by the achievements of the Chinese people in socialist construction, in industry, agriculture, science and culture and the growth of people's living standards." He said: "This morning, we visited the Shenyang No 3 machine tool factory. This factory's products and technical standards greatly impressed us. I understand that there is direct cooperation between this factory and Romanian enterprises." He said: "The leaders in Liaoning Province and Shenyang municipality also introduced us to your tremendous achievements in all fields. Liaoning and Shenyang have played a significant role in China's economy. Taking this point into consideration, we believe that our cooperation with Liaoning Province is important."

Nicolae Ceausescu described Romania's successes in building a developed socialist economy under the leadership of the Romanian Communist Party. He said: "Compared with the years when the nation had just begun to develop its socialist construction, Romania has expanded its industry by 51 times. Tremendous achievements have been scored in agriculture, science, culture and education. The working people's living standards have been continuously improved while production output has been raised. Romania, whose industry and agriculture were originally very backward, has become a well-developed nation in industry and agriculture." "Romania's achievements demonstrate the great power of people who have cast off the yoke of foreign countries and mastered their own destiny and are building socialism," he said. "The experience of Romania, China and other socialist countries shows only socialism can ensure economic development at high speed. Romania is now implementing its seventh 5-year plan. We attach great importance to the development of the productive forces as well as agriculture and energy, and regard our efforts in this respect as the foundation in the development of our entire national economy."

He said: "We believe that better cooperation between Romania and China is conducive to a faster and all-round development of the economy in the two countries." "We have had talks with Comrade Hu Yaobang and other Chinese leaders. I am confident the agreement we are going to reach will lay a solid foundation for a firm and long-standing friendship and cooperation," he said.

Referring to international questions, Nicolae Ceausescu said great changes have taken place in the world, engendering a very complicated situation. Many independent nations have emerged and are working hard to defend their independence and avoid enslavement again. "Some countries still pursue power politics and realigning spheres of influence. The gap between poor and rich nations is widening. All this requires the world's progressive forces unite, opposing power politics and the attempt to divide up the world again, thus ensuring the independence of various countries and the maintenance of world peace," Nicolae Ceausescu said.

"We are convinced the friendship between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party, and between the Romanian and Chinese people, will further develop," he said. In conclusion, he cheered: "Long live the unbreakable friendship and cooperation between the two parties, the two nations and the two peoples of Romania and China!"

Hu Yaobang thanked Nicolae Ceausescu for his warm and friendly speech. "This is a great inspiration to us and demonstrates a great trust in us."

"The Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people, including the party members and people of Liaoning Province, love and will protect the friendship between the Romanian and Chinese parties and countries as they would protect their own eyes. Comrade Ceausescu has led the Romanian Communist Party for 17 years. Under this leadership, the Romanian people have made great achievements in building socialism. The Romanian Government and people have made outstanding contributions to safeguarding world peace and the progressive cause, and to the friendship between the two parties, countries and peoples of China and Romania," he said. "Comrade Ceausescu is one of the most sincere and best comrades in arms of the Chinese people and the Chinese Communist Party," Hu Yaobang said.

Hu Yaobang said Liaoning is one of the important provinces involved in economic cooperation with Romania. "Accomplishing the cooperative task, both quantitatively and qualitatively and on time, is the most articulate expression of friendship between the people of China and Romania," he said. He urged the people of the province to learn from the Romanian people. He said Liaoning is as big as Romania with a greater population, but, for various reasons, its industrial and agricultural output is only one-third of Romania's. "Liaoning is an important base for China's heavy industry. Its party members and its people should dedicate heart and soul to work hard to ensure the success of socialist construction and other undertakings," he said.

Hu Yaobang wished Nicolae Ceausescu good health that he might contribute his vigorous energy to the common ideals and common cause of the people of Romania and China.

Both Nicolae Ceausescu and Hu Yaobang received enthusiastic applause. The rally ended amid the strains of the Internationale. President and Elena Ceausescu arrived from Beijing by special plane this morning with Chairman Hu Yaobang.

Talks Continue in Beijing

[Text] Beijing, April 14 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, and Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, continued to hold talks here this morning.

In today's talks, Chairman Hu Yaobang briefed the Romanian visitors on China's situation, particularly the changes that have taken place since Ceausescu's last visit to China, including the historical significance of the Third Plenary Session of the 11th C.C.P. Central Committee. Chairman Hu said: "We have concentrated our energy in the three and half years since the third plenary session to mainly solve the domestic problems and eliminate the evil consequences brought about by the 10-year internal disorder.

"On the basis of broad and profound investigation, we re-estimated a series of major principles and policies," he said. He continued: "Now we can say we have basically completed this process. Although there are still many problems to be solved, the most difficult period is over."

Hu said that the present political situation, characterized by stability and unity, is one of the best since the founding of the People's Republic. There are two main factors contributing to such a situation in the last three or four years, he said. "First, the party has adopted correct policies that have yielded results in actual work. The people's living standards have improved and unity and fraternity among people of various nationalities and of all walks of life in the country has been strengthened. These policies have enabled our cadres and people to see and believe that China has a bright future," he said. "The second factor," Hu continued, "is that the party is working hard to foster the fine tradition and style of work manifested during the years in Yanan and in the early years after the founding of the People's Republic, namely, seeking truth from facts, making investigations and study, developing close ties with the masses and opposing bureaucratism. Meanwhile, greater efforts are being made to seriously handle those cadres and party members who have violated state law and party discipline."

Hu said: "In the past three and a half years, China scored most remarkable successes in agriculture because various forms of the responsibility system for production were introduced. This policy has fired the peasants to greater enthusiasm in production." He said: "The production responsibility system marks a major change in the way the Chinese Communist Party guides agriculture. We are fully confident of the further development of agricultural production."

The chairman also briefed the Romanian visitors on the major tasks the Chinese Communist Party plans to perform this year. Hu and Ceausescu also exchanged views on the international situation and the further development of bilateral relations. They agreed that Sino-Romanian relations in the political, economic and other fields will continue to grow.

Taking part in the talks on the Romanian side were Elena Ceausescu, Ion Dinca and Stefan Andrei. Present on the Chinese side were Chen Muhua and Huang Hua.

NONALIGNED MEETING, EGYPT-ARAB RELATIONS REPORTED

[Report: "Extraordinary Conference of Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau Does Not Condemn Camp David Accord, Showing an Improvement in Egyptian-Arab Relations"]

[Text] On 8 April, the extraordinary conference of the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau issued its final communique, in which it did not directly condemn the Camp David accord. This is regarded as a sign of improvement in Egyptian-Arab relations.

It is reported that before the drawing up of the final draft of the communique, there was a heated debate on its wording. In the end, the final communique did not condemn the Camp David accord. It only stated that the conference "is anxiously concerned about the continuous efforts, activities, measures and continuous talks that have been aimed at realizing the terms of the Camp David accord." However, the initial draft of the communique said something about the "compulsory implementation of the Camp David accord" and something showing the conference's "regret" that Sinai would be occupied by Western troops.

The newspapers in Cairo warmly responded to this communique and were of the opinion that this was a "tremendous victory" that the Egyptian delegation that attended the conference had achieved through making great efforts. A certain member of the Egyptian delegation said that some resolutions of the extraordinary conference of the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau were "unexpectedly good." These resolutions may become a "turning point" in Egyptian-Arab relations and a new "beginning" for the solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Some members of the delegation even went so far as to say that "this meeting has laid the phsychological foundation for Egypt's return to the Arab world."

Since Egypt signed its peace treaty with Israel in 1979, most of the Arab countries have severed their diplomatic relations with Egypt. But since President Muhammad H. Mubarak came to office last October, the Egyptian Government has strived to improve its relations with the Arab countries.

A few days ago, the Egyptian representatives attended the conference of the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau in Kuwait. This was the first time that a high-ranking Egyptian delegation had visited the capital of an Arab country. Nevertheless, officials of both Egypt and the Gulf Arab countries have recently said that when they expressed their hope for restoring their mutual relations, that the normalization of their bilateral relations will be a "prolonged and complicated" and "gradual and slow" process.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK, 'ALI, U.S. ENVOY DISCUSS SINAI

[Text] Cairo, April 14 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak and Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali today met U.S. Ambassador to Egypt Alfred Atherton. This meeting was a continuation of meetings by Egyptian leaders to deal with the strained relations between Egypt and Israel on the issue of Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula.

'Ali met U.S. Ambassador Atherton twice Tuesday. After today's meeting, Atherton emphasized the role of the United States as a full partner and said it would continue extending aid to Egypt.

'Ali reiterated Egypt's stand about Israel's accusation that Egypt violated the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty and would, therefore, delay the withdrawal from the Sinai by April 25. He first denied the Israeli charges on Monday, saying Egypt respects the peace treaty and is committed to its execution.

On the question of arms smuggling raised by Israel, 'Ali said there is no justification for this charge. "We are adopting measures for prohibiting the smuggling of arms to Egypt, and, consequently, the same measures are being adopted for not smuggling weapons abroad," he said.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS ARGENTINE-BRITISH DISPUTE

HK151028 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Apr 82 p 6

[Short commentary: "It Is Hoped That a Peaceful Settlement Can Be Achieved in the Dispute Over the Malvinas Islands"]

[Text] The dispute between Argentina and Britain over the Malvinas Islands has in the past 2 weeks become the focus of world attention. Now some countries are acting as mediators in the dispute. Both Argentina and Britain have kept the door open for negotiations. There is likely to be an easing of tensions. But the danger of a military confrontation still exists. This situation not only causes grave concern among the coastal countries of the South Atlantic but poses a new threat to world peace and security.

The problem of the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands is basically a historical one left over from colonialism. Since the end of World War II, the Asian, African and Latin American peoples have sparked an upsurge in a movement against imperialism and colonialism. The struggle waged by the peoples of various countries to eliminate colonialism and achieve national independence has become an irresistible force. The dispute between Argentina and Britian about sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands has continued for half a century. Since World War II, long-drawn-out negotiations have been held. The United Nations has adopted relevant resolutions on the decolonization of the Mâlvinas. Nonaligned nations conferences have also adopted many resolutions voicing explicit support for Argentina's sovereignty over the islands and calling for both sides to step up the process of negotiations. However, the expected results have not been achieved in the negotiations. The question concerning the sovereignty of the islands has remained unsolved.

Everybody knows that it is China's persistent stand to oppose hegemonism and colonialism, support that Third World nations in their struggles to safeguard national sovereignty and territorial integrity and respect the relevant resolutions adopted by the nonaligned nations conferences. The national feelings of the Argentine people to safeguard their national sovereignty are understandable. Argentina's demand for its sovereign right over the Malvinas Islands is deemed to win the support and respect of the United Nations and other parties concerned.

It would be most distressing if the Argentine-British dispute over the Malvinas Islands should lead to bloodshed. Many countries have urged both countries to exercise restraint and solve the dispute by peaceful means instead of resorting to force. We fervently hope that Argentina and Britian will seek a peaceful and just settlement of this problem through negotiations -- a problem left over from history. So long as both countries maintain a sincere and accomodating attitude, the Malvinas issue can surely be settled in an equitable and reasonable manner.

EDITORIAL ON AGRICULTURAL RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

[Editorial: "Policies Must Be Consistently Stable, Problems Must Be Solved in Real Earnest -- on Summing Up and Perfecting the Agricultural Production Responsibility System"]

[Text] All those who have recently visited the rural areas will say without exception that rural production has indeed developed and the peasants' livelihood has indeed improved. The masses are satisfied yet they are afraid of changes. First of all, they are afraid that the policy for the production system will change and hope that under no circumstances will it change. This is a universal demand.

The No 1 document issued by the CCP Central Committee at the beginning of this year states that from now on, there will not be changes on a large scale in the production responsibility system in rural areas all over the country. We have come to a stage of summary, perfection and stability. At present, we should publicize among the masses that two things will not change, that is, "that our country's agriculture must persist along the road of socialist collectivization and that the system of public ownership of the basic means of production such as land and so on will remain unchanged for a long time to come and that the production responsibility system must be established in the collective economy and will also remain unchanged for a long time to come." This is an important strategic decision which is in conformity with the peasants' desires and the demand of economic development in rural areas at present.

Production relations must keep in step with the nature of the productive forces. Only when the productive forces cannot continue to develop without changing production relations is it necessary and positive to change production relations. Now that production relations have been changed and practice has proved that such a change is appropriate, they should remain relatively stable for a certain period of time in order to promote the growth and development of the new productive forces and to make themselves more perfect. The establishment and perfection of the agricultural production responsibility system is related to the distribution system and forms of management and involves the question of reforms in production relations. If we do not act in accordance with objective economic laws but make changes at will, we will certainly become divorced from reality and divorced from the masses. In the end, we will have to take the road back. We have lessons in this respect. In the past, we thought that it was better to have larger size and a higher degree of public ownership in the collective economy and disregarded the level of the productive forces at a certain period and in a certain locality.

We made constant changes in the direction of achieving a "higher degree of public ownership" and "larger size." This led to the mistake of eating out of a big pot and egalitarianism and affected the development of production for a long time.

Since the third plenary session, in order to corect this mistake, we have implemented throughout the country and in groups the agricultural production responsibility system, in particular the "system of contracts linked with output." This has resulted in great changes in the rural collective economy. In the past, the same pattern of collective economy was adopted throughout the country. At present, the scales of organization vary, the ways of management differ and the principle of suiting measures to local conditions is fully implemented. Consequently, there are evident increases in production and we have won the full support of the masses. Practice has proved that this change is a success. From now on, we should earnestly perfect the responsibility system for a period of time and should not have frequent changes. The agricultural economic base in our country is still relatively weak and will not be able to stand undue shocks. We must listen to and accept the masses' demand on making no further changes.

The masses are afraid of changes. What changes are they really afraid of? It seems that they are afraid of changing back to the egalitarianism of the past and eating out of a big pot. They are also afraid of changing back to small-scale farming by individual owners. Most of them want to shake off the big pot, arbitrary and impracticable directions and the unhealthy trends of some management personnel by means of the responsibility system of "contracts linked with output." The central authorities have put forth that there will be "no changes in two aspects." This precisely reflects the demand of the masses and has laid down two very basic policy limits. If leading bodies at all levels earnestly and responsibly do a good job in carrying out propaganda and education work among the masses so that the basic policy of making no changes in two aspects for a long time to come which has been put forth by the central authorities can be grasped by the masses, we will be able to do a good job in perfecting the responsiblity system with the enthusiastic support of millions of people and be able to arouse the revolutionary spirit of the masses and cadres in pushing our work forward by a big margin.

We should have a general goal in perfecting the responsibility system, that is, we should search for a socialist agricultural economic system that is conducive to making rural production prosperous. Whether this system is superior depends on whether or not it can meet the following demands: It should be conducive both to giving play to the superiority of collective unified management and to arousing the enthusiasm of individual members; it should give consideration for both the collective interests of production teams and the individual interests of peasants and the general interests of the country's construction; it should pay attention to both the short-term effect on feeding the people and the long-term effect on construction; it should encourage the peasants to display their special skills in striving to become rich through labor and should also help those who are poor and in difficulty in making common development. If it meets the foregoing demands, it will be be able to ensure unimpeded development of the social productive forces. Agricultural collectizication started in our country 30 years ago and the economic foundation and work foundation in different localities vary. The masses will have different choices of the forms of the responsibility system. What should be under unified management and what should be included in the contract system depend on the conditions of respective localities. Measures should be adopted accordingly so that the foregoing demands can be met under different conditions. In perfecting the production responsibility system, we should take upholding the system of public ownership of the means of production such as land and upholding the party leadership as prerequisites, encourage cadres to proceed from reality, support the creative spirit of the masses and endeavor to suit measures to local conditions so that our socialist cause will develop vigorously.

Another common demand of rural areas is to promptly solve some pressing problems the masses are facing. It is precisely as everybody is saying: "The situation in rural areas is very favorable but there are still a lot of problems." Our country has a vast territory and the conditions in different localities vary greatly. Before any correct policy of the central authorities can be turned into actual action by millions of people, it must go through numerous intermediate links. It is thus inevitably influenced and affected in some way. For example, the time for implementing the production responsibility system which started the action of millions of households was short (if calculated separately, several months were usually used in each county) and preliminary discussion was not sufficient. The masses immediately responded to the call whereas the leadership lagged behind. Under these circumstances, some problems were bound to occur.

For example: In some places, organization is lax and social order is not good; land is inappropriately divided or used; insufficient consideration is given to a small number of households that have difficulties; the contract system has not been established or although it has been established, some people violate it; financial work is in confusion and there is nobody to straighten it out; in a very few places, public property was divided or taken away and there was nobody to stop this; no one is in charge of public works and enterprises that should be under unified management and operation; family planning is out of control and education is affected; each family or household is full of enthusiasm but there is no planning for public affairs, and so on. Compared with the achievements we have made, these problems are secondary, partial and temporary. However, if they remain unsolved for a long time, they will hinder the advancement of the collective economy and will even loosen and disintegrate it resulting in serious losses. If we grasp our work firmly, these problems are not difficult to solve. The key lies in leadership. The experiences of Shanxi, Anhui, Hubei and Shandong Provinces can be used for reference. What these provinces have done is first of all to demand that party organizations at all levels, particularly county CCP committees, should bestir themselves, should dare to face these problems squarely and should not avoid them, should not blame each other but should dare to hold themselves responsible for their work and seize opportunities to rectify basic organizations, train cadres and unify their thinking. The system of cadres' personal responsibility should be universally set up and rewards and punishments should be given justly. A sufficient number of cadres should stay at selected basic levels of carry out investigations and to handle and solve problems in one production team after another. They should give appropriate advice and should work carefully and seriously as cadres did during the early stage of the cooperative movement and should attach even more importance to the mass line than in the past. In this way, things will take on a completely new look in 1 year or, at most, 2 or 3 years.

The central authorities' policies have already won the enthusiastic support of the masses and have laid a foundation for further developing rural work. Their tremendous role in promoting all kinds of rural construction will become more and more evident. If we strengthen party leadership and rely firmly on the masses, we will be able to overcome all difficulties and solve all problems. This is our conclusion.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES ATTENTION TO LAND PROBLEMS

[Article by Wang Jialiang [3769 1367 2733], Zhang Yuerong [1728 2588 5554] and Zhang Qiaolong [1728 1564 3781]: "We Must Give Serious Attention to the Study of the Land Problems"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang, in his government work report delivered at the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, pointed out: "Our country has a vast population but not enough arable land; this contradiction will become more and more acute as the population increases. Our state policy should therefore be to treasure and use every inch of land rationally." Land problems have already become an important strategic issue in our socialist construction and they require very careful study.

Population and Land

The seriousness of the population problem is generally recognized. The total world population has been estimated at 4.437 billion in 1980. The forecast for the year 2000 is 6.1 billion and for the year 2025 is 8.3 billion. Areas with a vast population and not enough arable land or areas where the productivity of the land is low will feel the pinch of increasing grain shortage. According to the state statistical bureau, our population at the end of 1980 was 980 million and the forecast for the year 2000 is 1.22 billion (annual progressive growth rate K equals 0.01). If control is not properly carried out, it can reach 1.48 billion (annual progressive growth rate K equals 0.02). The population figure is relative. A vast population in itself does not constitute any threat. It may also be considered as a kind of resource. However, the population and the land area must be in harmony and there must be a proportionate relationship between them. Food for the people at present is basically obtained either directly or indirectly from the land.

Judging from the standpoint of the requirement of agricultural, forestry and animal husbandry products by mankind, we may divide the land into agricultural land and nonagricultural land. The former refers to farmland, grassland, forest land, orchard land and fish-breeding land. The latter refers to land used for factories, mines, communications and urban and rural construction. It is necessary to ensure a fixed amount of agricultural land for a fixed amount of population. Regardless of the quality of population control, the actual amount of agricultural land per capita will only decrease and will not increase. The decrease of land per capita is the direct consequence of the population problem. This outcome is determined by the limitation of land.

Land will become more and more valuable. In China, the reduction of every 2 mu of land would be tantamount to reducing the biological food source of one person. An increase of 100 million in the population would require an additional 200 million mu of arable land. In studying the population problem, we cannot but at the same time study the land problems.

Land and National Economic Construction

The development of various construction projects of the national economy has brought great advantages for increasing the utilization rate of land and has supplied technical and material conditions for improving land productivity. But on the other land, various construction projects are stretching out their hands in all directions to take land from agriculture, gradually nibbling away and occupying a great deal of good farmland and slowly offsetting the benefits they have brought. The area of arable land in our country was 1.67 billion mu in 1957. The area in 1977, including the 256 million mu obtained from reclamation, was only 1.49 billion mu. There has been an actual reduction of 436 million mu of arable land during the 20 years, and this is equivalent to the total area of arable land in Shandong, Henan, Hebei and Heilongjiang in 1979. The amount of arable land per capita has been reduced from the 2.7 mu of the 1950's to 1.5 mu in the 1980's. Moreover, the land taken up by various construction projects of the state and collectives is generally good farmland situated around cities and towns, and the reclaimed land is generally of poorer quality in remote places. Just after liberation, Beijing Municipality had 9.1 million mu of arable land. According to statistics, there were only 6.4 million mu in 1978, or an average reduction of 100,000 mu a year. The former area of vegetable farms in the suburbs has already been reduced by one-third. This is a reason for the tight supply of vegetables in Beijing.

The development of various undertakings must take up land, but land is also an irreplaceable means of production for producing the foodstuffs required by people. The population growth and the goal of improving living standards also demand increasing the area of agricultural land. The contradiction between the two has become more and more acute and has already become an important aspect of the land problems.

Land and Environment

The quality of the environment has a direct bearing on the productivity of the land and the quality of agricultural products. As a result of the development of modern industries, the serious problem of the environmental pollution has become the focus of worldwide attention. Naturally, the key to solving this problem lies in controlling and eliminating the source of pollution. However, such sources are widely scattered throughout agricultural areas and already imperiling agricultural land. Some farm crops have been poisoned and their yield has fallen, and a part of the farm produce has been polluted and is no longer fit for consumption. This threat is taking place and developing, and if not heeded, it will soon become a serious problem. This is an important aspect of the environmental problem. However, an even more serious problem in land environment is the indiscriminate use of agricultural land such as the indiscriminate use of pasture land and the indiscriminate felling of trees. The consequences of all these factors have affected the already insufficient and low-quality agricultural land. In less serious cases, they have further reduced its productivity. In more serious cases, they have turned it into barren land. According to calculations, about one-third of the arable land throughout the country at present is of poor quality. The area affected by erosion has increased by 510 million mu compared with the figure before liberation. Poor quality pastures in usable grasslands (producing less than 200 to 300 jin of fresh grass per mu) amount to 70 percent. of which desert grasslands (producing about 100 jin of fresh grass per mu) accounts for 1.21 billion me. The area lost to sand throughout the country has increased by 900 mu compared with the figure before liberation. Forest reserve is only 3.9 cubic meter per mu (world average is 7.3 cubic meter per mu), and annual growth is only 0.12 cubic meter per mu (developed countries have more than 0.2 cubic meter per mu).

What merits attention is that this system is a kind of downward spiral. The deterioration of the environment leads to a lowering of productivity and a reduction of usable land. Moreover, the lowering of productivity also reacts on the environment and speeds up its deterioration. If this cycle continues unabated, the whole ecological system will be seriously destroyed.

Land and Policies

The condition of the land problems is closely related to the formulation and implementation of relevant specific and general policies. For example, "Method of Requisitioning Land for National Construction" promulgated in 1958 has played a positive role in solving the use of land for capital construction. However, judging by the present situation, the criterion for land compensation according to this method is inclined to be set too low and there is not much distinction in the compensation paid for good land in suburbs and for secondary land in remote places. Moreover, after a lump-sum compensation has been paid by the state, the unit using the land need not shoulder any further economic responsibility. This has caused the units to apply for more land and to requisition better land. If the measures of paying a higher compensation for the requisitioning of good land in the surburbs and making the units using the land pay a higher land tax every year are carried out, and if special economic preference is given to the requisitioning of nonagricultural land in remote places, this kind of policy will encourage the economical use of farmland. At present, some of these policies are themselves correct, but if we do not carefully take into consideration the land problems and adopt suitable measures when publicizing and implementing them, the result could also be very serious. For example, when implementing "responsibility fields" and "private plots," some of the commune members have built houses and tombs on such land. Therefore, the State Council in April 1981 promulgated the "emergency circular restricting the seizure of farmland for building houses." Also, in the factories jointly operated by urban and rural areas, some of the localities have practiced the method of the urban area supplying the money and technology and the rural area supplying the land and labor. If we do not adopt suitable management policies but allow this to develop freely, the pressure on the land problems will increase, numerous unplanned houses will be built in urban surburbs, and an enormous amount of farmland will be taken up.

Various policies which involve agriculture must take into full consideration their direct and indirect role on land, and there must be explicit demands and measures for protecting agricultural land and for fostering the improvement of the productivity of land.

CHINA DAILY: DROUGHT THREATENS SUMMER WHEAT

WA151106 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] With spring sowing underway in southern and central China, some parts of northern China are still threatened by drought, affecting almost 200 million mu (13.3 million hectares) of farmland, CHINA DAILY has learned.

The areas affected by drought include Hebei, Shandong, Henan, Shanxi, Shaanxi Provinces and Beijing and Tianjin Municipalities, which are the main production areas of the summer-wheat crop.

Water stored in the 58 major reservoirs in Hebei, Shandong, Shanxi Provinces and Beijing and Tianjin Municipalities are now only 328.5 million cubic metres, 400 million down on last year.

Rain and snow have eased the shortage in rural farmland.

The peasants, however, have thrown themselves into an all-out drive to irrigate the wheat fields by every means possible.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON PROBLEMS OF RETIREMENT

[Article on Zhong Zhen [6850 3914]: "Random Thoughts on Retreat and Advance"]

[Text] In the past 2 years or so, whenever there is nothing on my mind, I always ponder the problem of "retreat." Where should I retreat to? What should I do after the retreat? Disquieting thoughts are always surging in my mind. Sometimes I am confused, but sometimes I am sensible enough.

After repeatedly asking myself, I find out that the problem of "advance" and "retreat" has been deeply rooted in my mind. Has the party not always taught us that if we fail to make progress, we will inevitably lag behind? Furthermore, when I was young, I took an oath in front of the party that I would strive for the communist cause all my life. Due to the change in the revolutionary situation, I carried out various kinds of work and was eventually assigned to the basic level and worked as a leading cadre. When I was getting older and older, I thought that it would be perfectly justified for me to hold the post until I was buried in the Babaoshan cemetery. In the past 2 years, proceeding from the situation as a whole, I find out that this problem has become more and more acute. Since I am now over 60 years old, it is time for me to retreat! But what will I do after the retreat? Retire? Spend my remaining years in happiness? I hate to link these matters with myself. There are a lot of tasks which I have not accomplished. I will feel ashamed if I retreat in this way now. However, if someone asks me to go on working, I will inevitably feel that my ability falls short of my wishes. Very often, I cannot complete the work which I have planned and there is more work which I have never thought of. After making a sober analysis, I do realize that there are a number of talented cadres who are younger than myself, work hard and enjoy the support of the masses. If I give those comrades a free hand in their work after my retreat, a new situation will surely occur. After I retreat, our cause will make big strides forward. It seems that I have come around to the idea now.

Sometimes I feel that since I still have strength remaining, I should contribute it to the party's cause. After repeatedly pondering the matter, I realize that according to the division of labor in our society, some people can pursue their professions all their lives, such as old doctors, writers.... As long as they have real ability and learning, they will not give much trouble because of the increase of their number. But this is not the case with full-time leading cadres, because they administer our country at their own posts. First of all, their number should be limited and it would never do to have too many of them.

Furthermore, they should be full of vigor and have both ability and political integrity. Otherwise, they will harm our country. If there are a great number of cadres at all levels who can only contribute their remaining strength at their own post to the economic construction, our cause can only progress very slowly no matter how good our guiding principle is. Therefore, those full-time leading cadres can find places where they can contribute their remaining strength only after they have left their leading posts. The practice of those comrades who have already retreated proves that as long as they seek out these "places" seriously, they will succeed in finding them.

It might happen that not all cadres who have retreated can find proper and new places where they can continue to make their contribution. The rest are faced with the problem of spiritual sustenance. A fairly large number of people in our generation grew up in a tight collective life and they have formed a habit of regarding work as their life's prime desire. They have neither possessed any special skill nor pursued any hobby during their spare time. They have not read too many books. Once they retreat, they do not know what course to take. If they fail to consciously find a way of accommodating themselves to the new situation after they retreat, they will suffer greatly from spiritual depression. The related scientists should also study this subject. It can be expected that the retirement age of leading persons in the future will be lower than the present one. It is reported that schools for the aged have been established in Japan which offer various courses. The old people are studying in these schools neither for promotion nor degrees. They study in order to satisfy spiritual need. They will also study subjects which they were fond of all their lives, but were too busy to puruse. To maintain their links with society, it is good for them to study these subjects when they get old and are not too busy. This is also a good measure aimed at promoting the spiritual civilization of the society.

In a word, the present situation where each wave pushes at the one ahead and surges forward has urged people to make a prompt decision. The gradual retreat of veteran cadres is in accord with the law of society. However, one needs courage in order to retreat. In a certain sense, more courage is needed to retreat than to "advance" at that age.

SECURITY MINISTER VIEWS POLICY TOWARD CRIMINALS

HK140906 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 6, 25 Mar 82 pp 8-9

[Article by BAN YUE TAN reporter Xu Xinhua [1776 1800 5478]: "Victory for the Party's Policy of Transformation -- on an Interview With Public Security Minister Zhao Cangbi"]

[Text] The 22d Session of the 5th National People's Congress Standing Committee adopted a resolution to grant an amnesty to all former KMT personnel of party, government, army and special services below the county or regimental level who were kept in custody and to grant them political rights. This has had positive responses at home and abroad. The reporter had an interview with Public Security Minister Zhao Cangbi to discuss the significance of this act and other relevant issues. Zhao accepted the interview with pleasure.

First of all, Zhao Cangbi reviewed the achievements scored since China implemented the policy of transforming criminals through labor over the past 30 years. He said, "We have not only effectively transformed the general counterrevolutionary criminals and the ordinary criminals, but have also successfully transformed the Japanese POW's, the POW's of the Manchu and Monggol puppet regimes and the KMT POW's. On 17 September 1959, the Ninth Session of the Second National People's Congress Standing Committee passed 'the resolution on granting amnesty to criminals who have given up evil and returned to good.' On 4 December, the Supreme People's Court granted a special amnesty to the first batch of KMT POW's and the POW's of the Manchu and Monggol puppet regimes. From 1960 to 1966, five more batches of POW's were granted amnesty. In March 1975, in accordance with the resolution adopted at the Second Session of the Fourth National People's Congress Standing Committee, the Supreme People's Court granted a special amnesty to all POW's in custody.

"In December 1975, the Chinese judicial organs leniently granted amnesty to all former KMT personnel of party, government, army and special services at or above the county or regimental level. At present, the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress has decided to leniently grant amnesty to all former KMT personnel of party, government, army and special services below the county or regimental level. In other words, after this amnesty is granted, all former KMT personnel of party, government, army and special services in custody will have been released. This is something amazing. It is significant in further consolidating and developing China's political stability and unity and in mobilizing all positive factors to promote the socialist modernization."

Upon hearing this, the reporter asked Minister Zhao Cangbi with great enthusiasm, "What made us so successful in transforming these criminals?"

Zhao Changbi said, "This is the victory of the party's policy of transformation. Long before the eve of national liberation, Comrade Mao Zedong had already expounded the significance of transforming the reactionary class and the reactionaries in his article 'On the People's Democratic Dictatorship.' He said, 'let them reform themselves through labor and become new people.' In the later stage of the movement to suppress counterrevolutionaries in 1941, the CCP Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong gave instructions on carrying out reform through labor within the country and stipulated specific policies, duties, principles and methods for it. Over the past 30 years or so, we have accumulated much experience in the work of reform-through-labor, including establishing the viewpoint of transforming man and implementing the policy of 'reform first, production second' for reform-through-labor work. We have adhered to integrating control and penalty with ideological reform; labor and production with politics, culture, technology and education; ideological reform with guarantees for material aspects of life; and the execution of law with educaion, persuasion and remedial work. We have strengthened political and ideological work and organized criminals to study politics, science and liberal arts so as to reform them in liberal ways by means of the socialist legal system. We have correctly organized labor and production so that the criminals will change their thinking, cultivate the habit of working and learn production skills. We have implemented revolutionary humanitarianism and treated criminals as human beings. Feudal fascist practices such as corporal punishment and maltreatment are prohibited. We have provided them with sufficient food and clothes, and normally they do not work more than 8 hours a day. We have actively improved their living and sanitation conditions and provided them timely treatment when they are sick. Local and foreign visitors who have visited our prisons and reform-through-labor units have all admitted that the prisons and farms for reforming criminals through labor are actually schools, plants, and farms. They are different in nature from prisons of the old society."

"After these transformed criminals are released, how do they behave?" the reporter asked.

Zhao Cangbi told the reporters, "Most of them have become new people and their conduct is good or relatively good; not many of them commit crimes again. Some even become engineers, technicians, medical doctors and technologists. Many more become skilled workers. They have made contributions to socialist construction. Evidence has proved that China's policy of transforming criminals through labor is successful and it is applauded by the masses. It also enjoys a good reputation in the world."

Talking about settling these released criminals after the amnesty is granted, the public security minister said: "This is the key to doing a good job of the amnesty; all localities will make suitable arrangements through various channels. Jobs will be arranged for people who are capable of working, while those who cannot work will be supported by their families and relatives. If they have any difficulties, the local government will grant social relief funds to them. The government will make arrangements for those who do not have a family or any relatives in accordance with their situations. At present, the political and economic situations of our country are good. However, many problems still exist in arranging employment.

"The relevant prefectures and units must proceed from the general situation, strive to overcome all difficulties and actively do a good job of settling criminals so that they can live and work in peace and contentment. We do believe that in doing a good job of this work, we will continue to exert a good influence at home and abroad."

LENIN CITED ON STRENGTHENING LEGAL SYSTEM

[Article by Liu Likai [0491 4539 0418]: "Lenin on Strengthening the Socialist Legal System"]

[Text] The basic spirit of strengthening the socialist legal system as advocated by Lenin is of great significance to the realization of our country's four modernizations and to the strengthening of the legal system for the sake of cracking down on illegal activities and crimes in the economic field.

Lenin greatly stressed the extreme importance of perfecting the socialist legal system He deemed that if the proletarian political power did not establish and perfect the legal system, it would not be able to maintain normal production order, work order and public order, thus halting the development of production and destabilizing the political situation. For this reason, he made an appeal to the people, saying: "The laws and instructions of the Soviet Government must be faithfully observed, and care must be taken that they are obeyed by all." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 29, p 509) To enable all the people to faithfully observe the socialist legal system, the extraordinary Sixth All-Russian Congress of Soviets adopted on the basis of Lenin's proposal the resolution "on faithfully observing the law." The resolution "called on all the citizens of the republic and all organizations and public office personnel under the Soviet Government to observe in a very strict way the laws of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic and all the past and present resolutions, regulations and instructions of the central and local regimes."

From the second day of the October Revolution, under the leadership of Lenin and at his suggestion, the Russian Soviet Government promulgated the "peace decree" and the "land decree." After this, it gradually promulgated a series of decrees and regulations concerning the nationalization of banks, the nationalization of most important industrial enterprises and the workers' supervision, and also established the legal judicial organs, namely, the Soviet People's Courts. In 1918, it also promulgated the Soviet state's first constitution, namely, the Russian Soviet Constitution. These decrees and regulations and particularly the promulgation and the implementation of the constitution consolidated the great achievements in the October Revolution, safeguarded the fundamental interests of the masses of workers and peasants, and decided that Soviet Russia should advance along the socialist road. Soon after the conclusion of the civil war, Lenin immediately placed the enactment of various codes on the order of the day. Within a few years after 1921, the Soviet Government enacted the "Russian Soviet criminal code," the "Russian Soviet civil code," the "Russian Soviet land code," the "Russian Soviet labor code," the codes of criminal and civil procedure and other important codes. It also enacted the "organic rules of courts" and the "regulations of procuratorial organs," thus bringing about the building of the Soviet state legal system on a considerable scale. The building of the legal system also played an important role in promoting the rehabilitation and development of the national economy, in improving the maintenance of social order and in further strengthening the Soviet Government.

Lenin held that the establishment of the labor code and labor discipline during the socialist economic construction was of great significance. He noted: "If we are not to indulge in utopianism, we must not think that having overthrown capitalism, people will at once learn to work for society without any standard of right; and indeed the abolition of capitalism does not immediately create the economic premises for such a change." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 3, p 252)

Lenin refuted the erroneous propaganda of the "leftist communists" who said that "enforcing labor discipline means retrogression" and that "enforcing labor discipline may put the working class into slavery"..."Lenin deemed that these arguments were completely wrong and showed a complete lack of understanding of the importance of enforcing labor discipline to the building of socialism. Among the masses of workers, a very few of them do not observe discipline and violate the law and discipline. With regard to these people, we must adopt some coercive measures. With regard to some particularly serious cases involving some of these people, we must also investigate and affix the legal responsibilities for such cases.

Lenin resolutely advocated hitting hard at all illegal and criminal activities in the economic field such as speculation and profiteering, malpractices for selfish ends, graft and embezzlement, and offering and accepting bribes. Throughout Lenin's Soviet state leadership work career, the Soviets time and again promulgated decrees against speculation, malpractices for selfish ends and embezzlement of state property, and ordered organizations at all levels to carry out such decrees. Following the implementation of the new economic policy in the spring of 1921, private enterprises became active and there were more and more contracts between Soviet state organizations and private businessmen. As a result, all kinds of malpractices for selfish ends emerged by exploiting the situation. In order to hit hard at these illegal and criminal activities in the economic field, the Ninth All-Russian Congress of Soviets held in December 1921 adopted the "instructions on questions of economic activities" which were drafted by Lenin. The instructions stressed: The people's courts of the republic should keep a close watch over the activities of private traders and manufacturers and sternly punish the slightest attempt on their part to evade rigid compliance with the laws of the republic. The people's courts should encourage the masses of workers and peasants to play a practical part in ensuring enforcement of the law. The people's courts should take more vigorous action against economic mismangement. This is quite necessary. "Such an action should be taken not only for the purpose of increasing responsibility for the evil which is so difficult to combat under present circumstances, but also for the purpose of focusing the attention of the masses of workers and peasants on this extremely important matter, and of securing a practical object, viz, greater success in the economic field." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 33, p 152)

Lenin stressed: The Soviet People's Courts must wage an unsparing struggle against those "senior officials" who go against the Soviet laws, grafters and people accepting bribes, and must also seriously handle questions concerning these people. The people's courts must take proper disciplinary actions against those administrative personnel who seriously neglect their duties. This is primarily aimed at making clear to the masses of people the consequences of dereliction of duties and dispelling the widespread and prevalent erroneous concept in society that no disciplinary action will be taken against such personnel neglecting their duties.

With regard to being law-abiding, all citizens of the Soviet state are equal. The Soviet laws must not only be observed by ordinary workers and peasants but must also be observed by party and government functionaries. The resolution adopted by the Russian Soviet Central Executive Committee on 21 August 1921 stressed: "It is absolutely imperative that all activities of the Soviet Government and its functionaries be in strict compliance with laws and regulations in force. It is imperative that all the Soviet people clearly understand that the implementation of the principles of our revolutionary laws and discipline is one of the most important demands made by the Soviet Government." With regard to enforcing laws and discipline, even central organs and leaders of the central authorities are no exception. Lenin once said that every court should treat him and others all alike. He said that if he himself did not strictly enforce laws and discipline, he must also resign. Lenin was as good as his word. The Soviet working people unanimously and publicly acknowledged that Lenin was a model in observing the socialist legal system.

The Bolshevik was the "sole ruling party running the state." Whether members of the ruling party strictly observe the legal system has a bearing on whether the socialist legal system can be really implemented and also affects the ruling party's prestige among the masses of the people. If members of the ruling party and particularly leading cadres of the ruling party carry out and observe the legal system in an exemplary way, they will set good examples for the broad masses of the people. However, if they abuse their power, break the law in the capacity of the executors of the law and violate laws and discipline, they will greatly impair the ruling party's prestige among the masses of the people and our appeal to the broad masses of the people for observing the law and discipline will be devoid of convincing power. For this reason, Lenin resolutely maintained that it is imperative to pass "heavier" sentences on those party members and particularly those leading cadres of the party who violate the law and discipline.

Lenin held that the fundamental guarantee of a real implementation of the socialist legal system is to mobilize the people to supervise enforcement of the laws by soviet governments at all levels. The measures for carrying out this proposition were that "the soviets put into effect proposals and demands for the active participation of the masses not only in discussing general rules, decisions and laws, and in controlling their fulfillment, but also directly in their implementation." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 27, p 194) The soviets must try to attract more nonparty workers and peasants to participate in judicial and procuratorial work and to exercise effective supervision over leading organs at all levels. If the soviets fail to do so, they will not be able to apply effective sanctions against "large numbers of unlawful practices" and they will also not be able to really overcome bureaucratism within leading organs.

BAN YUE TAN CITES LENIN ON LEASE SYSTEM

[Article by Xue Qiliang [5641 0796 0081]: "Lenin on the Lease System During the Period of New Economic Policy in the Soviet Union"]

[Text] In 1921 the Soviet regime, which had been in power since the October Revolution, decided, on the basis of Lenin's suggestions, to replace the wartime policy of communism with the new economic policy. The lease system was one very important aspect of the new economic policy (in addition to this there was also the grain tax system and free trade). The basic idea of the lease system was to allow the Soviet state to sign contracts with foreign capitalists for the leasing of factories, mines, forests and land. Once leased, these enterprises would be managed by foreign capitalists for a certain period of time, with profits from products being divided between the foreign capitalists and the state. On the expiration of the contract, the state would either take back or buy back the leased enterprise. The use of this method led to the introduction of capital, equipment and technology from the advanced capitalist nations, and helped in promoting the development of Russian industry.

Between 1921, when the Soviet Union began signing lease contracts with foreign companies, and 1 October 1926, a total of 144 lease contracts were signed (24 in the mining industry, 41 in the processing industry, 36 in the commercial sector and 43 others). By 1927, 73 enterprises had been established on the basis of lease agreements. In leased enterprises in the mining industry, foreign companies took part in the exploitation of the Soviet Union's gold, copper, manganese, coal, oil and other mineral resources. In the industrial sector, foreign lease-holders assisted in the production of bearings, electrical goods, gas welders and other products. By 1925 foreign capitalists had invested 32 million rubles in leased enterprises and by October 1928 the total amount of investment was 57.7 million rubles. Between 1924 and 1925 these leased enterprises employed a total of 7,112 workers and by October 1928 the number of workers had increased to 20,000, of which 10 percent were foreigners. The lease system, which was basically a system of state capitalism supervised and regulated by a proletarian state, was of great significance to the development of the Soviet Union's own industry and to the proletarian state's efforts to overcome various economic difficulties.

The implementation of the lease system, however, gave rise to a serious ideological struggle within the Bolshevik Party. The party at the time was plagued by "two types of what were essentially petty bourgeois errors" ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 32, p 330): On the one hand, there was the rightist opportunism of Bukharin which believed that because the Russian economy was backward and economic strength did not match political strength it was inadvisable to seize political power. This type of "well-padded" analysis was, according to Lenin, nothing more than a surrender to the capitalist class. On the other hand, there was the leftist opportunism of Trotsky (at the beginning of the new economic policy Bukharin had also supported this position) which saw the introduction of the lease system as a "compromise" with the capitalist class. Lenin offered an incisive analysis of the situation saying, "While such people may appear to be 'exceptionally revolutionary' when it comes to any arduous revolutionary work which they have analyzed in depth, weighed up and evaluated in terms of the most difficult transitional situation, they are incapable of action. Lenin also pointed out that, anyone who says that using money to attract highly trained and cultured capitalists as a form of compromise obviously "lacks a basic understanding of the economic tasks involved in socialist reconstruction."

Lenin also gives a comprehensive analysis of the struggle with foreign capitalists that must inevitably arise from the introduction of the lease system. He pointed out that although the Soviet Union may have signed lease contracts with foreign capitalists, they had certainly not ignored the true nature of the exploiting class. The reason why they could tolerate such sacrifice was that it enabled them "to obtain the most advanced technology and equipment with which to establish the necessary base." This would help to "rapidly improve (to a certain degree) the state of production and the livelihood of peasants and workers." The lease system was "not at all dangerous as power remained in the hands of workers and peasants and there could never be a revival of the landlord and capitalist systems of ownership."

Lenin was very sensitive to the fact that the implementation of the lease system would be fraught with struggle. This was because "the lease system is also a form of struggle, a continuation, in another form, of the class struggle and is in no way an attempt to replace class struggle with class harmony." This was a message to the whole party that they must keep a clear head and must, during the concrete implementation of the lease system, remain steadfast in their proletarian stand, and strive to maintain their own independence. And in order to resist the attacks and corrosive influences of bourgeois thinking, they must carry out a just, advantageous and restrained struggle against the capitalist class.

Thanks to the correct leadership of Lenin's Bolshevik Party, the lease system achieved considerable success, playing an important role in reviving and developing the Soviet economy and helping the economy to overcome temporary difficulties. Between 1924 and 1925 the Soviet Union earned an income of 6.8 million rubles from the lease system; in 1927 they earned 16.11 million rubles and in 1928 10.1 million rubles. After the First 5-Year Plan, however, the harsh terms imposed by foreign capitalists meant that no further progress was made in developing the lease system.

Almost half a century has now passed since the Soviet Union first introduced the lease system. Proceeding from the actual conditions in our country, our party has decided to advocate an open-door policy. While upholding this open-door policy, however, we must remain firm in our commitment to struggle against the corrosive influences of bourgeois thinking; and by recalling this period of Soviet history and studying Lenin's comments on the lease system we will find important guidance.

ANSHAN IRON, STEEL COMPLEX TO BE REVAMPED

[Text] Anshan, April 14 (XINHUA) -- The State Council has approved a 1,246 million yuan (about 700 million U.S. dollars) plan to technically transform China's leading steel center of Anshan before the end of 1985.

The plan, which aims at increased output, better quality, more variety of products, and improved environment, is part of the overall policy of achieving industrial expansion mainly by revamping existing enterprises.

The 159 projects to be carried out in the technical transformation involve iron smelting, steel making, steel rolling, energy saving and environmental protection. Work will be focused on upgrading the rolling mills to raise the quality and mechanical property of the rolled steel.

Refurbishing the No 3 steel mill, also a major project in the plan, will include building a new top-blown converter which, together with the other converters, will replace the five old open hearth furnaces. A continuous casting machine with a capacity ranging between 800,000 to one million tons will also be built to turn out blooms for the rolling mills.

When the revamping is completed, Anshan's annual production capacity of steel will rise from six million tons in 1980 to seven million tons, and that of rolled steel from 4.21 million tons to 4.53 million tons. The complex's consumption of energy, materials and power will be reduced.

New products needed by the light industry such as enamel sheet, cold-rolled sheet steel and cold-rolled titanium strip steel for bicycles will be turned out.

Forty-four pollution control projects will be finished during the period. According to earlier reports, the complex has since 1978 completed 58 projects which treat 2.22 million cubic meters of waste gas and 4.890 tons of waste water per hour and 2.05 million tons of slag a year.

The iron and steel complex, which was established in 1917, has been technically improved and greatly expanded in the past 32 years. It needs to be revamped again with up-to-date technology and equipment to cope with the current economic readjustment program, said an official of the complex. Production will not be affected during the technical transformation, he added.

One thousand million yuan of the expenses for the technical transformation will come from the complex's profits and funds and the rest will be in bank loans.

CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION COMMISSION HOLDS FORUM

OW150313 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 12 Apr 82

[Text] The State Capital Construction Commission today called a forum of directors of provincial, municipal and autonomous regional capital construction committees, with Minister Han Guang presiding. Peng Min, vice minister of the commission, pointed out in his speech that the building time for capital construction projects must be shortened and the investment results raised. He said that the scale of construction should not be expanded while the plan is being put into effect.

Summing up the progress achieved in capital construction during the first quarter of this year, Peng Min said: The investment in capital construction completed during the first quarter of this year in various parts of the country constituted 13.8 percent of the annual plan, or an increase of 25.8 percent compared with the same period last year. Construction progress for some key projects in the energy, light and textile, communications and transport, and raw material industries has been speeded up. Although we had a good start in capital construction during the first quarter of this year, we must also see that the task for this year still remains burdensome, he continued. We should continue to implement the readjustment policy this year and shift our focus to raising economic results in capital construction. To this end, we should do well in the following areas:

1. We should do a good job in shortening the period of construction and raising economic results. He said the construction period for large and medium projects from now on should match the previous best. With the exception of a small number of projects involving an extraordinarily large volume of work, the construction period for projects in general should be shortened from the present 8 years to less than 5 years. Except for those projects started in the past 2 years, large and medium projects now underway should be completed within the sixth 5-year plan period.

2. We should do well in completing operational and other key projects and in fulfilling this year's capital construction plan. All these projects should be completed as planned to ensure that investment plays its role. We should also do well in particular in the construction of projects for the energy, communications and transport, building material and light and textile industries, housing for workers and staff, schools and hospitals. While emphasizing speed, we should also keep an eye on construction quality and safety. We should conserve timber in a planned way.

3. We should do well in reorganizing units in charge of construction and planning units. We should, in the course of reorganization, launch activities to learn from, catch up with and overtake advanced units.

4. We should do a good job during the early stage of construction.

5. We should put forward sound legislation governing the management of capital construction. We should continue to follow up reform in capital construction investment in shifting from appropriating funds to extending loans. We should also do a good job in trying to run prospecting and designing units as enterprises in selected localities and sum up experience in this work. We should reform, step by step, the present labor system in enterprises in charge of construction.

LIGHT INDUSTRY RECORDS 1ST QUARTER ACHIEVEMENTS

[Text] Beijing, April 12 (XINHUA) -- The speedy growth of China's light industry, which has continued onto the fourth year, represents a major success for the country's policy of putting emphasis on production of consumer goods. China's light industrial output value registered a 14.6 percent increase in the first three months of this year over the same 1981 period, reaching 67,250 million yuan. This was achieved on top of an average annual growth rate of 14 percent in the three years from 1979 through 1981. An important reason for the spurt was the priority in supply of raw materials, electricity and fuel, and equipment for technical transformation and in transportation given by the government to light industry. The good harvests reaped in the past few years providing raw materials for light industry were also a factor.

The construction and expansion of sugar refineries in Heilongjiang, Guangdong, Guangxi and other parts of the country last year enlarged the country's sugar refining capacity by 174,000 tons a year. Two big chemical fiber plants, the Liaoyang petrochemical fiber works and the Sichuan vinylon plant, were completed and put into operation in 1981.

Among the outstanding features of the first quarter's light industrial production were speedy increases in output of durable consumer goods and items using agricultural products as raw materials.

More than 2.85 million sewing machines and over five million bicycles were produced in the first three months of this year, registering increases of 37.4 and 42 percent compared with the corresponding period of 1981. More than 100 million bicycles and 50 million sewing machines are now in use in China.

And, in spite of the fact that the average daily output of these items is now double that of 1978, quality brand products still fall far short of demand, particularly in the countryside. In the first quarter of this year, a total of 7.03 million watches were produced, an increase of 12.9 percent over the 1981 period. At the end of 1981, there were 52.2 watches in every 100 persons in China's towns and cities, but the figure was much smaller in the countryside. Peasants in China are showing great interest in watches of moderate prices. There were increases ranging from 12.7 to 25.1 percent in output of sugar, beer and cigarettes in the January-March period, compared with the same period of 1981. The output of cotton, chemical fiber and blended fabrics was up 10.9 percent; silk textiles, 23.8 percent; and knitting wool, 43.5 percent.

FUJIAN HOLDS FORUM ON UNDERGROUND PARTY ISSUE

OW080601 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 7 Apr 82

[Text] To implement the central authorities' instruction on grasping well and handling fairly the question of the underground party, learn the opinions from all concerned, make clear the basic state of affairs and discuss ways to solve this question, the provincial CCP committee called a forum 11-18 March in Fuzhou on correct ways to settle the underground party issue. The forum was attended by veteran comrades who have long been in Fujian, unwaveringly engaged in the guerrilla war and in the underground war in white areas [Kuomintang-controlled areas] prior to liberation, comrades who are familiar with the details of the underground party as well as responsible comrades from the provincial departments concerned, totaling 45 in number. Also present were comrades from the Organization Department and the Discipline Inspection Commission of the CCP Central Committee who had come to Fujian to inspect the work.

Speeches were delivered by Comrades Xiang Nan, Ma Xingyuan, Wu Hongxiang and Cheng Xu. They relayed to the forum the relevant instructions given by leading comrades at the central level, epitomized the initial work of the provincial CCP committee on implementing the instructions and elaborated on the guiding ideology in solving the question. They also offered suggestions on how to make the forum a real success.

In their speeches, the responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee emphasized: Fujian's underground party had a glorious revolutionary history and its original revolutionary image should be restored. It is imperative to fairly solve the question of the underground party, and to do so, we must look ahead instead of bringing up old scores or placing responsibility on certain individuals. We must do what is good for stability and unity. Only in this way can we mobilize all positive factors and work hard with one mind toward the realization of the four modernizations.

With the overall interests in mind, the veteran comrades at the forum calmly discussed the current situation and gave an account of the problem. Their aim was to deal with the problems rather than the persons involved. They manifested the openmindedness which veteran comrades educated by the party for decades and tempered through long revolutionary struggles should display.

JIANGSU'S XU JIATUN DISCUSSES ECONOMIC CRIMES

OW091153 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Apr 82

[Text] The leading group dealing with economic cases under the Jiangsu Provincial CCP Committee held an enlarged meeting on 8 April. The meeting was attended by members of the leading group, prefectural and municipal responsible persons currently attending a provincial people's congress meeting in Nanjing and responsible persons in charge of economic crimes in Nanjing, Wuxi and Changzhou municipalities and Suzhou Prefecture.

Comrade Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee and head of the leading groups in charge of economic cases, presided over the meeting and spoke. Comrade Xu Jiatun discussed three main points, stressing severe punishment for criminals who have seriously disrupted the national economy.

1. It is necessary to do a good job in propaganda, education and mobilization. It is necessary to carry out a vigorous campaign throughout the province to propagate the NPC Standing Committee's decision on severely punishing criminals who have seriously disrupted the national economy, thereby launching a strong political offensive to urge all criminals to surrender and confess their crimes in order to receive lenient treatment. The NPC Standing Committee's decision should be posted in all offices, factories, mines, enterprises, schools, rural communes and brigades, and in all public places.

Newspapers, periodicals, radio and television stations and all other propaganda agencies must carry out extensive propaganda work and create a forceful public opinion to make the NPC decision known to everyone and compel all economic criminals to surrender and confess. All these measures will serve to deepen the campaign, focus attention on the target and educate both cadres and masses. At the same time, it is necessary to do a good job in educating leaders at all levels -- particularly leading cadres at and above the level of standing committee members of county-level party committees -- on the importance and urgency of the decision of the NPC Standing Committee so that they consciously and correctly use this powerful weapon to launch resolute struggles against criminal activities in the economic field.

2. It is necessary to stress the policy and deepen the struggle against criminal activities in the economic field. In the current struggle against criminal activities in the economic field, the situation is complicated, and the task is formidable. Thus, it is necessary to study and master the policy well and stress investigation, study and politics, instead of extorting confessions. Leaders and work personnel at all levels must be resolute and decisive in their actions. They must strictly implement the decision of the NPC Standing Committee and abide by laws and regulations concerned so that the facts they present are irrefutable, the evidence conclusive and the sentence commensurate with the crime. It is necessary to concentrate our attention on major economic criminal cases, particularly those involving responsible cadres holding important posts. In dealing with such cases, we must never be lenient or become soft-hearted. We must not stop until we have gotten to the bottom of the matter. Because the economic crimes they commit are more damaging and disruptive to the national economy, and because the resistance they put up will be very great, our work in dealing with them will inevitably be very difficult. However, we must conquer all resistance. It does not matter where the resistance originates. We must always put the state's interests above all other things, be impartial and incorruptible, strictly enforce the law and unremittingly carry out the struggle to the end.

3. Party and government leaders at all levels must strengthen their leadership over the struggle. Principal leading comrades of party committees at all levels must exercise personal leadership over the struggle. Now that the struggle has begun, if the leaders fail to exercise effective leadership, the struggle will also fail for lack of leadership. Now is the time to step up inspection and supervision to see whether or not organs have been set up at and above the county level, whether or not leaders have gone down to subordinate units and whether or not momentum has built up. It is necessary to strengthen ideological and political education, stress policy as the principal guidance, prevent contradictions from polarizing and do a good job in safeguarding public security. In the current struggle, it is necessary to avoid handling cases behind closed doors. It is necessary to rely on the party committee's leadership and fully mobilize the masses so that personnel specially assigned to a case cooperate with the masses to guide the struggle on a continuously deepening and healthy course.

JIANGXI'S FU YUTIAN ADDRESSES INDUSTRY MEETING

[Text] A conference on industry and communications opened today in Nanchang municipality, Jiangxi Province. This conference is being held mainly to convey and implement the guidelines laid down by a recent national conference on industry and communications and to discuss such questions as how to follow the correct guidelines for industrial production and how to achieve better economic results according to our province's actual conditions. This is aimed at achieving a practical growth rate in both industrial production and communications that will be higher than last year's rate.

Attending the conference are responsible comrades of key enterprises in various parts of the province, responsible comrades of the departments concerned directly under the provincial authority as well as experts and scholars. Present at today's opening session were Fu Yutian, Wang Shixian, Wang Zhaorong, Xu Qin, Li Shizhang, Liang Kaixuan and other leading comrades of the party and government organizations in the province. At this morning's session, Vice Governor Liang Kaixuan conveyed the guidelines laid down by the recent national conference on industry and communications.

In his speech at the opening session, Fu Yutian, secretary of the provincial party committee and vice governor of the province, called on those present to conscientiously study the guidelines laid down by the national conference on industry and communications and discuss the questions of how to follow the correct guidelines and how to achieve better economic results in order to do a better job in industry and communications in the province.

Fu Yutian emphatically pointed out: We must first understand the meaning of economic results. By economic results, we absolutely do not mean that we should make vigorous efforts to run enterprises with big profits, little efforts to run enterprises with little profits or no efforts to run enterprises with no profits. By this, we mean that we should resolutely implement the principle of a planned economy as the leading factor and regulation by the market as supplementary, adopt the concept of taking the whole country into account and correctly handle the relationship between the state, the collective and the individual. Putting undue emphasis on economic responsibility and benefits and following unhealthy tendencies in the economic field, such as tax evasion, practicing selfish departmentalism or even seeking self-interest at public expense are entirely wrong and impermissible. Of course, economic benefits and responsibility have been are and will be stressed. However, this involves not only a perceptual understanding of economic benefits and responsibility, but also a clear understanding of the many aspects of their requirements. Economic results are a reflection of the guidelines for production, the style of management, production methods, product quality, production costs and profit. Economic results are a yardstick for judging whether an enterprise is run well, as well as a reflection of its comprehensive results. Economic results are the goal we are to achieve while further implementing the principle of readjustment.

Fu Yutian said: How an enterprise should produce according to market demand is an important branch of learning. When an enterprise does well in this regard, it will achieve good economic results; otherwise, its economic results will be poor. At present, some enterprises in our province do not have sufficient production tasks to carry out, while others blindly turn out products without taking market demand into account. Thus, the latter have failed to produce according to market demand. He hoped that the comrades at the conference would study documents, examine how many of our economic results are inflated and try to find the causes of our poor economic results. Through discussion, they should try to find resolutions to our problems.

SHANDONG HOLDS INDUSTRIAL, COMMUNICATIONS MEETING

SK091237 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 8 Apr 82

[Excerpts] A provincial industrial and communications work conference is being held in Jinan. It has pointed out that this year's industrial and communications work should stress economic results and organize production in line with state plans and market needs so as to achieve a real increase. Vice Governor Liu Peng delivered a report based on the suggestions of the provincial CCP committee and government. After reviewing the achievements and problems in industrial production in the past year and the first quarter of this year, Liu Peng said: Comrades engaged in economic work must deeply understand the great significance of raising economic results, enhance the guiding ideology in industrial production and genuinely shift the emphasis of work from stressing production value and speed to economic results.

Viewing the situation in our province, we must do a good job in the following four aspects: 1) Shift our attention from grasping production value and speed to grasping product varieties, quality and products that have a ready market; 2) Shift our attention from boosting production to increase income to reducing consumption, lowering production cost and increasing accumulation; 3) Shift our attention from solely grasping production to grasping management and science and technology; and 4) Shift our attention from blindly expanding production capacity to grasping technical renovation and renewal of equipment.

Industrial enterprise leaders at all levels must spare no effort to reduce material consumption and manpower and produce products needed in markets in order to achieve genuine success in this field.

In the first quarter our province scored achievements in increasing industrial and communications production, profits and revenue. The total industrial output value increased 12.3 percent over the corresponding period of 1981, of which the output value of light industry increased 15.3 percent and that of heavy industry 8.5 percent. Projected state industrial enterprises increased profits by 6 percent and profits handed over to the state increased by 4.7 percent over the corresponding period of 1981. Industrial tax revenue increased 10.8 percent.

Provincial departments concerned pointed out that development of industry as a whole is good. The current conspicuous problems are low economic results, poor product quality, few product varieties, high consumption and large deficits. Some products are in stock because they cannot be marketed. All localities must earnestly analyze the problem of low economic results in industrial production and adopt effective measures to solve existing problems to achieve better economic results in industrial and communications production this year.

ART URGED TO REFLECT ANTICORRUPTION STRUGGLE

[Article by Luo Yuanwen [5012 3293 2429] and Chen Zhijie [7115 1807 0267]: "Literature and Art Must Vigorously Reflect the Life of the Anticorruption Struggle"]

[Text] Last year's June issue of GUANGZHOU WENYI [GUANGZHOU LITERATURE AND ART] carried a short story entitled "On the Vast Sea at Night." Recently, the Guangzhou municipal Cantonese opera troupe performed a modern Cantonese opera entitled "Dream." Both the short story and the opera drew their materials from the struggle against the activities of smuggling and trafficking in contraband and from the struggle against the corrosive influence of decadent capitalist ideology. Despite a few defects in them, these two works succeeded in relatively promptly reflecting an important aspect of real life -- the struggle against the activities of smuggling, trafficking in contraband, embezzlement and bribery and the struggle against corruption by capitalist ideology. Undoubtedly, such works are of practical significance.

The struggle against corruption by bourgeois ideology is an urgent practical task of great significance in adhering to the four basic principles, implementing the party's line, principles and policies and speeding up the construction of the two "civilizations." This struggle is a major issue not only in the economic field, but also in the ideological field, including the literary and art field. Because Guangdong our province, is situated in the vicinity of Hong Kong and Macao and, moreover, because we have established the special economic zones and have been daily increasing our external economic activities and our international cultural exchanges, we are more vulnerable to the corrupting influences of decadent capitalist ideology and bourgeois lifestyle from abroad. The struggle against the activities of smuggling, trafficking in contraband and bribery, the resistance to corruption by decadent capitalist ideology and the rectification of unhealthy trends is a major critical issue in the four modernizations in Guangdong. We must persist in carrying out this struggle and strive to achieve good results in it. Since the 3d plenary session, and especially since the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, our province has achieved tremendous results in every aspect. We have enlivened our economy, developed our production in a fairly rapid manner and continuously increased our foreign trade. We have also improved the livelihood of our people and achieved political unity and stability. The continuous steady progress that we are making in all our undertakings has brought about a situation that is better than we expected. However, in some localities and in some units, offenses of smuggling, trafficking in contraband, embezzlement and bribery have cropped up and there have been prominent instances of serious criminal and illegal activities of stealing large amounts of state property.

These economic offenses and crimes have even involved some of our cadres. Furthermore, through every possible channel, decadent capitalist ideology and culture are polluting the southern entrance to our motherland and poisoning the minds of the masses of people, especially our youths. Some units and individuals continue to import, show and copy films, video-tapes and music tapes that are pornographic or that have harmful contents. Though we have made efforts to put an end to this evil practice, we have not yet completely succeeded. This shows that the ideological struggle in our province remains sharp and complicated. For this reason, we have to remain sober-minded. We should continue to adhere to our external open-door policy, but we must not introduce bourgeois life styles into our country nor allow decadent capitalist ideology and culture to run rampant. We should not only severely crack down on economic crimes, but also resolutely counter the attack of decadent capitalist and other unhealthy ideologies and cultures. This is the unshirkable duty of all our cultural and art departments.

In conducting socialist literary and art activities, we must resolutely carry out the policies of serving the people and socialism and must strictly follow the party's "double hundred" policy. We should reflect all the aspects of our actual social lives, create literary and art works that draw from all kinds of material and portray all kinds of people, especially new socialist people. Judging from the practical effects of literary and art works on society, those that can, in a relatively timely way, reflect the actual struggle, and especially those that reflect current political life and express the political aspirations of the writers, are often more likely to arrest people's attention and to have more influence on the people. We advocate having socialist literature and art focus on themes reflecting the four modernizations. This, of course, means that our socialist literature and art should reflect the struggle against corruption by capitalist ideology, which is included in the themes concerning the four modernizations. This current struggle is grim in reality and it has a direct bearing not only on the problem of whether we will be able to bring about a turn for the better to our party work style, but also on the future destiny and prosperity of our party and state. Thus it is only natural for socialist literature and art, which is "a mirror that reflects the society," and which is a powerful weapon to attack the enemy and educate and unite our people, to consciously and vigorously reflect this struggle. This is a requirement for satisfying the diversified tastes of our readers as well as a requirement for the construction of socialist spiritual civilization. At present, there are too few pieces of literary and art works on this theme and there is also the problem of low quality in the existing pieces on this theme. This is where we should make efforts to improve.

How should we create socialist literary and art works to reflect this struggle? This is a new problem for our broad ranks of literary and art workers who are endowed with the lofty historical mission of building socialist spiritual civilization. Our suggestion is that the comrades in our literary and art circles should conscientiously study the relevant documents, policies and decrees of the party and state and the relevant important speeches that have been published in our newspapers. They should also carefully read the material that is related to the major economic cases in our newspapers and deepen their understanding of the significance of the struggle against the activities of smuggling, trafficking in contraband, embezzlement and bribery and the significance of the struggle against corruption by the bourgeois ideology. To be more concrete, on the one hand, they should intensify their further study of Marxist-Leninist theory and Mao Zedong's thinking on literary and art works, and consciously clean the dust from their minds in order to build up a great wall of anticorruption in their minds. On the other hand our writers and artists should immediately plunge into the thick of life whenever it is possible for them to do so. All the relevant departments should create favorable conditions for our writers and artists, in order to facilitate their observation of and learning from life, their investigation and study and in order to facilitate their accumulation of material. Naturally, we should also pay attention to preventing and opposing the practice of using a simple formula to analyze life in an abstract manner. On the contrary, we should respect the special law of artistic creation and encourage our writers and artists to use the method of thinking in terms of images in order to reflect the complicated conflicts of people's feelings and the complicated contradictions. We should also encourage them to strive to portray the images of the new socialist people who have emerged in this struggle. In so doing, our writers and artists should depict and extol the new socialist people's struggle against corruption by decadent capitalist ideology, their lofty virtues of strictly observing law and discipline, being honest in performing their official duties, remaining uncontaminated by any evil influence, hating evil like poison, not being apprehensive of those who have both power and influence and being wise and courageous in fighting against the perverse trend and supporting the healthy one.

Thus, they will create bright images of the new socialist people. At the same time, our writers and artists should deeply expose those "termites" who are damaging the great mansion of socialism, analyze the personal histories of these evildoers to look into the reasons why they became evildoers and analyze their ugly souls. Thus our writers and artists will rouse people's vigilance and heighten their confidence and courage to go all out with one heart and one mind in steadily developing and realizing the four modernizations under the leadership of party.

HENAN HOLDS FORUM ON RURAL PROPAGANDA WORK

[Excerpts] The Henan Provincial CCP Committee Propaganda Department held a 4-11 April forum on rural propaganda work in Lin County to discuss and study how to carry out political and ideological work in the new situation following the institution of production responsibility systems, how to publicize with great fanfare the minutes of the national rural work conference and how to stimulate the building of material and spiritual civilization. Attending were directors of propaganda departments of all prefectural CCP committees and of the Zhengzhou, Kaifeng and Luoyang municipal and surrounding CCP committees, responsible comrades in charge of propaganda work in some counties and communes and responsible comrades of provincial units concerned. Song Yuxi, member of the provincial CCP committee standing committee and director of the propaganda department, made a speech. Anyang Prefectural CCP Committee Secretary (Wang Ying) also attended.

The participants seriously studied the minutes of the national rural work conference, summed up and exchanged successes and experiences in rural political and ideological work and inspected and visited Lin County's propaganda work and progressive typical communes and brigades in promoting spiritual civilization in the country. They obtained a clearer picture of the orientation and focus of rural propaganda work, braced their spirits and strengthened their confidence.

The meeting stressed: The focus of future rural propaganda work is to vigorously launch the work focusing on the two great aims of building material and spiritual civilization. At present, we must carry out with great fanfare propaganda for the cadres and masses in upholding one thing, keeping two things unchanged and taking simultaneous account of three things, and ensure that everyone knows about the minutes of the national rural work conference. By carrying out propaganda and education, we should enable the grassroots cadres and masses in the rural areas to further emancipate their minds, broaden their vision, deepen their comprehension of socialist collective agriculture, uphold the socialist road, correctly handle the relations between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, stabilize and perfect the production responsibility systems, develop agricultural production and diversification and make new contributions to striving for an all-round bumper harvest this year. At the same time we must vigorously organize propaganda in hitting at criminal activities in the economic field, and mobilize the masses to protest the modernization drive.

The forum pointed out: We should further promote the "five stresses and four beauties" activities, and consolidate and develop the fruits of the all-people decorum and courtesy month.

HK060323 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 5 Apr 82

[Text] The Hubei provincial commendation meeting of the 8 March red banner units and pace setters successfully closed in Wuchang this morning.

The responsible people of the Hubei provincial people's government and the national women's federation, including Chen Pixian, Han Ningfu, Li Wei, Xue Tan, Guo Liwen and others, were present at the concluding ceremony and awarded prizes to the representatives of 8 March red banner units and pace setters. In the last few days, 800 representatives of 8 March red banner units and red banner pace setters from throughout the province happily gathered together, exchanging their experiences and enthusiastically initiating discussions. They have strengthened their confidence in women holding up half the sky in the building of the two civilizations. At the concluding ceremony, the representatives sent a written proposal to all women in the province, appealing to them to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, to study the party's line, guiding principles and policies, to resolutely resist the corrosion of capitalism and vestiges of feudal ideology and to courageously struggle against the illegal and criminal activities in the economic field. Cultural standards, scientific and technological level and competence in business management should be improved. All women should actively participate in the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" and the drive of the "five-goods" family, and carry on the practices of marrying the partner of one's own choice and holding weddings in a frugal way. All families should respond to the party's call for only one child per couple, and thus achieve the aim of having good children, bringing them up properly and giving them good education. The written proposal also appealed to all women in the province to try their best to fulfill their roles as masters and to strive for the completion of all economic targets laid down by the provincial CCP committee this year. Moreover, they should do a good job in family education in cooperation with schools and the society. Women throughout the province should initiate an upsurge in the socialist drive of emulating, learning from, catching up with, helping and surpassing each other, and give full play to their function in holding up half the sky in the building of the socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

HUNAN RIBAO DISCUSSES RURAL POLICY ISSUES

HK110227 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 10 Apr 82

[Report on 11 April HUNAN RIBAO editorial: "Keep Two Things Unchanged for a Long Time"]

[Text] The editorial says: In studying the minutes of the national rural work conference, it is first necessary to grasp its central thinking: Keep two things unchanged for a long time. This means keeping unchanged for a long time the practice of following the socialist road of collectivization and maintaining public ownership of land and other basic means of production, and keeping unchanged the establishment of responsibility systems in the collective economy. These two things to be kept unchanged for a long time represent the major policy decision of the Central Committee made in accordance with the principle that production relations must conform to the nature of the productive force, after summing up the positive and negative experiences in China's agricultural collectivization over the past 30 years.

The first of the two things to be kept unchanged for a long time reiterates the orientation for developing agriculture in China. It is the foundation and premise for promoting all types of production responsibility systems. The establishment of the production responsibility systems only represents a change of management forms and remuneration methods within the collective economy; it is not a change in the system of ownership. We cannot talk about responsibility systems if we shake the foundation of public ownership of land and other basic means of production and depart from the premise of collectivization. It is obviously erroneous to simply sum up all types of production responsibility systems as the system of assigning the land to each household in exchange for fixed levies, and proceed to regard this system as one of returning the land to the families and dividing up the land for individual cultivation.

The second of the two things to be kept unchanged for a long time fully affirms the extreme importance of practicing various types of production responsibility systems for a long time to speed up China's agricultural development.

This measure is a scientific conclusion derived from the shortcomings that have persisted for a long time in the collective economy, such as eating out of the same big pot and practicing excessively single forms of management, and from summing up the experiences and lessons of history. The practice of the past 2 years has fully demonstrated the powerful vitality of the various types of responsibility systems. The cadres have also received education from practice, and have been gradually liberated from the long-prevailing influence of leftist ideology. Hence, worries and fears that the policies will be frequently changed and that we will go back to eating out of the same big pot and practicing egalitarianism are unnecessary.

Of course, laying stress on keeping two things unchanged for a long time certainly does not mean that there is no need to perfect the production responsibility systems already established. We must realize that most of the production responsibility systems in Hunan were set up in a relatively short time. Due to lack of experience, it is inevitable that problems of various types exist. The important task facing us at present is to both maintain policy stability and seek solutions to existing problems. On the basis of studying the documents and unifying understanding, and in close connection with current production, the province should gradually solve the existing problems in priority order by holding full discussions among the masses. In this way, the production responsibility systems already established will be increasingly perfected, and will stimulate all-round and sustained development of the province's agricultural production.

HUNAN MEETING ON PUBLICIZING ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Text] The Hunan Provincial CCP Committee and government held a telephone conference in the evening of 13 April to mobilize and make arrangements for conducting education on the economic situation in urban areas throughout the province. Provincial CCP committee standing committee member Liu Zheng and Vice Governor Zhou Zheng spoke at the meeting.

The meeting pointed out: Conducting thorough education on the economic situation for the cadres and masses, especially the people in the urban areas, is currently the major content of political and ideological work. It is of major significance for strengthening the building of the two civilizations, mobilizing the enthusiasm of the cadres and masses and stimulating new progress in the national economy. Conducting propaganda and education on the new situation represents a reeducation in the line, principles and policies of the third plenary session. The party committees and government at all levels must tackle this work in a just and forceful way.

The provincial CCP committee and people's government hold that it is necessary to closely link propaganda and education on the economic situation with the actual conditions in one's own area and unit, grasp the problems of greatest concern to the masses and apply the method of calculation and contrast to highlight the problems in light of the changes in people's living standards. We should thus let the masses know what great efforts the state has made since the gang of four was smashed, and especially since the third plenary session, to solve problems in the people's living standards, despite the country's economic difficulties. By conducting education on the economic situation, we should enable the masses to fully understand the superiority of the socialist system and to see the powerful effects of the party's series of major policy decisions. This will stimulate the masses' love for the party, the people, socialism, the motherland, their enterprises and their work, and they will implement with even greater keenness the party's line, principles and policies, and unswervingly follow the party to forge ahead.

The meeting pointed out: Varied and flexible methods and forms should be adopted in promoting propaganda and education on the economic situation. The principal leading party and government comrades at all levels must personally give reports and lecture on the excellent situation.

SICHUAN INCREASES GROSS INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT

[Text] Chengdu, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Sichuan, China's most populous province where catastrophic floods were experienced last year, registered a 12.7 percent rise in gross industrial output in the first quarter of this year, compared to the like period of 1981, according to the provincial statistical bureau. Total industrial output value reached 6,715 million yuan in the January-March period this year, and light industry accounted for 50.7 percent. Production figures for 45 light industrial products, especially consumer durables like sewing machines, bicycles and electrical appliances were excellent.

Stagnation or decreases in heavy industry, which appeared during the readjustment period, ended in the first quarter of this year. Production in metallurgy and machine building continued to go up. Total output value of heavy industry increased 12.2 percent over last year's same period.

Increased energy output in the province was an important factor in the big rises in industrial production in the first quarter. Output of coal, crude oil, electricity and natural gas increased 7.6 percent over the same period of last year.

XIZANG ISSUES CIRCULAR ON POPULATION CENSUS

HK090253 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 8 Apr 82

[Summary] The Xizang Regional People's Government recently issued a circular on measures for carrying out the population census in the region. The circular says: In view of the fact that communications in the region are bad, registration work will begin in mid-May instread of 1 July. Those to be covered in the census are citizens of the PRC who live in the region. Every person must register in the place where he or she normally resides, and can only register in one place. Registration will be carried out by the household; a person living alone will also count as a household. For the purpose of the census there are both family households and also collective households, the latter including those living in organs, bodies, schools, factories, mines, communes, farms, companies, shops, hospitals, nurseries and so on, and also those in prison, and labor reform and labor eduation centers.

Before the census registration begins, the census organs must seriously take stock of household registration in accordance with the registration regulations and the relevant region stipulations. On that basis, the census organs must define the census zones according to the state administrative zoning. The census personnel are responsible for guiding and inspecting the registration work. Grassroots cadres and activists among the masses should assist them. The census personnel should consist of people with a certain cultural level who are trusted by the masses and act in a responsible way; they are to be selected by the county governments. They should be issued certificates after a short period of training. After appointment to their posts, they must not be assigned to noncensus work before the census is completed.

The census registration can be carried out in various ways, including visiting households, organizing heads of households to report to registration centers and so on. In remote areas with very small and scattered populations, it is possible to make use of material currently in hand or persons familiar with the people to carry out an indirect investigation and estimate. The census personnel must question each household in accordance with the census forms.

The census of serving PLA personnel will be carried out by the leading organs of the units in a unified way, wherever their domicile is. Local public security bureaus will carry out the census of armed people's police, border police and fire brigade personnel. The public security organs will also do the census for people under arrest or undergoing reform or education through labor.

After the census is completed in the census zones, the census guides are to carry out an all-round check in accordance with the stipulated methods, and correct any anomalies. The Xizang regional provisional census leadership group office will evaluate the quality of the census.

About 10 days are allotted for census registration work. The task of checking the quality of census should take 5 days. The regional provisional census leadership group is to send the fully-compiled and complete returns to the State Council census leadership group office before the end of June 1984 [as heard]. The regional office will also send a report on the census to the regional people's government.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES 'SOUTH ATLANTIC PACT'

[Text] Foreign Ministry Spokesman Liu Ta-jen has denied wire service reports that the Republic of China has entered into a secret treaty with South Africa, Israel, Argentina and other countries. The reports said these nations had entered into a so-called secret treaty of the South Atlantic. Mr Liu said the reports are utter fabrications. He noted that from time to time over the past several years there have been news reports which suggested that the Republic of China, South Africa, Israel and other countries had entered into secret relations concerning the arms trade and military cooperation. Mr Liu said that the association of the name of the Republic of China with that of Israel in such an alleged military alliance was apparently aimed at sabotaging the friendly relations between this country and Arab states.

GOVERNMENT TO INCREASE MILITARY PREPAREDNESS

[Text] The Executive Yuan, or the cabinet, has said that the government is going to step up efforts to meet the requirements of the armed forces for military preparedness. It also said the government heeds about the concern of the United States for the security and welfare of Taiwan. It welcomed the American decision not to change its policy of selling defensive weapons to the Republic of China. But the government cannot agree with the U.S. decision not to sell advanced aircraft to this country. The government will continue to pursue (?through negotiations with non-American countries) [words indistinct] (?supply of) defensive weapons to the ROC and is conducting the studies of obtaining arms from other countries.

The cabinet also said, although both Holland and France have formal diplomatic relations with the Chinese communists, the political and economic conditions in those two countries are very different. If the ROC wanted to buy Mirage jets from France, it would first have to make great progress in its relations with France. Only then will there be hope. The ROC at present is working hard to find a government among the more technically advanced nations that is willing to sell sophisticated weaponry that is needed by the ROC's armed forces.

PRESS DISCUSS PRC PROTEST, U.S. ARMS TO TAIWAN

TA KUNG PAO Editorial

HK150422 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 15 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Viewing Sino-U.S. Relations From the Chinese Statement"]

[Text] A spokesman of the Chinese Foreign Ministry issued a statement yesterday on the U.S. announcement of the sale of military spare parts to Taiwan. This shows once again China's principled stand and flexibility in its foreign affairs.

China's just and stern statement has only two paragraphs.

In the first paragraph, it points out that the sale of U.S. military spare parts to one of China's provinces is a serious violation of China's sovereignty and thus the Chinese Government lodges a strong protest. This shows the principled stand of China.

In the second paragraph, the statement points out that China has noticed the three-point explanation and assurance made by the United States on this issue in the course of negotiations. Thus is warns that if the United States violates the three-point assurance, it will have to bear the responsibility for all the serious consequences arising thereform. This shows the flexibility of China's stand.

Over the past year or so, the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan has existed as an obstacle obstructing the development of Sino-U.S. relations. This will probably lead to the undesirable deterioration and reversal of relations. China has pointed out time and again that since the United States has established diplomatic relations with the PRC, it should respect China's sovereignty rather than pursuing the policy of "two Chinas." It should not consider Taiwan, a province of the PRC, as a political body and continue to sell arms (even advanced weapons) to it in order to obstruct the reunification, including peaceful reunification, of China. If the United States insists on going in an adverse direction on the Taiwan issue, regardless of the important global strategy, peace in Asia, as well as world peace will be harmed.

On the other hand, China has also made it clear on many occasions that since this problem has its historical background, if the United States agrees in principle that it will not continue long-term arms sale to Taiwan and that it will not provide it with better arms, steps and ways for solving this problem can still be studied.

At the end of last year, when the U.S. Government informally informed the U.S. Congress that there would be arms sale to Taiwan, Sino-U.S. relations became further strained. Even after U.S. Assistant Secretary Holdridge visited Beijing, relations were not improved. China made its stand very clear. It expected the best and was prepared for the worst. If the worst situation unfortunately occurred, it would be the U.S. Government, and not the Chinese Government, which should bear the responsibility for it.

Since Holdridge's visit to China, negotiations [tanpan 6151 0445] between the two sides on Sino-U.S. relations have been going on in Beijing. The three-point explanation and assurance by the U.S. side, which were revealed by the Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman, merit our attention. First, what the United States will sell to Taiwan this time are only military spare parts and not weapons. This is different from the sale of planes declared by U.S. President Reagan during Holdridge's visit to China. Second, this sale is only a continuation of the long-term arrangement in the past and not a new one. Third, in the course of negotiations between the Chinese and U.S. sides, the United States will not consider military transfers to Taiwan. It was considered by many foreign commentators yesterday that these three points were a concession made by the U.S. side. They were closer to the requirements of the Chinese side.

The true implications of these three points have yet to be observed.

Do they mean that the United States will not make any new sales to Taiwan in the course of negotiations, or that even if the U.S. Congress approves this military spare parts sale, the parts will not be delivered during the negotiations? It will be at least a month before we know the answer.

The negotiations between the Chinese and U.S. sides are still in progress. The central issue is naturally the cessation of the United States' long-term policy of selling arms to Taiwan. We hope that the United States will take a further step on the basis of the three-point assurance to solve this problem with China of long-term arms sale to Taiwan. Thus, the development of Sino-U.S.relations will be maintained and promoted. This will also be beneficial to the present world situation which is becoming turbulent, complicated and tense with each passing day.

WEN WEI PO Editorial

[Editorial: "Reagan Causes Deterioration in Sino-U.S. Relations"]

[Text] In spite of the Chinese authorities' repeated strong protests and warnings, the Reagan administration has, at last, submitted to the U.S. Congress its proposal to sell arms to Taiwan. This is a short-sighted action. In so doing the Reagan administration has paid attention only to partial and immediate interests and overlooked long-term general strategic interests. It has led Sino-U.S. relations, which were established and developed by our predecessors through arduous efforts, into a crisis. The Chinese Government has already lodged a strong protest against this action of infringement on China's sovereignty by the U.S. Government.

The proposal that has been put before Congress this time concerns the sale of "spare parts of a military nature." The U.S. State Department has recently said that the sale this time does not constitute an arms transaction. However, as has been recently pointed out by NPC Vice Chairman Liao Chengzhi in his interview with some Japanese friends, some radar equipment for military use is included in this transaction. The key problem is that the Reagan administration is adopting two-faced tactics in handling its relations with China and is speeding up its collusion with Taiwan and the implementation of its policy to create "two Chinas." The arms sale this time is a major step in carrying out the "two Chinas" policy.

Regarding the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, China not only has adhered to its principle by insisting that the United States must set a deadline for ending arms sales to Taiwan, but has also shown its flexibility by refraining from demanding an immediate cessation of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. As long as the United States accepts this principle, both sides can hold talks to solve the problems related to the procedures and methods to end the arms sales. However, the United States has not accepted this principle. On the contrary, it not only clings to selling arms to Taiwan, but also refuses to come up with a deadline for ending the arms sales.

The U.S. authorities are selling arms to Taiwan in accordance with the "Taiwan Relations Act." The tenet of this act is: 1) A stipulation on the obligation of the United States to Taiwan's security. According to this stipulation, any military action against Taiwan will arouse Washington's serious concern. 2) "The United States will enable Taiwan to obtain the material and equipment and the technical services that are necessary to maintain Taiwan's defensive strength." The first item is the restoration, in a disguised form, of U.S.-Taiwan defense treaty that the United States has publicly abrogated since it established diplomatic relations with China. The second is aimed at making U.S. arms sales to Taiwan lawful.

This act violates the principle stipulated in the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States and constitutes interference in China's internal affairs.

The actual reason why the United States has been persisting in selling arms to Taiwan lies in the fact that some people in the United States are attempting to control Taiwan forever in order to pin down China.

Another reason why the Reagan administration has acted willfully in disregarding the principle stipulated in the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States and in clinging to selling arms to Taiwan lies in its erroneous estimation of the situation in China. It thinks that China has to depend on the technical aid of the United States in China's four modernizations and that China has to beg for assistance from the United States in the face of the Soviet military threat. As long as the United States adopts a hardline attitude toward the Soviet Union, China will make concessions on the problems related to its sovereignty and on the problems related to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. The truth is that in carrying out economic construction, China is adopting the policy of relying mainly on its own efforts and supplementing its efforts with foreign assistance. In the course of China's four modernizations, China can cooperate and is cooperating with a large number of countries. Moreover, China has been achieving great results in developing its science and technology. As for the Soviet threat, even as far back as in the 1960's when China did not have diplomatic relations with the United States, China had begun its struggle against Soviet hegemonism, and it has never feared anything. It is the United States that has a more urgent need in strengthening its relations with China because of its global strategy.

People of insight pointed out long ago that in handling Sino-U.S. relations, we had to take into account global strategy and that the normal development of Sino-U.S. relations was favorable to the long-term interests of both China and the United States and to the struggle against Soviet hegemonism in the world. The problem of how Sino-U.S. relations will develop has roused the concern of more and more friendly countries. The retrogression in the normal development in Sino-U.S. relations resulted from the Reagan administration's persistence in carrying out its policy of creating "two Chinas" and in selling arms to Taiwan. Regarding the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, the Chinese authorities have already declared that China has already made preparations for the worst if the United States clings to acting willfully. The Reagan administration of the United States has to be responsible for all the possible results, since it is going back on its assurance [bao zheng 0202 6086] to China concerning arms sales to Taiwan, violating the principle of the Shanghai communique and is thus causing Sino-U.S. relations to deteriorate. The Chinese people will never eat their words. Moreover, China is sure to stand firmly in the world, and any attempt to infringe on China's sovereignty is doomed to failure.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR VIEWS TAIWAN ARMS ISSUE

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY today carries an article by commentator entitled "China's Principled Stand Is Unshakable," reaffirming China's position on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. The article reads:

On April 13, 1982, the U.S. Government officially notified U.S. Congress that it was going to sell military-related spare parts to Taiwan. The Chinese Government hereby lodged a strong protest with the U.S. Government expressing the solemn and just stand of the Chinese people. The U.S. arms sales to Taiwan is an infringement upon China's sovereignty. There is only one China in the world and Taiwan is a part of China. The U.S. Government confirmed in the Sino-U.S. joint communique on establishing diplomatic relations that the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legitimate Government of China. After the formal establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations, the United States continues to sell arms to Taiwan to interfere in China's internal affairs. This is an open violation of the principles guiding Sino-U.S. relations stipulated in the Sino-U.S. joint communique. This also shows that the U.S. Government has renounced its commitment undertaken explicitly in the joint communique. It is only natural that the Chinese Government has consistently opposed the U.S. act of disregarding China's sovereignty. This position of China is known to all. Precisely for this reason, when the U.S. Government in December 1981 unofficially notified U.S. Congress of its decision to sell this batch of spare parts to Taiwan, the Chinese Government immediately lodged a protest. After that, the U.S. side repeatedly made the three-point explanation to the Chinese side: First, this batch of spare parts was not a new sale of arms but was something that had been promised to Taiwan before the Sino-U.S. high-level meetings held in Cancun and Washington in October 1981, and was ordered by Taiwan before the Sino-U.S. decision to hold talks on the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan; second, this batch would involve only spare parts with no supply of weapons; and third, the United States would not consider military transfers to Taiwan while the two sides were continuing their bilateral discussions on a settlement of the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. It means that the United States would not sell weapons to Taiwan while China and the United States are holding talks on the matter.

In view of the above-mentioned U.S. three-point explanation and assurance which has a binding force, the Chinese side, taking the overall situation into account, has thus taken an attitude of not allowing such a thing to be repeated again and seeing how the other side behaves. China's consistent stand against the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan surely will never change. Therefore, should the U.S. side go back on its three-point assurance given to the Chinese side, it must bear all the consequences arising therefrom.

Now the relations between China and the United States are still at a critical juncture and the crisis of a likely retrogression of the relations exists, because the question of U.S. selling of arms to Taiwan remains unsettled. The U.S. Government stated more than once that it attaches great importance to U.S.-China relations, but, in practice, it insists on continued arms sales to Taiwan and goes ahead with implementing the policy of "two Chinas" or "one China and one Taiwan" by playing some tricks openly or covertly. This, of course, is impermissible. The U.S. selling of arms to Taiwan is an important matter having a vital bearing on China's sovereignty. This problem cannot be resolved by ignoring China's sovereignty. The relations between China and the United States must be based on the principle of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. If this fundamental principle is violated, it would be impossible to maintain the status quo of the Sino-U.S. relations, to say nothing of developing these relations.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SOVIET OVERTURE TO JAPAN

["International Jottings" by Xiao Gu [2556 6253]: "Special Consideration"]

[Text] TASS has recently started preaching to Japan again. The latest sermon was to advise Japan not to increase cooperation with the United States. This is because, as the Soviets said, such an act will not be beneficial to Japan's security, while only "reaching an agreement with the Soviet Union on measures for increasing confidence will be of primary importance to Japan. That is to say, Japan should let the Soviet Union safeguard its security. Rendering this in this in the usual Japanese terminology, this can really be called a "special consideration."

However, it so happened that Soichiro Ito, director general of the Defense Agency of Japan, revealed in a meeting of the cabinet several days ago that due to frequent incursions by Soviet airplanes in Japan's territorial airspace, the Japanese Air Self-Defense Force was scrambled 939 times in 1981, that is about 2 or 3 times each day. This is more times than in any previous year. Incursions have been the most notable in the Strait of Tsushima. The Soviet airplanes have largely increased their reconnaissance flights in the areas west of the Sea of Japan. Perhaps this is what Moscow defines as "confidence measures!" Or perhaps this is a manifestation of "special consideration" for Japan. The Japanese people clearly understand the "primary significance" of such considerations. As an old saying goes, when the fox shows special concern for the hen, the hen should take meticulous precautions against it in the henhouse.

TOKYO PAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. ARMS TO TAIWAN

[Text] Tokyo, April 16 (XINHUA) -- Major Tokyo newspapers carry editorials today on the U.S. arms sale to Taiwan, urging the United States not to sour its relations with China and to restrain itself on the Taiwan issue.

The editorial of Tokyo SHIMBUN says it is a matter of course that the Chinese Government strongly protested against the U.S. arms sale to Taiwan in violation of China's sovereignty. It is an act on the part of the U.S. in disregard of the overall interests since it has accepted the "one China" principle contained in the U.S.-Sino Shanghai communique, the editorial notes.

The YOMIURI SHIMBUN editorial hopes that the Reagan administration would abide by its promise to China, improve relations with the latter and not to give the Soviets an opportunity to exploit. "The presence of a stable China, plus coordinated relations between China, the United States and Japan would constitute a major contribution to the maintenance of peace and security in Asia and the whole word," it adds.

The editorial of ASAHI SHIMBUN expresses the hope that the United States would not retrogress but choose the road of cooperation with China.

SINO-JAPANESE FLUIDIZATION SYMPOSIUM OPENS

[Excerpts] Hangzhou, April 5 (XINHUA) -- An important part of the current scientific exchange between Chinese and Japanese scholars will be those in advanced chemical engineering, said Professor Guo Musun, director of the Institute of Chemical Metallurgy under the Chinese Academy of Sciences in an interview today. The professor is attending a Sino-Japanese symposium on fluidization taking place in Hangzhou. Jointly sponsored by the Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Japanese Society of Chemical Engineers, the symposium opened here yesterday and will run till April 9. "The current symposium is the first of its kind on a highly important and rapidly developing field in chemical engineering attended by Chinese and Japanese scholars," Professor Guo Musun said.

Professor Daizo Kunii of the University of Tokyo who heads the Japanese society told XINHUA: "The symposium is a wonderful chance for scientists of our two countries to exchange ideas on fluidization."

A total of 30 papers will be read at the symposium. They cover a wide range of subjects, from theory to practice, from laboratory work to pilot plant experiences, and from unsolved classical problems to exploration of new techniques. "All the most recent ideas and research efforts have been brought to the symposium," Professor Guo Musun said. Twenty Japanese scholars and 22 Chinese scholars and 20 Chinese auditors are attending the symposium in this beautiful lake city.

Fluidization Uses Discussed

[Text] Hangzhou, April 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese scientists are overcoming difficulties involved in the comprehensive separation of metals from the associated ores which are common in China, according to Professor Guo Musun (Mooson Kwauk), director of the Institute of Chemical Metallurgy under the Chinese Academy of Sciences, who is attending the current Sino-Japanese symposium on fluidization here today. Research on the application of fluidization -- a technology whereby gas or vapor is passed through solids so that the mixture behaves as a liquid -- to ore processing has received particular attention in China, Professor Guo said. "Although China has abundant ore resources, most of the ores are either complex in nature or low in metal content," he said. Some Chinese uranium mills use fluidization technology to more efficiently classify and wash uranium slurry.

Chinese scientists have developed a new chemical process to separate copper from low-grade and complex pyrites ore. The process produces a highly concentrated gas, containing more than 80 percent sulphur dioxide, much higher than conventional methods. Chinese scientists have done a good deal of research on the fluidized-bed combustion boiler for use with low-grade coal of which China has large deposits. There are now 2,000 of these being used in China. "The fluidized bed's rate of heat exchange is ten times higher than that of conventional boilers and there is less air pollution," Professor Guo said.

"But there is still a lot of work to be done in the application of fluidization." The iron ore in Bayan Obo in Inner Mongolia which goes to the Baotau iron and steel complex contains valuable rare-earth minerals. Utilization of the rare-earth elements must be tackled more comprehensively, the professor said. The nickel ore deposit in Gansu Province will need effective measures to recover gold and silver and other non-ferrous metals. Tungsten and tin resources present similar problems, Professor Guo Musun said.

FURTHER COVERAGE ON VISIT OF CEAUSESCU

Hu Yaobang Speech at Banquet

HK160743 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Apr 82 p 4

[XINHUA report: "Text of Speech by Chairman Hu Yaobang at Banquet in Honor of President Ceausescu"]

[Text] Beijing, 13 April (XINHUA) -- The full text of Chairman Hu Yaobang's speech at the banquet in honor of President Nicolae Ceausescu follows:

Honorable Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu and Comrade Elena Ceausescu,

Honorable Romanian Comrades,

Comrades and Friends:

Comrade Ceausescu is an old friend deeply respected by the Chinese people. He visited our country three times during the 1960's and 1970's, establishing sincere revolutionary friendship with Chairman Mao Zedong, Premier Zhou Enlai and other leaders of our party and country and making outstanding contributions toward the friendship between China and Romania. Today, in the third spring of the 1980's, he has again come to visit our country by invitation. We are especially happy to see our old friends. On behalf of the CCP Central Committee, the Chinese Government and the Chinese people, I want to express my warmest welcome to Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania; Comrade Elena Ceausescu and all Romanian guests.

The Romanian Communist Party is a staunch proletarian political party. The Romanian people are a heroic people. Led by Comrade Ceausescu and the Romanian Communist Party, the Romanian people advance firmly along the socialist road. You have made tremendous developments in various spheres of socialist construction. You have firmly defended the state sovereignty and national dignity. You have opposed power politics in international affairs and defended world peace and the progress of manking. The firm principled stand and dauntless heroism of the Romanian party and people have won acclaim from peace-loving countries and people throughout the world. In admiration, the CCP and the Chinese people are looking at your great achievements and wish you new achievements in future struggles.

The relationship between the parties and countries of China and Romania has been developed in a turbulent, complicated and changeable international situation. Our two parties and countries have established a revolutionary relationship of unity and friendship since the day new China was founded. In the past 17 years since he assumed the post of general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party, Comrade Ceausescu has made continued efforts to push this lofty friendship forward. We, the Chinese communists, will never forget that it was the Romanian Communists with you, Comrade Ceausescu, as their representative, who dared to uphold justice, proletarian internationalism and the fundamental norms of international relations at a time when we used our brains to ponder over things, walked on our own legs and met with blatant interference by others. This is the most precious trust and support you have given us. An ancient Chinese saying goes: The pines show their sturdiness in cold winter. We believe that having stood long, rigid tests the great friendship between the two parties and peoples of China and Romania will remain evergreen as the pines.

Four years less 1 month have elapsed since Comrade Ceausescu's third visit to China in 1978. During the past 4 years, our party and people have worked concertedly, sharing weal and woe, and resolutely taken steps to eliminate the grave consequences of the "Great Cultural Revolution." Our economy has turned for the better and living standards have improved step-by-step. Unity among people of all nationalities and of all walks of life in the country has been greatly strengthened. Our efforts to improve socialist democracy and the legal system have yielded good results.

At present, we are working hard to streamline the government structure, foster socialist spiritual civilization, improve our work style and combat corruption among party and government functionaries so as to ensure the progress of socialist construction. We can say that our economy has embarked on the road to steady and healthy development. Our current political situation is in one of the best periods since the founding of the PRC. Although we are confronted with a host of difficulties and problems, we are confident that sustained and unremitting efforts by our party and people will definitely transform China into a powerful, modernized socialist country.

According to an agreement between the party Central Committees and Governments of China and Romania, Comrade Ceausescu will, during his current visit to China, discuss new ways to further develop the economic cooperation and relations between the two countries. The economic relations between the two countries were once developed to a considerable extent. In the road of progress, however, each of us met problems of one sort or another. Therefore, we should take advantage of the current meeting to study new ways of cooperation and to define surely attainable goals of economic cooperation in a spirit of mutual support and understanding. Although our cooperation may develop by only a small extent for some time, we are sure that along with the development of both nations' economies, the prospects for our economic cooperation are very bright. The development of our cooperation in the political, economic, scientific, technological and cultural fields will give a great impetus to the two countries' common prosperity.

We have already started cordial talks. By applying the good methods adopted in our past meetings, we shall exchange opinions freely and in a comradely way on questions of common concern and interests, such as questions regarding the international situation, questions regarding the international communist movement, questions regarding our cooperation in various fields, and questions regarding mutual learning and exchange of experience between our two parties. In the course of conversations held in this way, there will inevitably be differences of one sort or another between us. This is a normal phenomenon resulting from our different experiences, environments and concrete conditions. Nevertheless, our common ideal, common goal of struggle and identical views on a series of major issues are primary and are the basics keeping us closely together. It is my belief that our current talks will definitely produce good results and be crowned with satisfactory success.

Now, I want to propose a toast to the great friendship between the two parties, countries and peoples of China and Romania and to the health and happiness of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, Comrade Elena Ceausescu and all Romanian comrades!

Ceausescu Banquet Toast

HK160512 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Apr 82 p 4

[XINHUA report: "Text of Speech by President Ceausescu at Banquet Given in His Honor by CCP Central Committee and State Council"]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Apr (XINHUA) -- Below is the full text of the speech by President Ceausescu at the greeting banquet given in his honor by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council:

Esteemed Comrade Hu Yaobang, esteemed Chinese comrades, comrades and friends:

We are glad to have the opportunity to once again be the guests of People's China, to once again meet you, the Chinese people, to whom we are linked by lasting friendship, and relations of mutual esteem and appreciation.

On behalf of the Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party, the Romanian State Council, the Romanian Government, and myself, I am really glad to take this opportunity to extend our most cordial and fraternal revolutionary greetings and best wishes to you, Comrade Hu Yaobang; toall your party and government leading comrades; to the Chinese Communists and to the whole Chinese people.

I would like to show our heartfelt thanks for your reception for us and for your friendly wishes and appreciation that you have expressed in talking about us, about the labor and achievements of the Romanian people, and about Romanian-Chinese friendship.

Indeed, the friendship and collaboration between our countries, parties and peoples have rich and fine traditions. During my previous visits to your beautiful country, and during the meetings and talks I had with Chairman Mao Zedong, with Premier Zhou Enlai and with other Chinese leaders, we laid down together the foundations of lasting relations between our countries and peoples, which have been steadily consolidated through the years. We greatly cherish the friendship and collaboration between Romania and China, which have developed under difficult conditions, under complicated international circumstances and which are the fruit of long efforts perseveringly made by both sides for years. Our two countries have collaborated and mutually assisted each other as friends over these years. We Romanians have a saying: "A friend in need is a friend indeed." True, under any circumstances, our peoples have acted as good friends and have always fought for the consolidation of their collaboration and solidarity. Therefore, we consider that we have a great responsibility to our peoples to do everything possible so that the level of these relations is not lowered at all, but raised with every passing year.

We are glad that during the talks we have started today, we have the opportunity to continue the fruitful dialogue which led to the multilateral development of these relations, to find new ways and possibilities of broadening still further the collaboration and cooperation between our countries, parties and peoples. We consider that conditions exist for Romanian-Chinese relations, which were founded on the principles of socialism, full equality of rights, nutual esteem and respect, to witness a further flourishing through joint efforts, following the increased possibilities created by the socioeconomic development of our countries. Within these relations, we attach great importance to the development and diversification of economic collaboration and to the promotion of broader cooperation in production, in the building of industrial units, in the utilization of natural resources and in other domains of mutual interest. We also consider that the strengthening of our collaboration and cooperation in the fields of economy, science and technology, and culture, and the strengthening of experience exchange at the party and state level completely conform with the interests of our peoples and the general cause of socialism and peace.

Esteemed comrades and friends: We greatly appreciate the efforts your industrious people have made in attaining the target set by the CCP of turning people's China into a powerful socialist state, with modern agriculture, industry, national defense and science, and with an ever-higher living standard of the working people. We note with satisfaction the remarkable achievements scored along this road. And, as true friends, we wish you, dear Chinese comrades, new and ever-greater successes in building a prosperous socialist society in people's China.

We also appreciate the constructive role and stand of the People's Republic of China in international life, in the settlement of the major issues concerning the contemporary world, in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and neocolonialism, for the cause of people's freedom and independence and for progress and peace in the world.

Dear comrades and friends: In Romania, rallying closely around the Romanian Communist Party, the entire people are unswervingly implementing the program for building a socialist society with all-round development and for striding forward toward communism. In accordance with this extensive program, the party's 12th congress decided to make the attainment by Romania of a new and higher stage of development in the 5-year (1981-85) plan period -- the transition from a developing socialist country to a moderately developed one -- our basic and strategic objective. We are fighting for the vigorous development of productive forces, the growth of national wealth and an increase in the standard of living of the entire people.

We attach particular importance to the expansion of the state energy and raw material base, the full utilization of the natural resources of our own country and the development of agriculture, which is one of the major sectors of the Romanian economy. We are making unremitting efforts to raise the work in various aspects of the socialist construction to a new and higher level and to constantly improve the results of all economic and social work. We attach utmost importance to the promotion of socialist democracy and to guaranteeing extensive forms for the direct participation of the working class, the peasants and the entire people in leading the society and the work of various departments. This is a fundamental condition for building socialism with overall development and for striding forward toward communism.

While doing her utmost for the successful realization of socialist construction, Romania also works firmly in the international arena for a climate of detente, peace and broad cooperation between nations, starting from the conviction that only under these circumstances can our people -- like all the peoples of the world -- ensure its free and independent development, its progress and welfare.

We are deeply concerned over the current international situation which continues to be particularly complex. The course of events in the world arena makes war or peace the cardinal issue of today. Now more than ever before the peoples must rally their efforts and take resolute actions with a view to halting the dangerous course of events leading towards confrontation and war, preventing the further mounting of international tension, and resuming and developing the policy of detente and peace, of collaboration and respect for national independence.

We attach the utmost importance to our collaboration with all the socialist countries, we strengthen our solidarity and cooperation with the developing countries, with the nonaligned countries, and we expand, in the spirit of peaceful coexistence, our relations with all the states of the world, irrespective of their social system. We firmly ground all our relations on the principles of equality, respect for national independence and sovereignty, noninterference in domestic affairs, and mutual advantage, and on the principle of not resorting to the use and threat of force.

Living in Europe, we actively fight for security and collaboration on the continent, for the halting of the deployment of intermediate-range nuclear missiles and the withdrawal of the ones in place. We consider that the most urgent necessity of our time is to cease the arms race and to set about taking specific measures for disarmament, and first of all for nuclear disarmament. We advocate most resolutely the settlement of all interstate issues by peaceful means, by negotiations alone. We fight for the eradication of underdevelopment, the bridging of the wide gaps separating the rich countries from the poor ones and for the establishment of a new international economic order.

I am pleased to note the fine collaboration between Romania and China in international life -- and I express my conviction that it will witness an even more vigorous development in the future. Naturally, taking account of the particular conditions in which Romania and the People's Republic of China work there may be some differences of opinion in connection with some complex issues of international life, but the essential fact is that we strengthen our collaboration, work ever more closely together in the spirit of asserting the policy of peace and respecting independence, detente and international collaboration.

Esteemed comrades and friends, I am convinced that our visit to the People's Republic of China will go down in history as another important moment in the strengthening of friendship and cooperation between the two parties, countries and peoples. With this conviction in mind I propose a toast:

For friendship and cooperation between Romania and China,

For the progress and prosperity of the friendly Chinese people,

For the health of Comrade Hu Yaobang and other leading comrades of the party and government of the PRC, and for the health of everybody present!

Economics, Trade Discussed

[Text] Beijing, 15 Apr (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and premier of the State Council, held talks today with Romanian President and General Secretary of the Romanian Communist Party Nicolae Ceausescu.

Zhao Ziyang briefed the guests on China's economic situation. He said China has passed its most difficult economic period and is on the road of steady progress. In the future, he said, we will develop our economy in accordance with China's indigenous conditions focusing on the economic benefits possible. Referring to China's sixth 5-year plan (1981-85), Zhao Ziyang said: We will do two things during the period. First, we must carry out technical transformation of existing enterprises to enable them to operate efficiently and productively. Second, we must concentrate our efforts on energy resources and transportation and communications, making use of equipment imported since 1978 which is being kept in stock. We are now faced with the huge task of economic readjustment. We want to adjust product, technical and enterprise structures, introduce new technology, change the emphasis in heavy industrial production and raise product quality. This is the policy for achieving a fundamental improvement of the financial and economic situation.

Nicolae Ceausescu briefed Zhao Ziyang on Romania's seventh 5-year plan, especially development of agriculture and the energy industry.

Zhao Ziyang and Nicolae Ceausescu discussed development of the two countries' economic cooperation. Zhao Ziyang said he valued the economic cooperation. Romania has proposed a long-term and programmatic economic, scientific and technical accord. It is a very good proposal. We have reached, through common efforts, consensus on detailed articles. This is an important result of Comrade Ceausescu's visit. We are sure this accord will further the development of the two countries' relations, he said. He hoped the two sides would make further efforts to open new channels and spheres of cooperation and to develop their economic and trade relations on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, helping to supply each other's needs, learning from each other's strong points and offsetting each other's weaknesses. He hoped for steady annual growth in the two countries' volume of trade on the 1981 basis. Nicolae Ceausescu said he also hoped for the expansion of economic cooperation and trade.

Those taking part in the talks on the Romanian side included Elena Ceausescu, Ion Dinca and Stefan Andrei. Chen Muhua and Huang Hua were among those present on the Chinese side.

YUGOSLAVIA ADOPTS NEW NATIONAL DEFENSE LAW

[Text] Belgrade, April 13 (XINHUA) -- The Federal Chamber of the Assembly of Yugoslavia today adopted a new law on total national defence. The new law emphasizes the role of the League of Communists, the Socialist Alliance and other socio-political and social organizations and associations of citizens, the objective being to constantly stimulate an active attitude of the citizens and all factors of the society in the defense of the country and the protection of the constitutional order.

The new legislation says the role of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia is especially important in those exceptional situations, if any, in which some leaderships might become paralysed or the resistence weakened. In such situations, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia is called upon to ensure that the resistence be continued and the bodies which under the Constitution are of special importance for the defense of the country restored. In that case the LCY will be directly in charge of the total national defense.

In the new law, measures of preparedness and mobilization, as well as the rights and duties of individual organs in such situations, are elaborated. The Presidency of Yugoslavia, as the supreme organ of direction and command of the armed forces, is alone entitled to impose a state of emergency, order the introduction of measures of preparedness and other corresponding measures, as well as the use of the armed forces. The new law also regulates that all citizens and working people of the country have the duty and right to defend the country in other extraordinary circumstances, which imply armed or other activities which directly threaten the independence of the country, its sovereignty and territorial integrity and the social system defined by the constitution.

XINHUA CITES HONGQI ON FOREIGN ECONOMIC TIES

["RED FLAG Says Expanding Foreign Economic Relations Is Farsighted" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- China's big efforts to expand economic relations with other countries is called a "farsighted strategic decision" in the latest issue of the RED FLAG journal which comes out today. In an article entitled, "On the Question of China's Foreigh Economic Relations," the editorial board of the theoretical journal says China cannot work in isolation and refuse to be in contact with international capital. But in the course of these contacts the struggle against unhealthy tendencies cannot be neglected or abandoned.

"What we should do at present is carefully sum up our experiences and through concerted and sustained efforts, formulate a set of correct principles, policies and measures, that will blaze a new trail in expanding China's foreign economic relations, a new path that is in conformity with China's specific conditions and the present world situation."

In carrying out the socialist modernization program, China should make use of all positive factors not only internally but also externally, RED FLAG says.

The editors go on to say that toward foreign business people who are willing to cooperate and do business in a proper way, China should take a "welcoming" attitude and implement the policy of equality and mutual benefit. As for those foreign traders who go in for swindling, bribing, speculation, infiltration or even espionage, they will meet with firm resistance and some will be prosecuted in accordance with China's laws.

The article notes that joint ventures, co-management, co-exploitation, compensation trade and other methods of direct investment are, at present, the most important ways for China to utilize foreign capital. Foreign capitalists, Overseas Chinese capitalists as well as those from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan are welcome to invest directly in China and are allowed profits.

"We must be prudent in using commercial loans and we should learn a lesson from countries which are heavily in debt," the article says.

It will still be necessary for China to import complete sets of equipment and the long-standing policy will be continued of importing those raw materials that are needed in construction, and particularly new, fine-quality materials, the article says.

Except under the unified arrangement of the state, the article adds, no departments or local authorities are allowed to import consumer goods. The editors urge the people of China to use consumer goods made at home to protect the smooth growth of the national industry.

China will make efforts to expand its business of international labor cooperation. Projects so far undertaken by the Chinese construction industry in other countries have been fairly competitive on the world market. In 1981, 17,000 Chinese workers were sent abroad to fulfill construction contracts.

In the future, China will actively expand exports of minerals, machinery and electrical machinery and will continue to export more textiles and other light industrial goods, especially arts and crafts and native produce.

The article reaffirms China's support for the people of the Third World countries in their just struggles to defend their national independence, develop their national economies and oppose imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism. China will, by every possible means, extend material aid to those needy countries which are in difficulties and are subjected to external aggression and threats.

The article says stringent efforts should be made to master advanced science and management methods of other countries while resolutely opposing the influence of corrupt bourgeois ideas. All people engaged in foreign economic work must strictly observe the discipline demanded of work in this field, say the editors. "In cases of violation of this discipline, offenders will be dealt with according to party and government regulations or state laws," the article says.

CONSTRUCTION OF PETROCHEMICAL PLANTS RESUMED

[Text] Beijing, 15 Apr (XINHUA) -- RENMIN RIBAO and XINHUA correspondents have learned from the national conference on chemical industry capital construction that, with the State Council's approval, construction of four large chemical fertilizer and petrochemical projects have recently resumed one after another in our country.

The equipment for these four large projects is imported from Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany and other countries. Two sets of chemical fertilizer equipment, one for an annual production of 300,000 tons of synthetic ammonia and the other for 520,000 tons of urea, are to be installed respectively at the Zhejiang oil refinery and the Urumqi petrochemical works in Xinjiang. One set of chemical fertilizer equipment, which will use coal as raw material to produce 300,000 tons of synthetic ammonia and 900,000 tons of nitrophosphate fertilizer [xiao suan lin fei 4285 6808 4340 5142] annually, will be installed at the newly built Shanxi chemical fertilizer plant. A set of acrylic acid and ester [xhi lei 7927 7352] equipment with a designed annual capacity of 38,000 tons of ester acrylate [bing xi suan zhi lei 0014 7910 6808 7927 7352] and other products is earmarked for the Dongfang chemical works in Beijing.

The four large projects were stopped or postponed one after another in 1980 because of national economic readjustment. Now, as the economic readjustment is making smooth progress, the state, in consideration of the requirements for developing agriculture and light and textile industries, has decided to resume their construction.

In order to shorten the construction cycle and increase economic returns, the units taking part in the preparatory work, designing and construction of the projects are conscientiously summing up past experiences and lessons in capital constuction, striving to do a good job in the early stage of construction and organizing construction according to scientific procedures. They will strive to complete the projects and put them in operation around 1985. Construction of the two large chemical fertilizer projects in Zhejiang and Xinjiang and the ester acrylate project in Beijing is now fully under way, and preparations are being accelerated for the construction of the large chemical fertilizer project in Shangxi.

CCPCC PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT MEETING ON ECONOMY

[Excerpts] Wuhan, 14 Apr (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee held a meeting in Sichuan and Hubei to exchange experience on industrial and economic propaganda work. The meeting studied ways to strengthen the party's propaganda work among enterprises and to publicize the economic situation in urban areas.

The meeting comes at a time when the policy of opening China to the outside world and enlivening its domestic economy has resulted in a new atmosphere as well as some new problems. Liao Jingdan, deputy director of the Propaganda Department, spoke at the meeting.

The meeting recounted this basic experience: In the economic field, ideological-political work and economic work must be grasped in a unified manner. Neither should be overemphasized at the expense of the other.

The meeting pointed out: The major goal of struggle before the whole party and people throughout the country is to carry out the building of a material and spiritual civilization. In its economic work, an enterprise should stress economic laws, responsibility and results. It should bring into play the role of the workers congress; it should enforce the policy of "to each according to his work" and the system of rewards and penalties. It should tighten labor discipline. All these are basic principles and policies for improving socialist enterprise management. But, at the same time, it is necessary to strengthen the party's ideological and propaganda work. It is necessary to stress that ideology takes precedence. It is necessary to raise people's ideological understanding. It is necessary to stress ideological-political work to guarantee a socialist orientation of economic work.

The meeting pointed out that the basic task and goal in propaganda work for enterprises under the new circumstances is to carry out propaganda and education in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought among workers, strengthen their faith in the superiority of socialism and successfully ensure the adherence to the socialist road and the cultivation of communist ideals.

The meeting emphatically pointed out that it is necessary to strengthen education among workers, especially young workers, in historical knowledge, such as the history of social development and modern history. It is necessary to strengthen the dissemination of the basic knowledge of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. It is necessary to strengthen education in the basic knowledge of the working class and in the proletarian world outlook. It is necessary to make them understand where new China came from, realize that there would have been no new China without the Communist Party and that only socialism can save China. Such realization will enhance their spirit in making greater contributions to the four modernizations.

The meeting also discussed ways of improving propaganda and education work concerning the economic situation.

The meeting was held 29 March-11 April. It was attended by responsible persons of 14 provincial and municipal CCP committees; responsible persons of the propaganda and other relevant departments of Chongqing, Yichang and Shashi municipalities; responsible persons of the Railway Ministry, Communications Ministry and All-China Federation of Trade Unions; and responsible persons of Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, Daqing and other enterprises in charge of ideological work. Responsible comrades of Sichuan and Hubei also attended the meeting.

BEIJING RIBAO ON 'CRISIS OF FAITH' AMONG YOUTHS

["Jottings" by Sui Wen [7137 3080]: "Crisis of 'Faith' and Crisis of 'Energy'"]

[Text] It is said there are now a small number of young people who have lost hope in the future of socialism and in the ideals of communism. Some people say that this is a crisis of "faith." However, after having made serious investigations and analyses of the ideological trend among a certain number of young people, some comrades find that the so-called crisis of "faith" among these young people is rather a crisis of "energy." Pondering over this argument, we think it sounds quite convincing. This "energy" does not refer to what is usually considered energy, that is, oil, coal and electricity. It refers to another kind of "energy," that is, spiritual "energy" which in fact is the basic theory of Marxism. Is this not what has happened? Nowadays, among young people about 20 years old, some have no idea of what basic Marxism is and no common knowledge of philosophy, political economics, scientific socialism and history. As for some older ones, although they may have studied a little, the knowledge they acquired amounts to nothing more than a mastery of a few incomplete and jumbled phrases which were often used in a pragmatic way during the "Cultural Revolution."

According to an investigation made in one unit, 90 percent of the young people working in this unit had never studied philosophy, political economics and scientific socialism; some had never heard of the opium war, the Sino-Japanese war of 1894-95 and the reform movement of 1898. If these young people have no knowledge of the basic theory of Marxism, how could they understand anything about scientific belief?

"Knowledge is strength" was once the slogan put forth by the bourgeoisie during the zenith of their revolution. What they referred to as knowledge consisted of two aspects -- natural sciences and social sciences. In the epoch of socialism, mastery of the theory of Marxism means having "grain, weapons and steering wheels" which will enable them to better know society and nature, and to have wisdom, faith, courage and strength. This is just what Comrade Liu Shaoqi said: "The theory of Marxism will enable us to have the ability of deciding on the program of action and to strengthen our faith in the future of the revolutionary movement." The British philosopher Francis Bacon said: "There is no spiritual defect which cannot be remedied by an appropriate theory." Today should we say that the spiritual defect and the "crisis" of faith existing among a small number of young people should be remedied by the theory of Marxism which is appropriate to our present age? They should study the ABC's of Marxism-Leninism as if to "energize" their minds, and then they will be able to cultivate their faith in Marxism-Leninism and scientific socialism and foster a strong belief on the basis of scientific analysis. For example, only by studying the history of social developments will they be able to understand that socialism will inevitably replace capitalism; only by studying contemporary Chinese history and the history of the CCP will they be able to realize that only the CCP can lead the Chinese revolution. And only by studying and mastering the philosophy of Marxism will they be able to adopt the outlook of a communist. Therefore, rather than saying that there has appeared a crisis of "faith" among some young people, it would be better to say that they have not yet cultivated a strong scientific belief. Those young people who are confused and puzzled and have a shadow of doubt in their hearts can all find the answers they seek from scientific knowledge.

Mencius said: "Anyone losing his noble spirit becomes dispirited and develops a keen sense of hunger." The great American scientist Benjamin Franklin said: "An empty bag can hardly stand ramrod straight." Lack of spiritual ballast is often caused by spiritual undernourishment. The 10-year turmoil has made a great number of young people cry piteously for spiritual food. Some may say that today aren't there a certain number of films, dramas and literary works which are all spiritual food? Yes, they are. But these are probably viewed as only being "nonstaple food." Of course, the "nonstaple food" (which must be clean and not putrid) are necessary and must be made varied as much as possible. However, "the staple foods" are much more necessary, which are the revolutionary theories of Marxism. Marxism is a science which is related to society, the law of social development, the law of development of the proletarian revolution and which can bring about the inevitable victory of communism. Marxism is also a theory which can help us foster a revolutionary outlook. Therefore, for the broad masses of young people of today, we should not only make up the deficiencies in culture and technology, but we should also help them study the social science of Marxism. In fact, Marxism is quite erudite and is continuously being developed, and this "energy" will never be used up. We hope that the CCP committees at all levels and those comrades who engage in political and ideological work will give much consideration to this problem. They should give strategic prominence to solving the specific problem of this "energy" crisis and make more efforts to provide the people with more spiritual "energy."

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES PENG DEHUAI'S MEMOIRS

[Article by Li Rui [2621 6904] originally published in the No 4, 1982 issue of DU SHU [READING]:"Reading Peng Dehuai's 'Account'"]

[Text] Having read through "Peng Dehuai's Account" at one go, I found the book both fascinating and deeply moving. The fact that such a soul-stirring and earthshaking work could appear after 10 years of chaos only attests to the fairness of history and the good fortune of the people.

In December 1966, Marshal Peng Dehuai was escorted from Chengdu back to Beijing where he was criticized and paraded through the streets. Crippled by repeated beatings, he was then kept prisoner in a dark room and made the target of a special investigation which continued until his death in November 1974. Before his death, he suffered from serious paralysis and when he was finally allowed to see his niece he cried, "What should I do? What should I do? I am already paralyzed but still no one understands my case!"

As a "criminal's" attempt to explain himself, "Account" was written to answer the questions raised by those conducting the "special investigation." "It seeks to give a truly honest explanation rather than to praise." These numerous confessions were written over a period of many years in an attempt to clarify the so-called "special case." For today's reader, however, they represent a history of the founding of the Red Army, and a history of 30 years of communist-led revolutionary struggle. They are also the history of a soldier from the old army who spent his lifetime in the military and eventually became commander of several million revolutionary troops. They are the history of a peasant's son who was determined to help the poor and who, after years of diligent study and deep involvement in various organizations, became a proletarian revolutionary. In short, this work is the history of a true Communist Party member and a true human being.

Because many of Marshal Peng Dehuai's experiences and achievements centered around his leadership in battle, it is military conflict which makes up the most important part of his "Account." His earliest adversaries were the Kuomintang warlords, followed by the Japanese and then the Americans. During his lifetime he fought in numerous battles, braving untold dangers and enduring severe hardship. Before rebelling and joining the Red Army, he had 12 years of military experience as a soldier, a squadron leader, a platoon leader, a company leader, a battalion leader and finally as a regiment commander. He was one of the most experienced of the early Red Army's military strategists. (He was also the Red Army's most proficient artilleryman.) During his lifetime he fought very few losing battles and committed virtually no major errors on the battlefield. After reading the two chapters "The Liberation Battle" and "The War To Resist U.S. Aggression and Aid Korea," one comes to appreciate that the world has rarely seen such an outstanding military commander. After the signing of the Korean cease-fire agreement, the commander in chief of the Allied Army, Clark, told his staff that, "this is the first time in history that an American general has signed a truce agreement without first winning the war." ("Account,"pp 262-263 -- all further quotations are taken from the "Account.")

In April 1958, Marshal Peng Dehuai and I traveled together from Wuchang to Guangzhou where we were to attend a meeting. After learning that I was from Pingjiang, he questioned me in detail about the Pingjiang uprising and mentioned that one of his great desires was to compile a military history. Warfare was his profession and also the thing he loved most. It was something into which he had thrown the energies of a lifetime and there was not a single past event, enemy or battle that was not engraved on his heart. Because of this, in spite of the fact that he had no reference material at hand and was forced to endure terrible hardship (alone in a dark room unable to see even a single ray of sunlight from outside), he still managed to give a very clear account of 30 or 40 years of military experience and army life and even managed to record correctly a good number of dates and names. As a historical document this is an extremely valuable work, especially as it provides historians with considerable firsthand material on various historical events.

When I had finished reading this work the first thing that came to mind was the question of his being a so-called "careerist," "hyprocrite" and "iifelong opponent of Chairman Mao." These accusations were at the center of attempts by Lin Biao, Kang Sheng and others at the Lushan conference in 1959 to slander and denounce Peng Dehuai. They remained a yoke around his neck right up until the day he died. While I had little knowledge of Marshal Peng Dehuai's life and had had only limited contact with him myself, I felt at Lushan, as did many other comrades, that the slanderous accusations being leveled at him were entirely unjustied. When I was forced to make a self-criticism I openly admitted that I had expressed a belief in Peng Dehuai's great value and said that only he would have the courage to write such a letter. At the time, my understanding of Peng Dehuai was based on my intuitive feelings as a member of the younger generation; but having read his "Account," I now have a far clearer understanding of these key historical events and am fully aware of where his greatness truly lay.

From the "Account" we can select three events which give a clear picture of just how loyal and farsighted a man Peng Dehuai was.

The first event concerns his command over the army during its defense of Jinggangshan. The Pingjiang uprising of November 1928 opened up the revolutionary base area in the Hunan, Hubei and Jiangxi border area. After the establishment of the border region special committee, Marshal Peng Dehaui, Teng Daiyuan and others led five units of the Fifth Red Army (about 700 to 800 men) on a march to Jinggangshan to meet up with the Fourth Red Army. At this time the reactionary troops in Hunan and Jiangxi were preparing to launch another campaign of "encirclement and suppression" against Jinggangshan. The Fourth Red Army, comprising 5,000 men, each with no more than straw sandles and a single unlined garment, had already run out of salt and the food shortage was becoming desperate. The only hope for survival and growth lay in breaking out of Jinggangshan to launch an attack on the local landlords in the white area. However, with thousands of ill and crippled soldiers, as well as women and children, the Red Army was left with no choice but to dispatch troops to fend off attacks on the area. The Fourth Army's frontline committee held several meetings to discuss this and finally decided that these five units from the Fifth Army should defend Jinggangshan and that Marshal Peng Dehuai should be made a deputy commander of the Fourth Army.

This was an extremely important as well as dangerous mission. Except for Peng Dehuai and Teng Daiyuan, however, other cadres in the Fifth Red Army opposed the decision to stay put, arguing: "We were sent here to liaise and our task has already been fulfilled. We should immediately return to the Hunan, Hubei Jiangxi border area and spread the resolutions of the Sixth CCP Central Committee." Peng Dehuai and Teng Daiyuan, however, were able to "convince those who disagreed that it was worth sacrificing a part of their force in order to increase the security of the whole." With the enemy numbering about 30,000, the Red Army was outnumbered by more than 30 to 1. After 3 days of fierce fighting the enemy had managed to break through three of the Red Army's five fronts. Marshal Peng Dehuai then reassembled three units -- about 500 men -- and broke out of enemy encirclement, taking along the sick and wounded. "It was bitterly cold and a heavy snowfall had left more than a foot of snow on the high mountain ground. My grain pouch had been lost, but as I did not want others to know, I didn't eat a single thing for several days. Feeling hungry and tired, I found it difficult to continue. But as soon as the guns began to sound I was filled with a sudden rush of energy." After breaking the encirclement, however, the troops fell into an ambush and spent 2 months fighting in several counties in the southern section of Jiangxi. The Red Army gradually managed to consolidate and then enlarge its force and, with the capture of Ruijin, these units were finally united with the rest of the Fourth Army. "I gave the Fourth Army's military committee a report on the withdrawal from Jinggangshan. A representative of the Maoist party group said that this was far too dangerous and that these troops should never have been made to stay and defend Jinggangshan." Chairman Mao later made a self-criticism on this point.

The second important event was Peng Dehuai's opposition to the separation of the 1st and 3d Army Corps. The 3d Corps, which was under the command of Peng Dehuai, had originally developed independently; it was only with the second battle at Changsha in August 1930 that it merged with the 1st Army Corps to form a single unit. In his "Account" he records with gratitude that, "after this I carried out my work under the guidance of the general military committee which had Comrade Mao Zedong as its leader." In February the Central Committee had sent a letter which gave a mistaken interpretation of the situation and demanded that Zhu De and Mao Zedong leave the Red Army. Peng Dehuai then sent the Central Committee a letter of his own, expressing his opposition to such a move: "The situation at present is very tense and it is impossible for responsible persons to leave the ranks." "The letter was transmitted by the 4th Army's military committee and the original draft has been kept by Chairman Mao." When the first campaign against "encirclement and suppression" began in November 1930, many of the 3d Army Corps' cadres came from Pingjiang, Liuyang, Yangxin and Daye, and because they had a very narrow provincial outlook they opposed crossing the Gan Jiang and advocated instead that the 3d and 1st Corps separate and develop their base areas on different sides of the river. However, only if the two corps combined their forces was it possible for the Red Army to take on a whole division of enemy troops. The "Account" records that, "In order to destroy the enemy it was very important that we oppose regionalism and unite the Red Army under the political leadership of Zhu De and Mao Zedong. Separation of the 1st and 3d Army Corps was, therefore, impossible. My vote was very important at the time as it could have tipped the scales either way." Marshal Peng Dehuai's analysis of the situation shows that the troops in the Hunan, Hubei and Jiangxi border region were capable of maintaining and improving their position. "Suggestions should certainly be discussed but there must be no effort to restrict action, even less should there be any talk of dividing the 1st and 3d Army Corps. This critical juncture had a direct impact on the subsequent success of the first (and also later) campaign against "encirclement and suppression."

The third main event was the uncovering of a forged letter. The first campaign against "encirclement and suppression" was a major military conflict. The policy formulated by Chairman Mao was one of "opening the door and enticing the enemy deep inside"; that is, attacking the enemy only after he had been drawn into the base area. The 3d Army Corps wanted to withdraw to the center of the base area but was unable to find anyone to act as guide because all the local units were engaged in fighting the local A B groups. There were people in the Jiangxi provincial committee who opposed this military policy, calling it a retreat from the correct line and a form of rightist opportunism and demanding instead that the Red Army "fight all the way to Nanchang." As a result of this, the Red Army was cut off. Leaflets were distributed promoting such slogans as "Support Zhu De, Peng Dehuai and Huang Kecheng and overthrow Mao Zedong." These actions divided both the party and the Red Army. It was at this time that Marshal Peng Dehuai unexpectedly received a letter purporting to have been written by Mao Zedong. This forgery was an attempt to foment discord between Peng Dehuai and Mao Zedong. Because of his understanding of the situation, however, Peng Dehuai was able to see through this immediately and said: "Mao Zedong could never plot like this; he is a proletarian politician. This letter was forged as part of a sinister plot to divide the Red Army and the party." (The circumstances surrounding anti-A B group activity at this time and the Futian incident were extremely complex and are in need of new historical study.) He called an emergency meeting of the military committee that same day and personally composed a short manifesto for the 3d Army Corps, offering firm support to Political Commissar Mao Zedong and the leadership of the general military committee. The manifesto and forged letter were then both forwarded to the general military committee. By the following day the 3d corps had marched to within 15 li of the general military committee's headquarters and "I went and personally invited Political Commissar Mao Zedong to come and talk with the cadres in the 3d Army Corps. This would give the corps' cadres a chance to meet Mao Zedong for the first time."

During the early years of the Red Army, the party's Central Committee was far away in Shanghai. The Red Army began to rise up in revolt across the nation, each area showing its own special strengths and characteristics. Had he truly been a "careerist" he could easily have fueled factional strife. But in the three incidents mentioned above, can we see a single trace of Peng Dehuai's supposed careerism? Rather than being a "carrerist," quite the opposite is true; not once did he take his own personal interests or safety into account but worked instead for the benefit of the situation as a whole. After coming to appreciate the revolutionary spirit and correct leadership of Comrade Mao Zedong, he both respected and followed him. Of course, he was not one to follow blindly and when he felt that he was still unclear on certain points he would prefer to reserve judgment; on certain specific questions there were even considerable differences of opinion between them. But looking at the "Account" as a whole, we can see that Marshal Peng Dehuai followed the correct party line throughout the revolutionary war period. At the emergency session of the Central Committee convened to discuss whether or not troops should be sent to support Korea, everyone was paying close attention to the possible disadvantages of such military action. Marshal Peng Dehuai arrived a little late, having just flown in from Lanzhou and heard another comrade reporting what Chairman Mao had said on the question: "What you all say is correct to some extent, but if we respond to another country's crisis by merely folding our arms and standing to one side we will surely feel rather bad in spite of what may have been said." After reading the "Account's" description of this, can one help but feel moved? "I had just arrived and had not yet spoken but in my heart I knew that we ought to send troops to assist Korea. After the meeting ended I was taken to the Beijing Hotel by comrades from the Central Committee's management office. I simply couldn't sleep that night. At first I thought it was because of the soft bed. I was not used to such luxury so I moved onto the floor but still couldn't get to sleep." (After a sleepless night spent examining the details of the domestic and foreign situation) he "read over the chairman's statement several dozen times and finally came to appreciate that this directive combined both internationalism and patriotism.... Realizing this, I came to understand that military aid to Korea was a correct, necessary and wise policy and also one that could not wait. I had finally come round to the idea of supporting the chairman's wise policy." Twenty years after the actual event, people can now see how tremendously important this "single vote" was.

Memorial articles written by Marshal Peng Dehaui's comrades in arms and his subordinates use similar phrases to describe him: "His loyalty shines like the moon and the sun and his firmness will survive a thousand years." "His spirit will never falter and his noble spirit will never die." "His loyalty and strength are incomparable." "His heroic deeds will be remembered forever and his international spirit has influenced millions".... Such phrases express from the heart a deep appreciation based on years of personal experience.

At the Lushan conference, however, Marshal Peng Dehuai's relationship with Chairman Mao became one of three against seven (three parts cooperation and seven parts opposition). He was accused of following the Li Lisan and Wang Ming lines. His "Account" gives a factual record of the situation. In 1930 the Li Lisan line led to the issuing of the order to attack Wuchang. Marshal Peng Dehuai, who was very familiar with the military situation at the time, said, "First, the city is well defended; second, avenues of retreat are blocked by the Chang Jiang on the flanks and by Nanhu at the rear. "If we are to attack there is a very real danger of the entire army being destroyed." Because of this he refused to carry out the order. He later "compromised" a little, launching an attack on Yuezhou after having established a separatist regime in the six southernmost counties of Hubei. After three of the Jian's brigades attacked Jiangping in July, the Red Army's 8,000 troops from the 3d corps met the enemy force of over 30,000, fighting 4 battles within 3 days and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy. The Red Army then made a lightening attack on Changsha. "As far as military history is concerned, this was not particularly significant." Marshal Peng Dehuai nevertheless made a self-criticism: "The success of the Red Army 3d Corps' attack on Changsha had the effect of offering support to the Li Lisan line." At a military conference held in August the general military committee decided to launch a second assault on Changsha.

During the 6-month period leading up to the conference, the 3d corps had expanded sixfold and because of continual fighting had not had time for rest and reorganization. Marshal Peng Dehuai knew this and said, "As far as the 3d Army Corps itself is concerned, there is an urgent need to train and consolidate troops." It was then decided to postpone the attack on Changsha for a month or so. After this Comrades Mao Zedong and Zhu De managed to convince people that it would be better to abandon head-on confrontation and try instead to capture Jian after feigning an attack on Nanchang. Marshal Peng Dehuai resolutely supported and upheld this decision. Being a frank and unassuming man, he never once tried to cover up his own mistakes. In his "Account" he is very self-critical of the fact that during the fourth campaign against "encirclement and suppression," he consistently implemented the mistaken policies of the Central Committee, including the order to attack Ganzhou. Outspoken and not one inclined to mince words, he would never attept to conceal his true viewpoint. He was particularly forthright and open in his comments on questions of major importance and would never give a thought to personal gain or loss. By the time of the fifth campaign against "encirclement and suppression" he was gradually coming to realize the mistaken nature of the Wang Ming line. He came to oppose the Central Committee on a whole series of military and political issues and would openly express his dissenting opinion by sending telegrams and long letters to the Central Committee. These telegrams and letters, however, were all left unanswered. Marshal Peng was often seen as being similar to Zhang Fei. He himself even admitted the similarities and could at times be rather hot-tempered. But surely all true fighters are prone to occasional fits of temper? Because of his constant opposition he was dismissed as a vice chairman of the military committee. The situation became more and more serious as he began to contrast the mistakes of the Central Committee at that time with the correct leadership of Chairman Mao. During the Guangchang campaign in the spring of 1934 leaders from the Central Committee personally supervised the frontline troops. Their insistence on the 3d corps fighting a positional battle by holding Guangchang no matter what the cost led to disastrous losses. He argued against this decision with those in the command post, enumerating one by one the mistakes the commanders had made. Pointing his finger at them, he accused them of being "armchair strategists," "who wouldn't think twice about betraying your own family." In his "Account" he records with awe-inspiring righteousness that "at that time I had already packed up my old uniform and was preparing to go with Li De back to Ruijin where I expected to be tried, expelled from the party and even killed. I was well prepared for all this and had no misgivings."

At the beginning of the war of resistance against Japan, did Marshal Peng Dehuai follow the Wang Ming line? Let us look at the "Account." "I was never really prepared to follow the principle that 'everything must be acceptable to the united front.' As far as we were concerned, since Chiang Kai-shek was unable to enter the Japanese occupied territory and had no way of reaching us, it was far better to continue Chairman Mao's policy of acting independently and keeping the initiative in our own hands. By the time of the sixth party congress in the autumn of 1938, the Eighth Route Army had grown to 250,000 men and had established many new training brigades. None of this had been approved by the Kuomintang. Had we asked for their approval they would surely have refused."

Marshal Peng Dehuai played a role in many important historical events from the Long March to the war of resistance against Japan, the liberation war and the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea. Everyone is already familiar with these events so their is no need to go into any great detail. The "Account" records all of these events, adding hitherto unknown details. For example, while passing through Xian in the winter of 1939, Marshal Peng Dehuai visited Cheng Qian (then acting as head of the Kuomintang's military committee's field headquarters in Xian) and launched a ferocious attack on He Nanshao saying, "If you try and return to Suide as commissioner the common people will have you put on trial!" He Nanshao never again dared to visit Suide and the area became incorporated within the Shaanxi, Gansu, Ningxia border region.

He also warned Cheng Qian that, "If anyone wants to oppose the communists let them just try firing a shot. We'll immediately fire a shot back out of courtesy. But we'll do more than simply pay them back; you can be sure that we'll keep firing." During the antifriction campaign in 1949 communist forces completely destroyed two divisions under the command of Zhu Huaibing. Although the situation was extremely critical, Peng Dehuai had no time to ask for advice beforehand and it was "only after the event that I reported the situation to the Central Committee and was given its consent." When Hu Zongnan attacked Yanan in March 1947 with a force that was 10 times stronger than that of the communists, Peng Dehuai volunteered to be sent to the front.

As a child Marshal Peng Dehuai received little education and had to rely on his own study efforts to improve his cultural knowledge. During his time in Jiangxi he "felt slightly inferior" because of what he saw as his lack of theoretical knowledge. His knowledge of society and his understanding of human affairs were derived from his own practical experience. Similarly, his ambitions, ideas and feelings also derived from experience rather than reading. It was perhaps for this reason that he sometimes seemed unaccustomed to and inept at defending himself. We can cite the Huili conference held on the Long March as an example of this. Because of a letter written by Lin Biao calling for the restructuring of the military leadership, Peng Dehuai was seriously misunderstood at the conference. Peng Dehuai was completely ignorant of the letter. "Although I had heard that there was some problem, I didn't bother to say anything... and continued to act in my normal way." This question was again raised at the Lushan conference. His "Account" attempts to sum up the results of this reluctance to defend himself: "During the last 24 years the chairman has mentioned this incident on about four different occasions but I have never raised the issue with the chairman myself nor have I discussed it with anyone else. I can now see, however, that it would have been better to try and clarify the situation earlier and thus stop the whole thing from dragging on. Moreover, this would have prevented troublemakers from taking advantage of the incident. It was wrong for me on occasions such as the Huili conference not to go and explain things to the chairman myself." Such a straightforward and self-critical person!

Even at the Lushan conference, where he was subjected to unremitting slander and criticism, Marshal Peng Dehuai continued to show concern for the situation as a whole and preferred not to defend himself. In fact, he had come to recognize the various problems involved in the Great Leap Forward quite early on and was very conscientious in sending relevant material to the chairman. When it was announced at the Wuchang conference in December 1948 that grain production was up to 750 billion jin, he was rather skeptical and decided to go on a inspection tour of Hunan. After visiting his hometown he could see things in a much clearer light. Frightened that the masses were in danger of starving, he immediately sent a telegram to the Central Committee, saying that the province could sell only 90 billion jin of grain to the state rather than the full quota of 120 billion jin. At the beginning of the conference he spoke seven times during group discussions, and after attempting in vain to discuss things with the chairman, he spent the whole night writing his famous letter. If we take his character, personality and past actions and statements into account, it is not difficult to see that this was an entirely normal and natural thing for him to do, nor is it at all surprising that he affirms in the letter the "great achievements" of the Great Leap Forward. The last passage of his "Account" is absolutely fascinating. "As the conference developed I adopted a very accommodating attitude and was willing to accept anything so long as it did not threaten the interests of the party or the people. The examination I made of my mistakes was also rather exaggerated and not entirely accurate. However, when it came to the question of the so-called 'military club,' I remained firm in my commitment to the principle of seeking truth from facts. People were very insistent on this question at the Lushan conference and the pressure became even greater at the enlarged conference of the military committee in Beijing (from the end of August to the beginning of September)." On one occasion, "I completely lost my temper with those people who were trying to push me into a corner, saying, 'why don't you just go ahead and expel me from the party; you could even have me shot. You all seem so keen on a 'military club,' why don't you go and sign up!'"

"After the Lushan conference had ended I was determined to rid the army of any influence I may have had during my 30 years as a soldier." "Since I could never damage the party-led People's Army, I was left with no choice but to destroy myself."

Marshal Peng Dehuai's simple lifestyle and abhorrence of extravagance are well known. Slanderous remarks about his so-called "opportunism" and "hypocrisy" were nothing more than a deliberate attempt to stand true facts on their head. Peng Dehuai spent the poverty-stricken years of his childhood and youth begging for food, chopping wood, collecting coal and working as a laborer. One of his younger brothers died of starvation, and soon after this on the second day of the new year his grandmother wanted to take him and two other children out begging for rice. "I stood on the doorstep and refused to go, afraid that people would bully me if I started begging for rice. My grandmother said, 'If we don't go we're done for. I wanted to go out yesterday but you refused, and if you don't come along today the whole family is going to starve to death.' There was a bitterly cold wind blowing outside and swirling snowflakes filled the sky. When I saw my grandmother, who was an old woman of 70 with white hair and bound feet, hobble out of the house with her walking stick and the two other children at her side (my third younger brother was not yet 4 years old), I felt such pain that it was as if a knife had been sunk deep in my heart." The writing of these "confessions" and the description of such painful memories would often reduce this world-famous military commander to tears. "I watched them walk off into the distance, then grabbed the axe and went up into the hills to cut some firewood. I later managed to sell 10 cash worth of wood and used the money to buy a small packet of salt. While I was looking for wood I discovered a large patch of mushrooms, collected them and then took them back to be cooked. I ate some of them with my father and grandfather. When my grandmother and the others returned home after dusk she took the bag of rice they had got through begging and mixed it with the mushroom broth and then told my grandfather, my father and me to start eating. I refused to eat anything and my grandmother began to weep, saying, 'we manage to get some food from begging but you still don't eat. If we all eat something we can survive, but if we don't eat we'll all die together!'"

"It still hurts even today to think about this and whenever I do it brings tears to my eyes. I won't write about it!"

"How many times in the course of my life I have endured such pain and grief!"

Throughout his whole life Marshal Peng Dehuai never forgot the suffering of his own past and always felt concern and love for the laboring people. The simple class feeling he maintained throughout his life and the rigorous demands he made on himself were inseparable from the bitter hardship of his own childhood. "In my later years I would often think back on my childhood suffering and could in this way prevent myself from being corrupted and could remind myself never to forget the lives of the poor."

At Lushan, Marshal Peng Dehuai said that he never bothered to keep his notebooks or other writings. He has, however, left later generations with the work "Peng Dehuai's Account." Peng Dehuai was very fond of the two lines from "Li Sao:" "The road stretches out into the distance, I shall travel near and far in my search for truth." "Li Sao" and the "Account" are separated by more than 2,000 years of history; moreover, their contents and value are, of course, very different. However, the two authors are similar in their rectitude, the loyalty, wisdom and the purity of their ambition and also in the fact that they both provide models for their successors. "Peng Dehuai's Account" should be recommended to every young person, and to every Communist Party member. It is a textbook on how to be a true communist and on how to be a true human being.

CHINA DAILY PRAISES 'PENG DEHUAI'S ACCOUNT'

[Article by Zhang Huimin: "Peng's 'Account' Is a Precious Heritage"]

[Text] During the "Cultural Revolution," tens of millions of officials and intellectuals became targets of criticism. They were confined, repeatedly interrogated and made to recount their own history, confessing what evil things or "crimes" they had done in the past. Marshal Peng Dehuai was one of them.

Peng's name cannot be strange to the world. During World War II, he was vice-commander-in-chief of the Chinese Communist-led Eighth Route Army. In the early 1950s, he was commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers in Korea. Later, he became the first minister of defence of the People's Republic. But he is remembered as much for being a leader of China's revolution and a brilliant strategist as for his unenviable fate which was intertwined with one of the most difficult times in China's history.

Dizzy with the great victories of China's revolution, some people in the party began to swell with pride in the late 1950s. They became detached from reality, so much so that they thought they could "reach for the moon." Under the influence of such a paranoid mentality, in 1958, the "Big Leap Forward" broke out. The campaign failed to bring in fast and great economic results, as had been hoped. It was launched in a rush of leftist recklessness and seriously disrupted China's industrial and agricultural production.

Peng, upright and straight forward by nature, was among the first to speak out the truth. In a letter to Chairman Mao Zedong, Peng warned against "mushrooming of braggadocio everywhere" and "petty bourgeois fanaticism," and called for lessons to be drawn and imbalances to be readjusted. What this letter should have brought on the author was beyond the expectation of anyone. He was branded a "right opportunist," removed from the post of defence minister and subjected to harsh criticism.

By mid-1962, the evil consequences of the "Big Leap Forward" were plain enough to see. In June, he wrote another letter as long as 80 thousand characters, in which he reviewed his own history and defended and vindicated himself. Unfortunately, he was accused of trying to "reverse the verdict on him" and met only with more criticism.

The storms of the "Cultural Revolution" in 1966 engulfed multitides of innocent people. It could not spare the "recalcitrant" Marshal Peng Dehuai as a matter of course. From December 1966 until his death in November 1974, he was "tried" as many as 130 times until he was too weak to get up from bed. And he was repeatedly ordered to write down his history by way of confessions.

Peng was posthumously exonerated in December 1978 when China's political life began to veer round to normal. The confessions he wrote in the eight years of imprisonment and the letters of 1949 and 1962 have now been published as Marshal Peng's "Account." In a lengthy note, the editors of the "Account" called it a "precious heritage."

That the "Account" was sold out in Beijing's biggest bookstore in a few hours underlines the love and respect the Chinese people bear for the hero. That such a book is published after all proves that history is inexorable and truth must prevail.

JIEFANG RIBAO DISCUSSES WORKERS' EDUCATION

["Opinion" column article by Yin Mingfa: "Measures Must Be Taken To Ensure Workers' Education" -- reprinted from JIEFANG RIBAO -- date not given]

[Text] The rapid development of science and technology has created a new problem in education: how to continuously update knowledge. Extending school terms or changing courses quickly will not solve the problem; we must think instead in terms of "lifelong education." This will enable scientists and technological personnel to keep up with new development. We must also institute work-study programmes for workers and staff members.

Work-study is necessary to raise productivity and sharpen competitive skills. This means increasing every worker's individual productivity, which depends, first of all, upon his educational level, skill, and his attitude towards work. Advanced machinery is only hardware if it is not operated by a man with the proper scientific knowledge, experience, and skill. Statistics show that when the education level of a worker increases by even one grade, his productivity rises accordingly. In the machine-building industry, productivity increases by an average 1.5 to 2 per cent; in light industry, by 1.5 to 2.2 per cent.

In Shanghai, 1,248 workers who were studying in spare-time universities solved more than 3,700 production and technical problems at work. Some 370 of these solutions involved significant inventions.

For this reason, the leadership of some enterprises has wisely chosen to arm workers with modern scientific and technological knowledge. The "resolution on strengthening the education of workers," issued by the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and the State Council, points out: "The principal mark of a modernised enterprise is its relatively high level of science and technology. A relatively high level of science and technology can only be achieved through systematic education of workers."

If the party and administration leaders of an enterprise attach importance only to production targets, and not to raising the political consciousness and scientific and cultural levels of their workers, or consider education an added burden, they are either short-sighted or lack concern for the fundamental interest of the working class.

Even capitalists, in order to earn more profits, organise study programmes for workers and encourage talented personnel. They see this as an important means of getting ahead in a capitalist economy. The Japanese say that the competition in the international market is basically one of technological capability and management skills. A director of one Japanese automotive company has said: "After World War II, how could Japan, a defeated country with a limited territory and insufficient natural resources, survive in international competition? There was no other way out for Japan than to develop her technology."

Some American corporate leaders have said: "In the past, we said people should study in their spare time. Now we tell our personnel that study is a part of their work."

In China, labour productivity in many fields has dropped. In the engineering industry, for example, every U.S. worker produces the equivalent of $50 million a year, and every Japanese the equivalent of $249 million. While in China, the average is 9,000 yuan RMB.

Apart from the disruption and sabotage of the gang of four, the main cause of decreased productivity is the low level of scientific and technological knowledge of workers. Some 80 per cent of China's have not reached a junior middle school educational level and lack basic knowledge of modern science and technology.

Professional skills are also lacking. In some developed countries, semi-skilled and unskilled workers make up only 4.7 per cent of the work force, while in our country, two-thirds of the workers are semi-skilled. The proportion of technicians in the rank of workers is only 2.8 per cent. In light industry, they comprise less than one per cent. These figures show that education of workers is not just an individual need, but is vital for raising productivity.

In order to institute work-study, a system must be established to guarantee the right of workers to study. Some capitalist countries have issued laws ensuring adult education. In 1977, France passed a law which stipulates that all workers who have worked for more than two years in an occupation, and half a year continuously in a factory, are entitled to study for 500 hours with wages paid by their work units. If necessary, their wage will be paid by the state. Sweden's law stipulates that as of 1975, all state-owned and privately-owned units must grant study leaves requested by workers; the government provides subsidies to compensate them for the decrease in their incomes. In order to guarantee the success of China's modernization, it is of paramount importance that we take immediate measures to protect the right of workers to study.

YANG JINGREN CLOSES NATIONALITY AFFAIRS MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 15 Apr (XINHUA) -- The key to success in nationalities affairs work lies in promoting economic development in the nationalities areas, and the guarantee of a successful economic construction in the nationalities areas rests in strengthening the great unity of all nationalities. These were the points emphasized by Yang Jingren, vice premier of the State Council and minister in charge of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, in his closing speech yesterday afternoon to the second membership session (enlarged) of the commission.

The session started on 2 April in Beijing. It summed up the work completed since the first session (enlarged) of the commission in 1979 and decided on the tasks for the future. In his speech, when discussing the need to strengthen national unity, Yang Jingren pointed out that it is necessary to guard against big-nationality chauvinism and local-nationality chauvinism and to gradually develop and improve the relations between different nationalities. He also noted that both big-nationality chauvinism and local-nationality chauvinism are types of contradictions among the people. He further stressed that it is necessary to conduct serious investigation and study and to use Marxism-Leninism in summing up the good experience in nationalities affairs work.

The session decided that the 1982 tasks for the State Nationalities Affairs Commission will be to educate the people in nationalities policies through in-depth propaganda work, to commend model units and advanced individuals in promoting unity of various nationalities and to perform several good deeds in developing economic construction in nationalities areas in coordination with the departments concerned.

The session also proposed the legislation of a "nationalities day" in order to further consolidate and develop the great unity of the people of all nationalities throughout the country and to promote the building of material civilization and spiritual civilization in the socialist motherland.

The session was attended by members of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission of 23 nationalities from 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, responsible persons of other nationalities affairs departments and representatives of the central departments concerned totalling more than 290 people in all.

CHEMICAL INDUSTRY VICE MINISTER SEES ADVANCES

[Text] Beijing, April 12 (XINHUA) -- China's chemical industry achieved a 13.6 percent increase in output value in the first three months of this year over the same period of last year, announced Lin Yincai, vice-minister of the chemical industry, at a national telephone conference here this afternoon. Increases in the output of such major products as chemical fertilizer, soda ash, caustic soda, sulphuric acid, plastics, paints, dyestuffs ranged from 6.4 percent to 40 percent.

These output increases were achieved with a notable reduction in per unit energy consumption. Compared with the same period of last year, per unit energy consumption in ammonia production dropped by six percent at big chemical fertilizer plants. Per unit coal consumption in ammonia production went down by two percent in medium-sized nitrogenous fertilizer plants. Per unit consumption of electricity in calcium carbide production dropped by seven percent.

The industry turned 24.6 percent more profits over to the state during the first three months this year compared with the same 1981 period, said the vice-minister

RENMIN RIBAO SCORES UNAUTHORIZED COALPITS

[Text] Beijing, April 13 (XINHUA) -- Today's PEOPLE'S DAILY frontpages a letter from Han Zhanyuan and two other miners working at a colliery in the Pingzhuang mining administration of Inner Mongolia criticizing unauthorized coal pits.

The letter says 10 rural communes or subdivisions in the area have, since 1976, opened coal pits without the approval of the regional authorities. These unofficial pits have endangered the lives of the miners and caused great losses of coal deposits in the Gushan mines, the letter says.

The unauthorized mines have cut through Gushan coal tunnels on 29 occasions and 290 meters of tunnels in the colliery have had to be abandoned. The work face of the colliery in which the letter writers work has been reduced from 120 meters to 30 meters. Losses amount to 143,130 tons of coal and 1.11 million yuan.

The PEOPLE'S DAILY in an editor's note says that similar unauthorized activities occur in many parts of China. These include theft of state property, seizure of the land owned by the state and damage to forests. This sort of activity is due to laxity of discipline and dereliction of duty on the part of local officials. Some leaders even give their support to these shady activities.

The editor's note advocates resolute action to stop undermining state assets.

XIANG NAN DISCUSSES BUILDING FUJIAN ECONOMY

[Article by Xiang Nan, excerpted from FUJIAN LUNTAN [FUJIAN FORUM] No 1, 1982: "On Seeking Truth From Facts"]

[Text] Seeking truth from facts is the most fundamental fine tradition and work style of our party. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "Marx and Engels laid down the dialectical materialist and historical materialist ideological line. Chairman Mao summarized it in four Chinese characters -- 'seeking truth from facts' -- and wrote them on the front gate of the party school." "Seeking truth from facts is the basis of the proletarian world outlook and is the ideological basis of Marxism. It was because we did seek truth from facts that we were able to win victories in the revolution in the past. Now, we must also rely on seeking truth from facts in order to achieve the four modernizations." These words of Comrade Deng Xiaoping are a precise summary of the actual struggle of our party over the past 60 years. Let us review the party's history. When the ideological line of seeking truth from facts was implemented, the revolutionary cause experienced smooth development; when this line was violated, the revolution suffered setbacks.

In the early 1950's, our party was very cautious in rural work. At that time, it repeatedly stressed that in promoting agricultural collectivization, it was necessary to adopt the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit and adopt the principle of gradual transition. First of all, there were work exchange organizations, then there were mutual aid teams, lower level and advanced production collectives. The party stressed that we should not adopt methods of exploitation and coercion and commandism in dealing with the peasants. All these opinions were perfectly correct and practical, and thus distinctive results were achieved. However, after 1956, we became feverish, and consequently advanced collectivization was suddenly promoted throughout the country. The entire country was rashly communized in 1958 when some people said that "the people's communes are good" and "people's communes' large size and collective nature are good." All these were contrary to seeking truth from facts, voluntary participation and mutual benefit or gradual transition. From that time, the practice of one person alone having the say ran rampant. When an individual made a decision, other people were not allowed to give different opinions. Although people were talking about "seeking truth from facts," they were indeed promoting the practices of doing things rashly, one person alone having the say, doing things rigidly regardless of the specific situation and leaning to one side. We learned a bitter lesson from this. Such practices have brought great losses to our socialist construction cause.

We must bear this lesson in mind in working, running magazines and newspapers and in doing everything. We must refrain from promoting the practices of doing things rashly, one person alone having the say, doing things rigidly regardless of the specific situation and leaning to one side. How are we going to achieve this? We must "seek truth from facts," that is to say, work in accordance with our party's fine traditions and in accordance with the line formulated at the third plenary session.

It is not at all easy to uphold seeking truth from facts. In order to do this, we must be brave, must not be afraid of offending others and must be fearless of opposition from others. At present, a strange phenomenon has appeared in certain places: You can remain safe if you do not uphold the principle of seeking truth from facts or of being an upright person, but instead are a "good old boy" who does not give opinions at all, whether positive or negative. But people will try to be nitpicking toward you if you study and solve problems by upholding the principle of seeking truth from facts. Advancing the various forms of the agricultural production system is a major policy of seeking truth from facts. It is a policy that accords with our country's current development of agricultural productivity and is simultaneously a major measure which accords with the desire of the broad masses of peasants. However, for a certain period in the past, some comrades were afraid to face reality and were not bold enough to vigorously push the various forms of the agricultural production system.

Even up to now, some comrades are still worried and have a lingering fear. They confuse the system of fixing output quotas on a household basis and the system of contracting production for laborers with individual farming, and confuse individual farming with capitalism. They are afraid of the word "contracting," afraid that it will lead to capitalism.

In fact, there is nothing to be afraid of. The system of fixing output quotas on a household basis and contracting production for laborers does not mean individual farming. We are not going to change the system of ownership by means of adopting various forms of the production responsibility system. Even if it is individual farming, it does not mean capitalism. Our past practice of eating from the same pot of rice and raising a big tumult is not the true realization of "collectivization." It is rather like the production methods and ways of living of ancient times. Those practices are not communist or socialist, and are far from being considered as capitalist. The society then was like a primitive communist society. In a primitive society, several hundred people surrounded and wildly chased a deer. When this deer was caught, they could have a big meal, but if not, they could only starve. What a backward production method, and what a backward society this was! If we favor such tumult, we are dragging our current socialist economy back to ancient times. This is not advancement, but great retrogression.

In their works, Marx and Lenin do not mention the economic nature of the various forms of the production responsibility system, such as fixing output quotas on a household basis and contracting work tasks to individual households. However, to judge the correctness of a certain economic policy and a certain economic management system, the criterion is not whether it has been said in the "books," but whether it meets the need of production and can advance the development of production. Therefore, as long as it meets the needs of production, and as long as it is conducive to the development of production and can enrich the country and bring benefits to the people, we must boldly and assuredly implement it, even though it has not been mentioned in the "books" and even if there is opposition from other people. By so doing, we are really upholding the principle of seeking truth from facts and working in accordance with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong thought.

In order to seek truth from facts, we must emancipate our minds and develop democracy. Emancipating the mind must not be divorced from the four basic principles. We must realize that at present, people's minds have not been overly emancipated, democracy has not been overly developed and the "leftist" mistakes have not been overly criticized. The present situation in Fujian is that people's minds have not been sufficiently emancipated, democracy has not been fully developed and the remnant "leftist" influences have not been sufficiently criticized. These are the main trends.

Certainly, this is not to say that the trend of attempting to shake off party leadership and shake off the socialist road does not exist among certain intellectuals and certain young people. However, this is not the general or the main trend of all the intellectuals. If we do not view the issues this way, we will not be able to understand the actual situation in Fujian.

Lenin said: "Vivid and creative socialism is established by the masses themselves." In order to overcome various difficulties in the path of advancement in a truth-seeking way and victoriously advance the socialist construction cause, we must trust and rely on the masses. During the era of the "Great Leap Forward," we did a lot of silly things which wasted money and manpower and violated the objective laws. One of the major factors accounting for this was that we were promoting the practice of one person alone having the say, we were not adhering to the mass line, and we were not taking others' advice, but were even suppressing different opinions. Moreover, we removed all the true words as "white flags" and established the lies and exaggerations as "red flags." Consequently, the practices of giving arbitrary and impracticable directions, boasting and exaggerating and being carried away by the "communist wind" ran rampant. Therefore, in order to seek truth from facts, we must not always regard ourselves as infallible and must give full play to democracy.

How should we formulate principles for economic development in Fujian in accordance with the specific local conditions? This is an important criterion for judging whether or not we are working in accordance with the truth-seeking spirit of the third plenary session.

We must clearly understand Fujian's actual situation. The per-capita income of people in Fujian is 25 percent lower than the average per-capita income throughout the country, but the population growth rate is 25 percent higher than the average population growth rate throughout the country. In view of these facts, we cannot deny the fact that Fujian is backward. Since Fujian is situated in the forefront, and the country has not promoted large-scale backbone projects in Fujian over the past 30 years or more, how can Fujian be strong? In light of this, we may make mistakes similar to those during the era of the "Great Leap Forward" if we do not work in accordance with our capability, if we put forth hasty demands and work beyond the limits of the objective conditions.

However, things can usually be viewed from two angles. Fujian is backward and only has the paper manufacturing industry, sugar refining industry, tea industry and some handicraft industries such as lacquerware and stone carving. There is not much heavy industry other than a small number of iron and steel plants, petrochemical plants and machinery plants. The country as a whole must close, suspend and merge enterprises and shift to other types of production in carrying out economic readjustments. However, if we follow the same route of closing, suspending and merging enterprises and shifting to other types of production in the province without carrying out specific analysis, we are not seeking truth from facts and may have bad results.

In accordance with the actual situation in Fujian, the major tasks of economic construction in the province are to "unite, reform, amalgamate and shift production." In order to speed up economic development in Fujian, it is quite necessary to promote key industries. Fujian cannot be enriched only by relying on the production of several stone carvings, several tons of sugar and several boxes of tea. Fujian should grasp the opportunity and boldly make use of foreign capital to build oil refineries and cement plants which have a capacity of several million tons. Fujian must promote afforestation and build chemical plants, engineering plants and plastics plants; it must build a high-grade glassworks and several medium-density fibreboard manufacturing plants. In addition, Fujian must also build hydroelectric power stations which have a capacity of several 10,000 to 1 million kilowatts. We must concentrate our forces to repair the airport, the pier, the railways and the communications equipment. Certainly, we must also promote light industry. There has been a suggestion of producing "3 million" in 10 years' time, that is, producing 1 million tons of sugar, 1 million dan of tea and 1 million boxes of cigarettes. Thus, our financial situation will be enlivened.

If all the above-mentioned tasks are accomplished, the economy of Fujian will be enlivened and other social problems such as employment, social mood and so on will be solved accordingly. When more vigorous ideological and political work is launched on such a basis and harder blows are dealt at the sinister trends of smuggling, selling contraband items and engaging in graft and bribery, speculative activities and feudal worship and so on, the lofty image our party had in the early 1950's will reappear. The broad masses of the people will realize and believe that socialism is superior to capitalism.

Let us all learn how to seek truth from facts. No matter what happens, we must refrain from promoting the practices of doing things rigidly regardless of the specific situation, one person alone having the say, doing things rashly and leaning to one side. We must promote a vigorous and lively atmosphere in the academic seminars of the theoretical circles, and must link theoretical research with the actual situation in Fujian Province. Our workers on the provincial theoretical front must try their best to provide answers to all sorts of new problems deriving from economic construction in Fujian and gradually find a new path which suits economic construction in Fujian.

JIANGSU CIRCULAR ON ECONOMIC CRIMES ISSUED

[Text] After the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere was made public, the Jiangsu Provincial CCP Committee Standing Committee immediately studied and discussed it. On 14 April, the provincial party committee and the provincial people's government issued a circular to all prefectural, municipal and county party committees, all prefectural administrative offices, all municipal and county people's governments and all departments directly under the provincial authorities.

The circular points out: The decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council is a document of far-reaching, important significance which guarantees the penetrating, healthy development of this struggle, ensures smooth progress in China's socialist modernization and maintains the integrity of our Communist Party. It must be seriously studied, publicized and implemented. The circular puts forth the following tasks:

1. All party members and functionaries, particularly leading members of all departments under the prefectural, municipal and county authorities and organs under the provincial authorities must immediately organize to study and discuss the decision; thoroughly understand the guidelines of the decision, its formulation and the content of some questions; and deepen the understanding of the significance and nature of this struggle, its necessity, urgency and protracted nature. After study, they must reach a common understanding, act in unison and unflinchingly carry this struggle through to the end.

2. It is necessary to broaden and deepen the publicizing of the decision among the masses so that it is made known to every household. Leading cadres at all levels should give lectures on what has been studied and integrate the lectures with reality. It is also necessary to continuously publicize -- in a widespread way -- the NPC Standing Committee's decision on severely punishing criminals who seriously undermine the economy, to launch a powerful political offensive, and encourage more people to take the road of leniency toward those who confess their crimes before 1 May of this year.

3. All prefectures, municipalities and counties must examine how well they have launched this struggle in accordance with the guidelines of the decision and work out measures to correctly implement the decision by integrating the measures with the actual situation. It is necessary to carry out the decision as planned. Important situations and issues in all localities must be reported in good time.

SIX KILLED IN SHANGHAI PLANT ACCIDENTS

[Text] At about 0900 yesterday, an explosion took place at the No 2 chemical plant of the May 4th farm in Fengxian County. The explosion threw 100 square meters of asbestos tile roof more than 80 meters away from the building, and two men were killed instantly.

According to labor bureau statistics, this was the fifth fatal accident in Shanghai Municipality in April. These accidents resulted in the deaths of six people. Most of the deaths were caused by failure to strengthen safety control in production and lack of safety education for young workers. The municipal departments concerned call on all units to pay full attention to safety in production and not to forget safety while grasping production.

NANFANG RIBAO ON BLOCKING LOOPHOLES IN BANKS

["Notes on News-Gatherings" by Dong Pingbo [5516 1627 3134] and Su Zhongheng [5685 0112 5899]: "It Is Imperative To Block the Loopholes in Banks and Credit Departments"]

[Text] In dealing with the smuggling and speculation and profiteering cases unraveled recently in our province, a problem has drawn people's attention. That is, the huge sums of money many criminal offenders used in smuggling, speculation and profiteering were provided by some banks and credit departments through various channels. The banks, business departments and credit departments in some places have simply become smugglers' private treasuries.

Why have such phenomena occurred? This is chiefly because some staff members in the banks and credit departments were corroded and lured by smugglers and speculators. They colluded with each other and tried by every possible means to embezzle state funds. After exorbitant profits were sought, they shared this ill-gotten wealth. According to records of the legal departments, such cases were uncovered recently in some cities and counties, such Shantou, Huiyang, Zhanjiang, Foshan and Guangzhou. For example, in handling the smuggling and speculation cases which were uncovered last October, the procuratorial organs in Chaoyang County found that the business office of the county's Hongchang Bank had, in reality, become a smugglers' and speculator's business office. Through providing cash, granting credits and offering falsified accounts to speculators, this office received a large amount in bribes, such as cash, sugar, oil, fuel, clothes, watches, radio-cassette players and other items. The bribes taken by the accountant and two cashiers in this office totaled over 26,000 yuan.

The tricks played by the corrupt bank and credit department staff members in colluding with criminal offenders varied in a hundred ways. Some of them took advantage of their power to examine and approve credits and allocate funds to grant credits to speculators and violate the relevant stipulations for credit work; some of them granted themselves credit under all sorts of pretexts and then gave it to their relatives to engage in smuggling and seek exorbitant profits; some of them offered speculators and smugglers falsified bank accounts and received "commission fees" from them; and some of them even stole large sums of money themselves. For example, in Pianshui commune, Wuchuan County, a staff member of the business office in the country's bank, Li Jingfang, was a serious grafter, whose case is rare even in the entire country; Luo Zhiyong in the Duozhu business office in Huidong County's bank stole 95,000 yuan in cash and was called a "treasury mouse." All this has seriously violated the state financial rules and regulations and credit policy, sabotaged the socialist economic order and done great damage to the readjustment of the national economy and the construction of the four modernizations in our province. However, the pockets of these corupt bank staff were filled with ill-gotten gains. For example, in collusion with Zhou Qinzeng, former commune leader who has been arrested, and others, the business office in Luang commune, Chaoyang County, received "commission fees" and "management fees" by offering trust accounts to those units which were not approved to open such accounts and shared them among the staff. The so-called "commission fees" and "management fees" it gained from 1979 to the first half of last year totaled 750,000 yuan. As another example, the "credit" granted to speculators, which was handled by Gao Hongguang, deputy director of the Nianshan office of Huidong County's bank, amounted to nearly 1 million yuan, of which 500,000 yuan have yet to be retrieved. He then shared the "commission fees" and bribes with his colleague, receving over 2,000 yuan personally in addition to color TV and radio sets. What is more serious is that some corrupt bank and credit department staff members even tried by every possible means to falsify bills and conceal evidence of their crimes after their activities were exposed, attempting to escape from the legal departments's investigation.

In order to guarantee that the construction of the four modernizations in our province develops smoothly and to better carry out the struggle against economic crimes, so that criminal offenders will have no opportunities to steal, it is reasonable for people to require that the banks and credit departments learn from these lessons and adopt effective measures to block the loopholes and, together with the legal departments, to deal resolute blows at criminal offenders in the economic field.

GUANGXI ECONOMIC CHIEF URGES IMPROVING INDUSTRY

HK150431 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Guangxi must realize a big improvement in industry and communications production this year and regard enhancement of economic returns as the starting-point and basis of all work. The region must make big efforts to improve quality, reduce input consumption, enhance product suitability for the markets, open up new prospects, reach new levels and make new progress. This was stated by regional economic committee Director (Huang Jia) at the regional industry and communications work conference, which opened on 13 April, in conveying the demands on industry and communications work put forward by the regional CCP committee and people's government.

The report delivered at the conference by Comrade (Huang Jia) proposed: This year the Central Committee and State Council have clearly stipulated still higher demands regarding the question of economic returns. This is of particular importance in Guangxi, where the industrial system is relatively backward. The region has made a good start in the first quarter. The light and textile industries recorded steady growth, while there was a notable rise in heavy industry, from its decline. Total value of output was 20 percent higher than in the same period last year. Sales of industrial enterprises covered by the budget rose by 16 percent, while profit increased by 17 percent and profit turned over to the state by 18 percent.

However, there are certain problems regarding economic returns. For instance, sales outlets of some products are not good enough. Sales orientation of some farm machinery and electronic products is not clear, and their sales are continuing to decline. The problem of losses in the small nitrogenous fertilizer plants has not been completely solved. Judging by the present situation of the region's industrial production, we have not attained the previous best levels in many indices. We lag behind the level of many other provinces and municipalities in labor productivity, profit per 100 yuan of investment and floating capital per 100 yuan of output value.

Comrade (Huang Jia) pointed out: In order to achieve a rapid turn for the better in industry and communications, we must stabilize the policies and mobilize the enthusiasm of the enterprises and workers. The regional CCP committee and government have decided to make some policy decisions:

1. The system of responsibility for profit or loss in the Liuzhou iron and steel plant will be extended from the present 3 years to 5 years without change, to allow the plant to self-reliantly recover half the investment of its coking furnace and cooperate with the Liuzhou chemical fertilizer plant to develop urea production.

2. There will be no change in the method of 50-50 with the state of financial quota overfulfillment by the regional communications bureau in exercising financial responsibility.

3. The waterway section of the Xi Jiang from Nanning to Gui County is to be dredged.

4. Workers' bonus payments are to be controlled at last year's level and must not exceed it. The prefectures and municipalities must grasp the balances in a unified way. Too-low wage norms for piecework and overfulfillment of piecework quotas must be readjusted. It is necessary to overcome egalitarianism in bonus payments.

He also stressed: Emphasizing economic returns does not mean that we do not want any speed. We cannot increase social products or accumulation without speed, and many problems cannot be solved properly. However, speed without returns is hollow. Hence we must combine speed with returns, quantity with quality and seeking truth from facts with revolutionary spirit.

Comrade (Huang Jia) conveyed the views of the regional CCP committee: This year the region should insure a 5-percent increase in industrial output value and strive for a 6-percent increase compared with last year. At the same time, it is necessary to promote economic returns and ensure the fulfillment of state revenue quotas. The following are specific demands: The percentage of first and top-grade quality products should increase by 3 to 5 percent; turnover of floating capital should be reduced from the original 140 days to 120 days; production costs should be cut by 0.5 percent to 1 percent; energy consumption should be cut by 3 percent; labor productivity should increase by 3 percent; and regarding production safety, the numbers of accidents, deaths and injuries should be reduced by 15 percent.

[Excerpts] The rural areas of Hubei have further mobilized an upsurge of studying and implementing the minutes of the national rural work conference, circulated by the Central Committee. This activity has effectively stimulated current spring farmwork.

Party organizations in the province have sent over 50,000 cadres, organized into work groups and led by leading comrades, to the rural areas to proclaim the spirit of the document and help the brigades and production teams put their leadership groups on a sound basis and perfect the responsibility systems. In Xiaogan Prefecture, 20 percent of the production teams had failed to implement their economic contracts, while in certain teams the contents of the contracts were not specific and the implementation measures were incomplete. After studying the minutes, these teams have taken remedial measures. In Xiangyang Prefecture, according to statistics, the draft oxen of 5,000 production teams were being fed and raised by a rotational system, the land of 3,000 production teams had been divided into excessively small plots of responsibility land, while 1,000 production teams had in varying degrees abandoned industrial and sideline production projects under collective ownership. By studying the central document, they found the yardstick, and the teams solved these problems properly.

Economic Chief's Address

[Excerpt] (Wei Lizheng), director of the provincial economic committee, delivered a report at the provincial industry and communications work conference on 14 April. He demanded that all industry and communications enterprises work hard to improve economic returns, straighten out the enterprises and step up ideological and political work. Comrade (Wei Lizheng) pointed out in his report: The general guiding principle for industry and communications production this year is to pursue speed from striving to improve economic returns and to attain and exceed previous record levels in all economic and technical indices. The key to fulfilling this task lies in summoning up determination and working hard. The main tasks are as follows: 1) Unify economic returns with growth rate in ideological understanding, and strive to achieve a thoroughly sound growth rate; 2) all enterprises must make big efforts to improve management and base their efforts on tapping internal potentials; 3) output of products should be increased as long as they sell well and meet market needs; 4) product quality must attain and exceed previous best levels in each enterprise; 5) production costs and profit per 100 yuan of output value, calculated according to comparable factors, and consumption of raw materials and energy must attain and exceed previous best levels in each enterprise; 6) communications and transport must strive to tap potentials and increase capacity; 7) promote technical improvements and thereby improve economic returns; 8) preserve centralized unity and stress the notion of the whole country as one chessboard, and continue to work hard to invigorate the economy still further.

(Wei Lizheng) pointed out: In order to achieve relatively great growth on the basis of improving economic returns, industrial and communications enterprises must persistently follow the principle of putting politics in command and ideology to the fore, and do a good job in strengthening ideological and political work. At present, it is particularly necessary to conduct vigorous and lively propaganda and education in the economic situation among the workers. We must launch the struggle to oppose corruption by capitalist ideology, and deal resolute blows at illegal and criminal activities in the economic field. We must extensively launch labor emulation and create a warm atmosphere of learning from the progressives and models and setting up standard bearers.

SICHUAN RIBAO ON SEVERELY PUNISHING CRIMINALS

[SICHUAN RIBAO commentator's article: "Criminals Must Be Severely Punished According to Law"]

[Text] SICHUAN RIBAO carries a commentator's article entitled "Criminals Must Be Severely Punished According to Law." The article says: He Deming, a worker in the rear base of a certain unit of the PLA Railway Engineering Corps stationed in Chengdu, (Zhang Jianmeng), a policeman in a transportation escort team in a Lanzhou public security suboffice under the public security office of the Lanzhou railway bureau, and (Cao Jingping), a young worker in a guest house in a certain unit of the PLA Railway Engineering Corps stationed in Chengdu, were punished according to law for raping women on the strength of their powerful connections. What the Chengdu Intermediate People's Court has done according to law amply shows the might of our socialist legal system and reflects the strong desire of the people to severely punish the criminals and guarantee good public order. This action will certainly enjoy the support of the broad masses.

The article says: From the criminal activities of He Deming and other criminals we can see more clearly that although the "gang of four" was smashed and the root of social disorder was eradicated, public order has not yet been fundamentally changed for the better. There are still such criminal activities as killing, raping, robbery and actions such as He Deming and others have committed in our society. We must fully realize that it is a protracted, arduous and complex task for us to do a good job in maintaining social order. It is necessary to take the socialist legal system as a weapon and mobilize and rely on the masses in striking at criminal offenders so that criminal activities will be stopped and good public order will be maintained.

The article continues: The criminal activities of He Deming and the other two criminals were an evil consequence of the social influence of Lin Biao and the "gang of four." During the 10 years of chaos, they were juveniles, and were seriously poisoned by unhealthy ideology. In addition, they did not take a correct attitude toward their good family background and wrongly regarded this as a privilege. Thus, their bad qualities were gradually shaped, resulting in the committing of such a serious crime as humiliating and raping women. In our country, all citizens are equal before the socialist legal system. No privileges are allowed. When one commits a crime and violates the law, no matter what one's family background and class status, one must be punished according to law. The crimes committed by He Deming and the other two criminals, who thought they had a strong backing, were even more serious. They not only damaged the prestige of the party, but also injured the relations between the party and the people. So, they must be dealt with more severely. Otherwise, popular indignation cannot be assuaged and good social order and the immediate interests of the people cannot be guaranteed.

The article says: From the crimes He Deming and the other two criminals committed, we can see that it is important and imperative for us to strengthen juvenile education. Party organizations at various levels must place this work on their agenda. Parents, especially senior cadres, must pay serious attention to the education of their children. This is a matter concerning the success and failure of our party's cause and the prosperity and decline of our country and nation. We must make up our minds to do a good job in juvenile education as well as in the education of our own children Of course, we must also see that, in the main, the character and nature of most juveniles are good. Even among those who have [illegible] crimes, the great majority are victims as well. We must adopt the policy [illegible] redemption and remolding toward them and, at the same time, deal resolute blo[illegible] verely punish criminals such as He Deming.

HEBEI'S LI ERZHONG ON RURAL WORK, OTHER ISSUES

[Summary] Governor Li Erzhong said, in his government work report to the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress: Developing the rural economy in an all-round way is the key to achieving all-round national economic growth. The central tasks in the rural areas are to implement the minutes of the national rural work conference and do a good job of stabilizing and perfecting the production responsibility systems. In connection with this, it is necessary to straighten out commune and brigade finances, and carry out propaganda and education in keeping the two things unchanged for a long time.

He said: "We must cherish and rationally use every inch of land and strictly control the use of land for buildings or housing by commune and brigade enterprises or peasants. We must resolutely stop the bad tendency of indiscriminate occupation and use of land." Li Erzhong said: The province must do a good job of continuing to readjust the internal structure of agriculture. "Viewing the province as a whole, we must keep the grain area stable at over 70 million mu. The cotton, oil-bearing and other crops must be sown well in accordance with the 1982 cultivation plans. We must certainly not reduce the grain area in order to pursue diversification." The province must do well in promoting agricultural science and technology and launch mass cooperation and popularization activities. "The current drought is becoming more serious every day. Government at all levels must strengthen leadership and mobilize the cadres and masses to continue to bring into play the spirit of self-reliance and arduous struggle."

Li Erzhong also said in his report: Market prices are an important matter that concerns everyone. We must continue to implement the State Council circular on stabilizing market prices, further strengthen market controls and deal resolute blows at economic crimes.

"In view of the trends of thought of anarchism, extreme individualism and bouregois liberalization in shaking off party leadership and going against the four basic principles which have appeared among certain people, Li Erzhong pointed out in his report: We must step up study of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and strengthen thorough and meticulous political and ideological work to solve these problems. We must continue to study well the resolution of the sixth plenary session and the party principles and policies, and, in this connection, study selected relevant works of Marx, Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, so that people will continually enhance their socialist awareness and establish the communist world outlook. This is the core of promoting the building of spiritual civilization. We must carry out education in loving the party, the motherland and socialism, and criticize and oppose decadent bourgeois ideology and the liberalization trend of worship of capitalism." It is necessary to conduct education on the economic situation by making calculations and drawing contrasts.

Li Erzong also said: "There is a serious situation of overstaffed offices, aging cadres, slowness in work and low efficiency in Hebei. It is now imperative to solve this problem. Before the central authorities make specific arrangements for the reform of the bureaucracy at and below the provincial level, we must do a good job in ideological work, to calm people's minds and correct their attitude; we must carry out duties well, stay at our posts and work well. We must also carry out investigation and study in a planned way way and make preparations for reforming the bureaucracy."

HEILONGJIANG: PEOPLE'S PURCHASING POWER INCREASES

[Text] According to our sources, in the past 3 years, the people's purchasing power in our province has gone up every year. The per-capita purchasing power increase was 76.3 yuan. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, a number of important measures have been adopted, such as: increasing the procurement prices of farm and sideline produce, promoting the responsibility system of calculating the payment according to output, increasing wages of staff and workers in urban areas, issuing commodity subsidies and developing commodity production. As a result, residents in both urban and rural areas have more cash and have substantially increased their purchasing power.

Along with an increase in the amount and variety of commodities supplied to the markets by agricultural and light and textile industrial departments and an increase in peasants' consumption of grain, oil, meat and eggs, the level of residents consumption in both urban and rural areas has improved by a relatively large margin. It is estimated that over 90 percent of the durable consumer goods such as televisions, recorders, washing machines, refrigerators and electric fans owned by residents in urban and rural areas were bought in the past 3 years.

JILIN ACTING GOVERNOR VIEWS LIAOYUAN INDUSTRIES

[Text] Changchun, 13 Apr (XINHUA) -- Zhang Gensheng, secretary of the Jilin Provincial CCP Committee and acting governor of Jilin, and Vice Governor Dong Xin recently visited industrial enterprises in Liaoyuan municipality, conducted investigations and studies on them and helped the municipality in readjusting its industrial structure, formulating technical transformation plans and studying how to improve economic results.

Liaoyuan municipality is a medium-sized city with light and textile industries as its primary industries. The output value of light and textile industries accounts for more than one-half of the city's total industrial output value. But the existing light and textile industries need new equipment and technical transformation to improve their present situation marked by old equipment, backward technology, high production costs and poor economic results. In the last few years the departments concerned of the municipality have repeatedly requested the provincial departments concerned to help solve this situation, but to no avail because the problem involves many departments.

During their investigation and study tour of Liaoyuan, Comrades Zhang Gensheng and Dong Xin found that the city had the technical foundation and raw material sources for such products as flannel, photosensitive material, terylene yarn, artificial leather, monosodium glutamate, glazed tiles and welded steel pipes. They held that economic results can be improved if efforts are made to undertake technical transformation and expand the productive capability of the existing enterprises that turn out these basic products. They discussed the matter with the engineers and technicians concerned and decided to give priority to transforming the production lines for flannel and corduroy, for motion picture films and photographic paper, and for glazed tiles and toilet ceramics. According to a rough estimate, an investment of 32,890,000 yuan is required to transform these three production lines. When completed and put into operation in 1984, they will supply more products to the market, raise output value by some 220 million yuan, increase profits by 42,570,000 yuan and increase tax revenue by some 22 million yuan. All loans can be paid off in 1 year after completion of the three production lines.

After Zhang Gensheng and Dong Xin finalized the technical transformation plan, they held a meeting of comrades of the Changchun branch of the Bank of China, the Jilin Provincial Textile Goods Import-Export Company, the first provincial bureau of light industry and the provincial department store.

The meeting solved questions concerning the amount of loans, the source of equipment and the marketing of products and thus preliminarily solved the longstanding problem regarding the technical transformation of enterprises.

LIAONING OFFICIALS CHECK RIVER HARNESSING WORK

SK050600 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] According to our sources, responsible comrades of the Standing Committee of the Liaoning Provincial People's Congress, together with responsible comrades from the Benxi Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee, recently inspected the administrative work of river courses in Shenyang and Benxi municipalities. During their inspection tour, they noted: The current administrative work of river courses in urban areas has been fairly poor. This is a hidden danger. As done by Benxi municipality, cities concerned should enhance their sense of the legal system to the work and adopt active and proper measures to harness or improve river courses as soon as possible to do away with obstacles in controlling floods and to ensure urban industrial production and safety of urban people's property and life.

By adopting ways to impose administrative restrictions and integrate economic planning with urban construction, Benxi municipality has carried out the operation of clearing away obstacles in harnessing rivers. While removing 240,000 cubic meters of ore from the riverbank, the Benxi Iron and Steel Company has decided never again to throw ore on riverbanks. The 11 plywood factories along the river banks in Benxi are moving out one after the other from the area. The eight major open channels and six covered drains in the city, which are used for diverting floods, are being harnessed. Since last autumn, the municipality has appropriated over 2 million yuan and has organized 13 units along the riverbanks to harness the (Zhangjia) River of 5 li long and to build 4,900 meter of stone support wall. They removed 130,000 cubic meters of sand, stones and garbage from the river.

During their inspection tour, they discovered some areas where there were problems in the administrative work of river courses, such as the section of the Hun River in Shenyang municipality, where units pay no attention to the provisions in this regard and adopt every possible measure to construct illegal buildings along the riverbanks. In the January-September period last year, 16 units built houses over 11,400 square meters of floorspace along the riverbanks, including office buildings, garages, schools, workshops and dormitories. These illegal buildings have drawn the attention of the Shenyang Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee and the municipal people's government. Responsible comrades have conducted an inspection along the riverbanks and have organized departments concerned to establish the administrative organ of river course to solve housing problems according to the provisions and to prepare for building additional antiflood dikes to ensure the safety of Shenyang municipality.

GANSU REPORTS WHEAT SEEDLINGS GROWING WELL

SK110221 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 10 Apr 82

[Excerpt] On the afternoon of 8 April a responsible comrade of the provincial agricultural bureau told our reporter: We should seize the present golden opportunity to strengthen the field management of winter wheat and try all ways possible to reap a good harvest of winter wheat. This is very important to our fulfillment of the annual grain production plan.

The responsible comrade of the provincial agricultural bureau continued: We sowed about 11 million mu of winter wheat this year, 1 million mu more than in last year. At present, winter wheat seedlings have turned green smoothly and most are growing well. In many places wheat seedlings are healthy and strong. Judging from the current situation, we have done a better job in applying additional fertilizer this year. This is very conducive to the growth of winter wheat. However, we must not relax our efforts and be blindly optimistic. We should do our work in a down-to-earth manner, continue our efforts and pay close attention to wheatfield management.

XINJIANG'S ISMAIL AMAT SPEAKS ON INDUSTRY

HK110311 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 10 Apr 82

[Summary] Xinjiang Regional Government Chairman Ismail Amat spoke at the regional industry and communications work conference on 10 April, stressing: "The key issue in promoting the region's industrial production and transport and communications work this year lies in improving economic returns. This year the region's industry and communications front must achieve a great improvement in increasing economic returns, and develop a new outlook."

He said: "Poor economic returns have become an outstanding weak point in the region's industrial production. The leading cadres of the industry and communications departments must unify growth rate with economic returns in guiding ideology, and strive to achieve a growth rate with good returns. In order to shift economic work onto the track of improving economic returns, it is necessary to make great efforts to tap potentials and pursue speed in improving economic returns and to economize labor and material input and meet the needs of society."

Ismail Amat said: "Improving economic returns involves questions of system and economic structure. It is essential to readjust the economic structure and reform the system. However, we cannot wait until the system is reformed and the economic structure reformed to solve the problem of improving economic returns. The leading departments at all levels must strengthen planning guidance and administrative intervention, and step up supervision and inspection. It is necessary to adopt administrative and economic measures and resolutely intervene to deal with low-quality high-priced products that do not meet the needs of society."

Ismail Amat pointed out in his speech: "Xinjiang's industry and communications work must uphold the principle of regarding planned economy as primary and regulation by market mechanism as secondary, be subordinate to the overall national situation, protect normal competition and support the development of local industry."

He also said: The comrades of the industry and communications departments must actively develop production, prevent and reduce waste and do a good job in increasing income and economizing expenditure, so as to bring about a big turn for the better in the region's financial situation. He said: "The industrial departments must continue to vigorously develop production of consumer goods, especially in the light and textile industries. Capital construction investment must not exceed the planned figures. Enterprises that do not have enough to do must tap their potentials and turn losses to profits. It is necessary to do everything possible to increase Xinjiang's transport capacity in petroleum, coal, cotton, salt and so on. Transport and communications should increase profits. The commerce, supply and marketing, and foreign trade departments must improve their management methods, cut losses and increase profits, and fulfill and overfulfill their revenue quotas."

The economic departments must strengthen financial supervision, strictly enforce financial discipline, and seriously investigate and deal with violations of financial and economic discipline such as tax evasion, failure to turn over profit to the state and indiscriminate bonus payments. Economic criminals must be severely dealt with.

TAIWAN OIL COMPANY SIGNS CONTRACT WITH KUWAIT

OW070341 Taipei CNA in English 0302 GMT 7 Apr 82

[Text] Taipei, 7 Apr (CNA) -- Chang Mu-lin, vice president of the Chinese Petroleum Corporation [CPC], has signed a 1-year contract with 'Ali al-Khalifah as-Sabah, Kuwaiti oil minister. The contract took effect April 1, 1982.

Chang went to Kuwait, Singapore, Japan and other countries in late March to discuss business relations with each and returned to Taipei Tuesday.

Elaborating the contract to buy oil from Kuwait, he said there are four main points:

-- The Chinese will buy 85,000 barrels a day of crude oil from Kuwait at a price of U.S. $32.30 per barrel, which will be adjusted if official prices change.

-- The surcharge of U.S. $1.00 per barrel is cancelled.

-- The margin of shipments has been extended to 5 percent from 1.25 percent.

-- Terms of payment is 30 days after delivery.

Chang said that although the CPC cuts its purchasing amount from the former 140,000 barrels a day to 85,000 barrels a day, Kuwait understands the reason and will continue friendly relations with the ROC.

According to Chang, Kuwaiti authorities agreed to supply more oil to the Republic of China when necessary.

Chang said the CPC has decided to sell 2,000 metric tons of asphalt to Singapore, to be shipped Tuesday. He disclosed that the CPC will increase its export business whenever there is a chance.

The oil expert pointed out that leading world oil companies have stationed many permanent representatives in Japan. He visited Japan to exchange views with those representatives. The CPC will in due time buy liquified gas and light oil from the Japan-based company representatives, he added.

ALUMINUM ALLOY DEVELOPED FOR WEAPONS USE

[Text] Our country has made a breakthrough in the development of castings of ultra-high-strength aluminum alloys, it has been revealed by a high-level research unit. We are now able to produce high quality castings that are required in the manufacture of fighter aircraft, missiles and precision machine parts for national defense. This will be very useful to us in developing the most advanced national defense science and technology. One of the persons participating in the research told this paper's reporter that the ultra-high-strength aluminum alloy we have successfully developed can withstand pressures of up to 50 kilograms per square centimeter, which is more than 2 times stronger than any common aluminum alloy cast. When used in castings in the manufacture of aircraft or missiles, the alloy will allow considerable savings in the weight of these weapons and will broaden their navigation ranges and improve their combat performance.

He noted that the smelting and casting of ultra-high-strength aluminum alloys are under constant research in scientifically- and technologically-advanced countries. These processes are the key techniques in making the precision parts and elements of tomorrow's missiles and aeronautical and space devices.

According to the sources of the concerned units, until the precision casting technology is established, military and research units will have to go to foreign markets for the high quality aluminum alloy castings needed in developing or repairing fighter aircraft and manufacturing machine parts for national defense. After this high precision technology is established, it will be useful to our country in the independent development of high performance fighter aircraft and in safeguarding the country's military secrets.

Premier Sun Yun-hsuan, when answering a legislator's interpellation in September 1980, pointed out that extra-strong aluminum alloys necessary for national defense would be developed according to the state plan. The aforementioned research unit started to establish the ultra-high-strength aluminum alloy smelting and casting technology in July 1981. At the same time, it established the heat treatment technique in order to attain the highest performance.

At present, considerable achievements have been made in developing the various techniques.

According to the research unit, the technology will be established in the following stages: Smelting test -- which includes covering, degassing, dross removing, adding of alloy and the change that takes place; test of the impact on performance generated by adding alloy elements and impure substances; casting test -- which includes tests pertaining to fluidity [liu dong xing 3177 0520 1840], flash groove complement [mao kou bu chong xing 0379 0656 5943 0339 1840] and heat crack [re lie xing 3583 5933 1840] and methods for improvement; heat treatment test -- which includes the impact of solid solution heat treatment and aging heat treatment [shi xiao re chu li 2514 2400 3583 5710 3810]; and the casting itself, thereby completing the establishment of the technology of casting ultra-high-strength aluminum alloys.

TRADE WITH MIDDLE EAST -- Taipei, 5 Apr (CNA) -- The Republic of China's two-way trade with Middle East countries last year totaled 5,535 million U.S. dollars with a deficit of 3,053 million dollars. The customs listed exports to the Middle East at 1,241 million dollars, up 9.6 percent over the preceding year, and imports from that region at 4,294 million dollars, up 2 percent and accounting for 20 percent of this nation's whole-year imports. Crude oil and oil products took a lion's share in this nation's imports from the Middle East. As a result, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia have become the No 3 and No 4 exporters to the ROC, next only to Japan and the United States. [Text] [Taipei CNA in English 1420 GMT 5 Apr 82 OW]

U.S. SPOKESMAN RESPONDS TO BREZHNEV PROPOSAL

[Text] Washington, April 17 (XINHUA) -- The Reagan administration said today it would study "carefully" a suggestion by the Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev that the American and Soviet leaders hold a summit meeting in a third country possibly next October. Brezhnev made the suggestion in a PRAVDA interview which was carried by TASS today. He turned down U.S. President Ronald Reagan's earlier proposal made on April 5 that he and Brezhnev meet during a special U.N. session on disarmament in New York in June.

White House communications Director David Gergen said: "We will, of course, study President Brezhnev's remarks very carefully. In the meantime, President Reagan remains hopeful that President Brezhnev will come to the United Nations this June and meet him then."

On Brezhnev's suggestion, Gergen said, "our position on a full-fledged summit is: We do not exclude such a meeting in principle, but the meeting would have to be well-prepared and there should be a reasonable chance that it would have worthwhile, positive results." "We do not interpret his remarks as a rejection of the President's expressed hope" that Brezhnev would come to New York in June, he added. He said that in the meantime, "we remain hopeful the more informal meeting the President proposed would take place."

Western news agencies believed the White House statement suggested that the United States was not willing to hold a formal U.S.-Soviet summit meeting.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. ROLE IN FALKLANDS DISPUTE

["Newsletter From America" by Shi Dawei [0670 6671 3634]: "The United States and the Malvinas Islands Dispute"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig again flew to Buenos Aires on 15 April for his second round of mediation in the dispute between Argentina and Great Britain over the Malvinas Islands. Haig crossed the Atlantic four times in only 7 days, traveling twice to Argentina and Britain. This is yet another urgent shuttle diplomacy carried out by a U.S. secretary of state, following that by Kissinger.

Leading American newspapers have given the Malvinas headline treatment every day since the dispute broke out and have devoted long reports to its development, fully reflecting American concern over this conflict. The Malvinas poses a difficult problem for U.S. diplomacy. President Reagan said of the dispute: "This is an extremely embarrassing situation for the United States, because both parties to the dispute are our friends." These words set out the American predicament in the Malvinas dispute.

Britain is America's ally in Europe. Mrs Thatcher's Tory government has consistently supported the U.S. stand on major issues such as nuclear weapons in Europe. Britain provided America with considerable help during the affair of the American hostages in Iran in 1979. After the Malvinas affair started, the 10 countries of the EEC took concerted action to stop selling arms and military equipment to Argentina and embargo imports from that country. When the United States announced that it was taking a neutral and mediatory stand in the matter, some influential British newspapers pointed out that it was insufficient for the United States to keep a neutral stand in the affair; America should realize that Britain is its ally and take similar action to that of the other allies.

Certain British members of Parliament even accused the United States of "not just remaining neutral, but actually viewing with hostility any war moves against Argentina."

Argentina and the United States are both signatories of the 1947 Rio Pact. According to this pact, when one of the signatories is attacked, the others are obliged to aid it. However, U.S.-Argentine relations have only become close in the past year of so. Since the Reagan administration took office, the current Argentine president, Galtieri, has on numerous occasions expressed his hopes of joining hands with the United States to curb Soviet influence. President Galtieri and Foreign Minister Mendez have repeatedly stressed this orientation of Argentine foreign policy, and have also supported U.S. policy in Central America. According to the Argentine press, Argentina has promised to allow the United States to set up missile bases in the South Atlantic, on condition that the United States supports Argentine demands for sovereignty over the Malvinas. U.S. action in voting in the Security Council in favor of the resolution demanding the withdrawal of Argentine forces from the Malvinas and in providing the British fleet with intelligence on the Argentine forces on the islands has made the Argentine Government unhappy, and it says that the United States is leaning toward Britain.

Amid the heated emotions of the two parties to the dispute, the United States has strenuously advocated that both sides should refrain from the use of force; on the one hand it wants to maintain its traditional relationship with Britain and preserve NATO unity, and on the other it wants to keep close ties with Argentina and prevent the Soviet Union from establishing a beachhead in Latin America.

People concerned here say that the possibility of solving the dispute peacefully does exist, because neither side really wants to resort to force. Both Argentina and Britain are facing serious economic difficulties. According to estimates, Argentina has spent over $500 million in recovering the Malvinas. The EEC embargo on imports from Argentina has also brought that country still greater economic problems. The British task force is costing 10 million pounds a day, and moreover the London Stock Exchange became chaotic as soon as the fleet sailed. Some $4.4 billion were lost on the exchange in 1 day. Up to the present, neither side has eliminated the possibility of solving the dispute peacefully. In a telephone conversation with Reagan on 15 April, President Galtieri again stressed Argentina's "willingness to solve this crisis by peaceful means." The U.S. Government hopes that its mediation efforts will succeed. But it seems that Haig will have to spend still more energy in walking the tightrope and getting the affair to develop in a way that suits Washington's desires.

DEFENSE MINISTRY RALLY MARKS DPRK ARMY ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Beijing, April 17 (XINHUA) -- The 50th anniversary of the founding of the Korean People's Army was marked at a rally here today sponsored by the Ministry of National Defense.

The rally, in an army division of the Beijing Garrison of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, was attended by Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the P.L.A. General Staff; Li Zhongxuan, deputy commander of the P.L.A. Beijing units and political commissar of the Beijing Garrison; Chon Myong-su, ambassador of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; Colonel Kim Byong-ho, military, naval and air attache of the Korean Embassy in Beijing; and more than 1,000 commanders and soldiers of the division.

Extending congratulations on the anniversary, Li Zhongxuan paid tribute to the Korean People's Army under the leadership of Korean President Kim Il-song for its dedication in fighting for the independence and liberation of Korea and for safeguarding Korea's socialist revolution and construction during the past five decades.

He wished the Korean People's Army great success in modernizing national defense and realizing the independent and peaceful reunification of their motherland. He said the Korean nation is an inseparable whole and reunification is the sacred will of the Korean people.

"We firmly support the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's just policy on the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea, and their resolute opposition to any scheme that would create two Koreas," he said.

Speaking of the friendship and unity between the people and armed forces of China and Korea, who have encouraged and supported each other, he said the Chinese people and armed forces will continue to work for unity and friendship with the Korean people and armed forces.

Colonel Kim Byong-ho delivered a report reviewing the battle history of the Korean People's Army.

The people's army, under the leadership of President Kim Il-song, fought heroically and won great victories in the war of resistance against the Japanese aggressors and in the war of liberation, he said. During the post-war years the army has time and again smashed the enemy's aggression and provocation, safeguarding their country's security and socialist construction, he added.

He detailed the schemes of the aggressing U.S. Armed Forces and the South Korean puppet troops for arms expansion, war provocation and a permanent division of Korea. "The Korean people will certainly accomplish the historic cause of reunifying their motherland," he said.

Referring to Korean-Chinese friendship, Kim Byong-ho said: "The two peoples and armed forces are close comrades-in-arms who have fought many battles in the same trench. The Korean people and armed forces will forever work shoulder to shoulder with the Chinese people and armed forces in the struggle against their common enemy."

Hosts and guests watched a theatrical performance at the rally. A Korean feature film was also shown.

RENMIN RIBAO ON POPULATION DECREASE IN KAMPUCHEA

["International Jottings" by He Li [0149 4539]: "Self-Denial of Rumor"]

[Text] According to the most recent material released by the puppet regime in Phnom Penh, the population of Kampuchea now stands at around 6.8 million. This figure is worthy of closer attention.

According to these figures announced by the Phnom Penh regime, the population of the country, therefore, has declined by 200,000 during the past few years. People will remember that when the Democratic Kampuchean Government gained control of the entire country in 1975, Kampuchea had a population of 7 million. There is nothing at all surprising in this. In recent years, the Vietnamese invaders have been engaged in a bloody war of aggression that has resulted in very heavy casualties on the Kampuchean side, and the number of Kampucheans killed, combined with the number of refugees forced to flee the country, is certainly not less than 200,000. For this reason, therefore, the figure of 6.8 million for the current population of Kampuchea is probably fairly accurate.

However, this exposes the falsity of the so-called true story spread by the Vietnamese and the Heng Samrin regime concerning the supposed killing of 3 million people by Democratic Kampuchea. The facts are perfectly clear: Either the Kampucheans have given birth to more than 3 million children during the last few years of chaos and war, or this story is nothing more than a monstrous lie concocted by Hanoi and Phnom Penh. The second alternative is clearly the case. Since the latter is true, we can see that it is the rumormongerer himself who has refuted his own rumors.

16 Apr Press Conference

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- Romanian President and Communist Party Secretary-General [as received] Nicolae Ceausescu held a press conference at the Great Hall of the People for Chinese and foreign correspondents this afternoon at which he described his China visit as another manifestation of growing friendship and cooperation between Romania and China. He said he met with Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang, exchanging views on issues of common interest and a series of international questions. "We all felt cooperation between our parties and countries should continue to grow on the basis of equality, mutual respect and mutual benefit," he said.

During his visit, he said, agreements and protocols have been signed, among them a long-term programmatic agreement on economic, scientific and technical cooperation. The agreement opens new vistas for economic, scientific, technical and cultural cooperation. He said the measures China has taken to develop her economy left him with a very good impression. The Chinese people have achieved great success in building their nation and raising their living standards. He wished the Chinese people steady advance on the socialist road under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party.

Referring to the international situation, Ceausescu said the Romanian and Chinese leaders share common views on many issues. He said efforts should be made to prevent the international situation from deteriorating any further. Measures should be taken to solve questions by peaceful means.

On the Middle East situation, he said he country is worried about the increasing tension in the region, especially in southern Lebanon. He said Israel must withdraw its troops from Sinai before April 25 and return it to Egypt.

Referring to Europe, the president said Romania will join other European countries in opposing deployment of nuclear weapons in Europe. He urged the countries concerned to withdraw and destroy the medium-range missiles already deployed, creating a nuclear-free zone on the Continent. "This will be conducive to peace in Europe and the world as a whole," he said. He hoped developing countries would strengthen their unity to contribute to human progress.

When asked about Sino-Soviet relations, Ceausescu said, "These are affairs between China and the Soviet Union. But, we always hope the two sides will, on the basis of equality and mutual respect of each other's independence and sovereignty, conduct direct negotiations to solve their differences."

Answering questions on Sino-American relations, he said, "China is correct to require the American Government to abide by the relevant agreements reached by the two sides, and give up its support for Taiwan. We fully support China's position that the question of Taiwan is an internal affair and that no interference will be brooked by any foreign country."

Beijing Television Interview

HK190925 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1300 GMT on 17 April carries a 20-minute filmed report on an interview of President Ceausescu by a Central Television Station reporter under the title: "Comrade Ceausescu, General Secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and President of Romania, Answers Questions Put by the Reporter of this Station." The interview is held in a reception room, where a Chinese interpreter and a Romanian interpreter are also present, sitting between Ceausescu and the reporter. The president's answers are voiced-over in Mandarin. He speaks from written notes throughout the interview.

The station reporter begins the interview by saying: "Comrade President Ceausescu, we are very glad that we have an opportunity to interview you today. Comrade president, you are an old friend of China respected by her people. In 1971 and 1978 you made formal friendly visits to our country and during your present visit you held talks with party and state leaders of our country. We hope you can tell us the impressions of your current visit." To this request, Ceausescu begins his words with a remark that "the talks and agreements reached with Comrades Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai during my previous visits play an important role" in the close friendship and cooperation between our two countries. Then he says the purpose of his visit is "to guarantee the incessant development of the friendly relations between our two parties and two countries." After mentioning that he had talks with Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang and Deng Xiaoping "in a spirit of understanding, mutual esteem and respect," he points out the significance of the cooperation agreements signed with China during his visit.

Next the reporter asks: "Under the leadership of the Romanian Communist Party headed by you, the fraternal Romanian people scored great achievements in socialist reconstruction. May we ask you what are the major achievements and experiences?" To this question, Ceausescu elaborates the achievements in the fields of industry, agriculture, education, science and technology and points out that Romania wants to strengthen her cooperation with the socialist countries and other countries of the world.

The final question put by the reporter is: "We are very glad to notice that our two parties, two countries and two peoples mutually sympathize with each other and support each other in our long revolutionary struggles and socialist reconstruction. We have been encouraging each other and have established a deep friendship, and the friendly cooperation between our two countries continues to develop. Could you please talk to us about the prospects of the development of this friendly cooperation?" To this question Ceausescu says cooperation between the two countries has been "in the spirit of the revolutionary principles of scientific socialism, of full equality of rights, of the observance of independence and sovereignty, of noninterference in domestic affairs and mutual advantage. Naturally our two parties have been cooperating in many respects. But on certain issues we do have different viewpoints or differences in the way of solving problems arising from socialist reconstruction. This is quite natural, because there is no set pattern for building socialism. We must take the actual conditions of the country into consideration and proceed from the socioeconomic conditions of the country.

"Life and events have proved that only on the basis of these principles and only by starting from these viewpoints can good cooperation between communist and workers parties be developed and their solidarity strengthened. On the basis of all this and of the results of the understandings reached and talks conducted during this visit, I can say that there are good prospects for the development of the cooperation between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party and between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of China." In the end Ceausescu says he hopes that "the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people will score new successes in socialist construction and in promoting the happiness of the Chinese people. And finally I hope our two parties and two countries will cooperate in an even closer way in our socialist reconstruction." The film ends with a shot of Ceausescu shaking hands with the reporter.

President Ceausescu wished that the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people will achieve still greater successes in the construction of their country.

Ceausescu extended an invitation to Hu Yaobang to visit Romania at an earlier possible date. Hu Yaobang accepted the invitation with pleasure, saying, "I shall go to your country, bringing with me the profound feelings of friendship of the Chinese party and people. It will provide for us an opportunity to learn from the Romanian people."

Before boarding his limousine, Ceausescu gave Hu Yaobang a warm hug.

["New Chapter Written in Friendship Between Parties of China and Romania -- Report on Fourth Visit of President Nicolae Ceausescu" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, Apr 17 (XINHUA) -- Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, and Elena Ceausescu paid an official and friendly visit to China from April 13 to April 17 at the invitation of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and the State Council. The visit has been successful and borne fruitful results. It shows once again the great friendship between the parties, countries and people of China and Romania, which has stood long and severe tests, will grow with each passing day.

Nicolae Ceausescu was accorded a warm and grand reception in China. He held talks with Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CCP Central Committee and Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council. The meetings proceeded in a warm, friendly, sincere and cordial atmosphere of mutual respect. The president also met with such veteran revolutionaries of the Chinese Communist Party as Vice-Chairmen Deng Xiaoping and Li Xiannian, as well as other party and state leaders.

President and Elena Ceausescu and the other distinguished Romanian guests also visited northeast China's industiral city of Shenyang, where they visited a factory and spoke with workers and ordinary party members. At a rally welcoming the Romanian guests, attended by 10,000 people, President Ceausescu delivered an enthusiastic speech.

President Ceausescu said he had met the late Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai on previous visits. During his current visit, he expressed his feeling of cherishing the memory of the two Chinese leaders.

This is the first time Nicolae Ceausescu met Hu Yaobang. He invited Hu Yaobang to visit Romania and the chairman has happily accepted the invitation.

During the period since Nicolae Ceausescu's last visit, great changes have taken place in China. Hu Yaobang briefed the visitors on China's achievements in both eliminating the evil consequences of the 10-year internal disorder and in solving domestic issues since the Third Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee in 1978. "Present China's political situation, characterized by stability and unity, is one of the best since the founding of the People's Republic. Our party's policy is correct and the Chinese people are confident of the state future," the chairman said.

In socialist construction, both Romania and China have attached great importance to the development of agriculture.

Hu Yaobang also briefed the Romanian guests on China's party-led agricultural reform. He said the various forms of the responsibility system for production have helped promote greater enthusiasm in the peasants for production.

Zhao Ziyang gave an account of China's economic situation. He said China has passed its most difficult economic period and is on the road of steady progress.

Referring to China's sixth five-year plan (1981-85), he said,"We will do two things during this period. First, we must carry out technical transformation of existing enterprises. Second, we must concentrate our efforts on key projects."

President Ceausescu praised the Chinese Communist Party's achievements in every field. He gave an account of the tremendous achievements of the Romanian people under the Communist Party's leadership in the political, economical, cultural and other fields. "In the 10 years starting at the end of the '70s, industrial production has increased five times and farm output has risen markedly. The living standards of the Romanian people have steadily improved. They are working hard to fulfill the seventh five-year plan set by the 12th party congress," he said. He mentioned the measures Romania is taking to increase production of raw materials and energy. "Though the 1981 world economic recession brought some difficulties to Romania, national production developed very well," he said. He expressed confidence that through hard work the Romanian people could fulfill the five-year plan. The Romanian president also outlined the measures for improvement of both leadership and management over the national economy.

Nicolae Ceausescu exchanged views with Chinese leaders on economic cooperation between the two countries. Both sides felt the existing economic cooperation was highly valuable, and expressed the desire to make further efforts to explore new channels of cooperation and widen its scope. Both expressed the desire to expand trade and economic relations on the basis of equality, mutual benefit, mutual respect and mutual help to make up what the other lacks. Both believed there would be steady growth in annual bilateral trade on the 1981 basis. Concurrently with the Romanian president's visit, a long-term agreement on economic, scientific and technical cooperation between China and Romania was signed in Beijing. The agreement is a significant outcome of the current visit. According to the agreement, the signatories will explore possibilities of cooperation in the metallurgical, oil, coal, chemical, electronics and other industries as well as in agriculture and the peaceful exploitation of atomic energy. The accord will play a positive role in promoting friendly cooperation betw China and Romania. Much importance has been attached to this document by both sides. Four other documents were also signed at the same time. They are an agreement on the peaceful use of nuclear energy, the 1982-85 executive plan of a cultural cooperation agreement, the 1981-85 executive plan of an agreement on health and medical exchanges and a protocol on the 22nd meeting of the two countries' scientific and technical cooperation committee. These documents will be conducive to a multifaceted cooperation between the two countries.

Leaders of the two countries also exchanged views on international issues of common concern and reached agreement on many questions such as the safeguarding of world peace and the independence and sovereignty of all countries, opposition to aggression and to the contention for spheres of influence. The two sides agreed to strive to prevent the international situation from further deteriorating and to encourage solution of international disputes through negotiation. Both sides made it clear they oppose interference from outside and that people of various countries should be allowed to choose their own road of development. The two sides also agreed to work for the establishment of a just, new international economic order.

Leaders of the two countries agreed the visit by President Ceausescu, Elena Ceausescu and other Romanian comrades, and especially the meetings and talks between the leaders of the two countries, were an important event in the annals of the relations between the two parties and countries, and they opened bright and broad prospects for future cooperation.

The Romanian communists represented by Nicolae Ceausescu have made outstanding contributions to the continued growth of the friendship between the parties and countries of China and Romania.

As Hu Yaobang said at the banquet welcoming President Ceausescu, "We, the Chinese communists, will never forget it was the Romanian communists with you, Comrade Ceausescu, as their representative, who dared to uphold justice, proletarian internationalism and the fundamental norms of international relations at a time when we used our own judgment to ponder things and walked on our own legs, and, because of this, met with blatant interference by others."

The meetings and talks between the leaders of the two countries also signal a new starting point for the relations between the two parties and countries. Their economic cooperation will continue to develop on a solid basis. The successful visit by President Ceausescu writes a new chapter in the annals of friendship between the parties, countries and peoples of China and Romania.

RENMIN RIBAO Article

[Article by Li Jie [2621 2638]: "Romania's Positive Measures for Developing the Economy"]

[Text] In the 1970's, Romania's economy developed at an average rate of more than 10 percent a year, and it was a country with one of the fastest rates of economic development in the world. During this period, industrial and agricultural production in the country rapidly developed, the economic strength of the country was greatly strengthened and the standard of the material and cultural life of the people was greatly enhanced.

However, because of the economic crisis of Western countries and the fierce increase in oil prices, the financial burden of Romania has become heavier. Furthermore, as a result of successive years of such natural disasters as drought and flooding, although there is still some development in agriculture, it has not been able to fulfill all its targets. As President Ceausescu recently pointed out, the phenomenon of certain difficulties and imbalances appearing in the economy of the country cannot be described as a crisis. Romania is already paying attention to these problems and making great efforts to solve them as quickly as possible.

The Romanian party and government have promptly summed up the problems and past experiences and lessons appearing in the economing sphere and adopted a series of positive measures. First, they have given priority to agricultural development in the new 5-year plan and strengthened leadership over agricultural production. In the party's Central Political Executive Committee set up at the beginning of last year, the secretary of the Central Committee has become the chairman of the national committee for agriculture, food industry, forestry and water conservancy to exercise unified leadership over agricultural production. While ensuring the uninterrupted development of industry, Romania has at the same time increased its agricultural investment. According to reports, investment in agriculture has increased by 13.7 percent over last year. For the sake of further arousing the enthusiasm of agricultural producers, purchasing prices for agricultural and livestock products have been increased.

The general contract system of fixed quotas and production has been popularized throughout the country, the development of family sideline production is encouraged, the peasants are allowed to raise more livestock and poultry and former restrictions in this respect have been eliminated. Taking into consideration the fact that most of the people engaged in agricultural production in many parts of the rural areas are either old men or physically weak women, Romania plans to send some of the urban workers, especially the unskilled laborers, back to the frontline of agricultural production to support agricultural production.

In industry, Romania has decided to shorten its capital construction front. Before a new project is put into operation, it will not allow investment in new projects of a similar type so that more capital construction investment can be used to complete the project under construction and to improve capital construction investment results. Moreover, this year it will close down the unprofitable units by law. Romania has lowered accumulation, slowed down the development of heavy industry and speeded up the development of light industry and the food industry. In addition, it has specially given higher priority to the development of the energy industry and the raw material industry.

In developing the energy industry and the raw material industry, it has taken into consideration the high petroleum prices on the international market. In order to reduce its reliance on foreign countries in this respect, Romania has decided to increase investment in this field and gradually change its energy structure. It has energetically developed the extraction of coal, increased the proportion of power stations using coal and oil shale for fuel, developed the rich hydraulic resources of the country and built new large and medium-sized hydroelectric power stations. According to reports, Romania plans to build several large and medium-sized hydroelectric power stations between 1981 and 1985. It has also drawn up measures for economizing the use of energy, introducing new substitute raw materials, increasing the utilization rate of raw materials and improving product quality. It has decided to place the focus of scientific research of the present 5-year plan on the energy industry and raw material industry. At the same time, it has aroused local enthusiasm, encouraged the localities to build small hydroelectric power stations, small mines and small agricultural product processing factories and allowed individual laborers to engage in small industry and handicraft labor.

By means of summing up previous experiences in economic construction, Romania has decided to rely on its own strength to protect the development of the state. It has reduced imports to a minimum, used exports to subsidize imports and succeeded in balancing foreign trade revenue and expenditure. The Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party has called on the cadres engaged in economic work to get rid of their backward consciousness of worshiping foreign things and fawning on foreign powers and to have faith in the ability of the Romanian working people, scientists, engineers and technicians to solve immediate domestic needs.

Romania has already taken the first step on the road of stabilizing the economy. As a result of implementing these measures and relying on its own strength, Romania's economy will develop in a more stable and healthy direction.

RENMIN RIBAO CONDEMNS JERUSALEM MOSQUE ATTACK

["International Jottings" by Liang Li [2733 7787]: "The Devil and the Prince of the Devils"]

[Text] On 11 April, an American Jew dressed in the uniform of the Israeli Defense Forces sprayed submachinegun fire into a group of Muslim worshipers attending a service at the Dome of the Rock Mosque in Jerusalem for half an hour, killing or wounding 10 people. This burst of gunfire shattered the peaceful atmosphere of Jerusalem's Easter celebration and shocked the world.

Later, the Begin government, on the one hand, expressed "regret" over the behavior of this "devil" and, on the other, voiced anger over others' "attempt to use a lunatic's action to criticize Israel." These two gestures point out the hideous features of the Begin regime.

The expression of so-called "regret" is sheer play-acting. Could the regime not be feeling "regret" just because that Israeli mobster had not killed more people? If the murderer responsible for the deaths and injuries of several Muslims was a devil, then the Begin company that has killed thousands of Arab residents throughout the entire area of the West Bank, occupied by Israel, could only be called the prince of the devils. In fact, everyone knows that if the Begin government had not been pursuing a policy of hostility and imposition against the Arab and Palestinian people, then these Mosque murders could have been avoided. Besides, similar instances have occurred more than once. Therefore, it naturally follows that the Begin regime is being condemned by the just world opinion. The Begin authorities voiced "anger" over this because of its sense of shame. By so doing, they will only arouse still greater resentment from people.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR VIEWS FALKLANDS DISPUTE

HK170604 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0343 GMT 17 Apr 82

[Review by correspondent Mei Zhenmin [2734 2182 3046]: "Future of Malvinas Dispute Is Hard To Predict"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Apr (XINHUA) -- The dispute between Britain and Argentina over the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands has had broad and complex international repercussions. People everywhere are concerned about whether this dispute will be resolved peacefully or by war.

Neither of the two parties to the dispute is yielding thus far. The British Government is sticking to its stand that Argentine troops must withdraw before negotiations can start, and is also continually strengthening its task force dispatched to the South Atlantic. For its part, the Argentine Government is sticking to its stand that its sovereignty over the Malvinas is not negotiable. As the British task force draws nearer to the Malvinas every day, the possibility of armed conflict cannot be ruled out. At the same time, although each party stands by its own argument, neither has closed the door to negotiations, and the possibility of solving the dispute by negotiation also exists.

In response to Britain's requests, the countries of Western Europe have taken sanctions against Argentina, stopped sales of arms and military equipment to that country, and embargoed Argentine imports. In addition to increasing Argentina's difficulties, these moves will also have a negative effect on the Western European countries themselves. The majority of Latin American countries support Argentina. At the same time, a resolution adopted on 13 April by the Organization of American States expressed hope that "the conflict between the two countries will be solved peacefully," and assured "friendly cooperation for the efforts for peace now underway," so as to eliminate the danger of war. Many Asian and African countries, too, have appealed to Britain and Argentina to solve the dispute by peaceful negotiations. Some of these countries have expressed support for Argentine demands for sovereignty over the Malvinas.

An antagonistic posture between the two superpowers over the Malvinas dispute has surfaced. The United States expressed support for the British motion at the UN Security Council meeting on 3 April. However, it then proceeded to dispatch Secretary of State Haig on shuttle mediation missions between Britain and Argentina. In the view of the U.S. Government, both Britain and Argentina are its friends, and conflict between them is bound to weaken Western strength in the South Atlantic and also threaten the stability of Latin America. The Soviet Union abstained on the British motion at the Security Council meeting. It then proceeded to launch vigorous press attacks on Britain and the United States. According to the foreign press, the Soviet Union is attempting to take advantage of Western European economic sanctions against Argentina to penetrate this region, which guards the passage between two oceans. As a 15 April commentary in LA PRENSA said, "The best thing that could happen now for Moscow is for the South Atlantic to become a new and permanent source of tension, with, naturally, the complete separation of Argentina from the United States and Europe." According to foreign press agencies, Soviet "marine survey" ships are tailing the British fleet heading for the South Atlantic. The United States has already expressed disquiet over this. U.S. presidential adviser Meese said on 14 April that the United States "hopes that the Soviet Union will not interfere in this situation or do anything to exacerbate it."

The first phase of Haig's mediation attempts ended in total deadlock. It is hard to predict whether the second phase will make a breakthrough. However, what can be predicted is that if the dispute between Britain and Argentina sharpens and drags on, it will be unfavorable for improving North-South relations and for the peace and stability of Latin America. Forces that make trouble and fish in muddied waters might be able to benefit from that.

EDITORIAL ON DEALING BLOWS AT ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Editorial: "Enhance Understanding and Strengthen Leadership"]

[Text] "The decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field" was published in full. This decision not only clearly elaborates but also scientifically analyzes the situation and perniciousness of the serious criminal activities which emerged in the economic field in the last few years. It lays down the policy of dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field and expounds on the great significance of safeguarding the purity of communism, adhering to the socialist road, and upholding the open-door policy and that of enlivening the domestic economy. This is a document of vital importance. The publication of this document in newspapers and its being released to the whole nation shows that our party and state are determined to take strong actions against serious criminal activities in the economic field, that our party and state, which have profound understanding of the common will of the whole party, army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country, have made up their minds to unswervingly carry out this struggle to the end.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, we have scored outstanding results in carrying out various guiding principles and policies under the correct guidance of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council. At present, the cause of the socialist modernization construction is progressing smoothly, while the party's discipline has been strengthened and the party's work style has been improved.

However, the pernicious influence of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques continues to have effects, some of our party organizations have not strongly and effectively promoted ideological and political work, some necessary administrative measures in government organs have not kept up with the needs of the everchanging situation, and we have not taken strong actions in good time against certain criminal activities which have severely sabotaged the economy. Therefore, in the past couple of years, we have not only witnessed various forms of distorted understanding and wrong implementation of the party's policies, but also an increase of serious criminal activities in the economic field -- quite a few cadres have already sunk into the quagmire of economic crime. There have been many cases of individual criminals acquiring illegally sums up to 10,000 yuan or more; while crimes committed by criminals in collusion have made the state suffer losses which amounted to hundreds of thousand yuan. What deserves still more attention is that there was always toleration and support on the part of certain leading cadres for these criminal activities. The party and government organs in some places and units have even degenerated under the corrosion of the bourgeois ideology. If we do not resolutely check this evil trend and instead let it run rampant, it will inevitably corrupt more party members and cadres, and thus bring about tremendous harm to our cause of socialist modernization construction. This is the real danger which we are facing. Every communist, every state cadre, especially leading cadres, should never regard it as unimportant and thus treat lightly this serious struggle which is of vital importance to the success or failure of the socialist modernization construction in our country and to the life and death of our party and country.

Dealing blows at severe economic crimes in the economic field is an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic field under new historical conditions of the socialist society in China. In accordance with the spirit of the "decision," while adopting a resolute attitude to deal powerful blows, we should make the focal point stand out, take steady measures and do careful work. Smuggling, selling contraband, corruption, taking bribes, speculation, fraud and appropriating state and collective property are criminal acts which violate the criminal law. As long as we strictly act according to judicial procedures and legal provisions and persist in taking facts as our basis and law as our yardstick, we will certainly be able to deal sure, accurate and relentless blows at all criminal elements who severely sabotage our economy. This struggle cannot be completed within a year or so, or after one or two attempts. This is a struggle which should be carried out protractedly and frequently. At present, the struggle has just begun and some localities have not firmly grasped it. The "decision" has given us a powerful weapon. Various localities, departments and units should enhance their understanding, unify their thinking and strengthen their leadership to implement the "decision" of the CCP Central Committee and State Council through to the end.

The facts of severe criminal activities in the economic field have reminded us that we should carry out a thoroughgoing, painstaking and lively communist education for the whole party, army and people of various nationalities throughout the country, and party members and cadres in particular. Our party is the vanguard of the working class and our country is a socialist country which exercises the people's democratic dictatorship. The character of our party and state should not, in the slightest degree, be changed or shaken. We should persist in implementing, improving and developing various effective guiding principles and policies adopted by the party and state since the third plenary session, including the open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic economy. At the same time, we should educate comrades of the whole party so that they will, under the guidance of the communist ideology, be able to observe and handle all social problems and social relations, understand and implement various guiding principles and policies and always maintain their communist purity. A great number of party members and cadres have resolutely resisted the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology, but some party members and cadres have disgracefully fallen captive to this corrosion. Every day we encounter these positive and negative instances in our practical life and they are very good teaching materials for carrying out communist education.

Our cause is victoriously marching toward the magnificient goal of socialist modernization. All the difficulties, obstructions and sabotage which we encountered in the past have been overcome one after another. We will surely further enhance our vigor and steel ourselves to surmount all difficulties, obstructions and sabotage which we are encountering and will face in the future. Let us unite as one, go into action and greet new struggle and new victory!

HONGQI STRESSES DEVELOPING FOREIGN ECONOMIC TIES

[Text] Beijing, 15 Apr (XINHUA) -- The 8th issue of HONGQI which will come out on 16 April stresses that it is imperative to develop China's foreign economic relations in an all-round way.

This stress is laid by a HONGQI editorial department's article which is entitled "On Questions Regarding Our Country's Foreign Economic Relations." The article discusses 10 questions.

First of all, the article affirms China's policy on energetically developing its foreign economic relations as a very farsighted policy decision.

The article says: "The party Central Committee recently noted that to promote our socialist modernization program, we must use two types of resources, that is, domestic resources and international resources; we must develop both our domestic market and our place in the world market; and we must master two skills, that of domestic construction management and that of developing foreign economic relations. This has further defined the strategic position of our foreign economic relations."

In discussing the first question of "what exactly is the nature of foreign economic relations," the article reviews the course of China's foreign economic relations. It adds: With regard to foreign economic relations, we must not only oppose closing the country to international exchanges, fighting in isolation and refusing to be associated with international capital but must also oppose neglecting or abandoning struggles during the process of associating ourselves with international capital.

The article notes that at present, we must pay attention to summing up experience, formulate a whole set of correct guiding principles, policies and measures by thinking over carefully and continuing to make great efforts, and open up a path for developing our country's foreign economic relations that is suited to both national and international conditions.

In discussing the second question of "why is it that the development of foreign economic relations is an important strategic question regarding our modernization program," the article says: We must work hard and perseveringly, rely on our own strength, and maintain independence and keep the initiative in our own hands while promoting our socialist modernization program. We must not, in the slightest degree, deviate from these principles. However, at the same time, we must also go all out to make use of all foreign factors that can be used by us, develop our national industries as quickly as possible through foreign economic relations and by drawing support from foreign capital and advanced technology, and further quicken the pace of promoting our socialist modernization program.

The article stresses: With regard to foreign relations, we should not only oppose having a sense of inferiority and the erroneous tendency of regarding all foreign things as good things, but should also oppose closing the country to international exchanges and the erroneous tendency toward parochial arrogance.

Referring to the "necessity of having a whole set of correct guiding principles and policies toward foreign relations," the article notes: With regard to those businessmen who show their good faith in cooperation and do business in a proper way we will take a welcoming attitude and implement the policy of equality and mutual benefit.

As for those foreign businessmen who have ulterior motives, adopt improper measures, go so far as to adopt measures that violate our country's sovereignty, and go in for swindling, bribing, smuggling, infiltration or even espionage activities that impair the rights and interests of the Chinese people and corrupt our cadres and citizens, they will certainly meet with firm resistance from the Chinese people and some will be prosecuted in accordance with China's laws.

Referring to the question of "how are we to properly attract foreign capital," the editorial department says: Joint ventures, joint management, joint exploitation, compensation trade, processing, assembling and other methods of direct investment are, at present, the most important ways for China to utilize foreign capital. With regard to projects, we must grasp all the large, medium-sized and small projects at once while regarding medium-sized and small ones as the main feature.

The article says that foreign capitalists, Overseas Chinese capitalists as well as those from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan are welcome to invest in China and that they are allowed to make profits.

The article says that it is imperative to be prudent in using ordinary commerical loans.

In discussing the question of "how are we to correctly import advanced science and technology," the article notes: Our major imports of science and technology shoud be: advanced equipment or components, new and fine-quality materials; new fundamentals, data, prescriptions and directions; new crafts and scientific rules of operation; and new management methods.

The article stresses that from now on, we must no longer import consumer goods. We must make the widest possible use of those daily consumer goods that can be made and supplied by domestic units.

Referring to the question of "how are we to energetically promote our business of internati labor cooperation," the article says: The abundance of the labor force in China is the country's greatest superior point. It is imperative to actively promote our business of international labor cooperation.

The article notes that judging from the fact that projects so far undertaken by the Chinese construction industry in other countries have been fairly competitive on the world market, we can see that there are bright prospects for promoting our business of international labor cooperation.

The article maintains that in addition to undertaking construction projects in other countries, the development of our business of international labor cooperation should also comprise the following items: processing materials, samples and drawings for foreign businessmen; establishing all kinds of enterprises in foriegn countries; and energetically developing tourism.

Referring to the question of "how are we to bring Chinese products into the world market on a still larger scale," the article says: China's current export trade is conducted on a too narrow and small scale. We must strive to achieve a relatively great development of our export trade within a short period of time.

The article maintains that our export trade may be expanded by increasing exports of the following products: nonferrous and rare metals; mechanical and electrical products; light industrial products and textiles; various arts and crafts articles such as chinaware, peach blossom, Chinese-prepared medicines, clothes, embroidery products and carvings; and special local products such as tea, Chinese medicinal materials, livestock products, wild products and preserved fruits.

The article calls for adopting proper policies in support of the development of our export trade: going out to establish marketing and servicing metworks; making unceasing efforts to improve the prestige of products; paying attention to product quality and paying attention to honoring agreements; solving transport problems and port problems; and bringing into full play the initiative of all departments and ideas.

Referring to the question of "how are we to correctly support the Third World," the article notes: Offering support for the peoples of all Third World countries in their just struggles to defend their national independence, develop their national economies and oppose imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism is China's international duty which it cannot shirk. Over the past 30 years and more, China has done a lot of work in such aspects and played an important active role in handling international affairs.

The article holds that it is imperative to actively promote economic cooperation with Third World countries. It is imperative to extend by every possible means material aid to those poverty-stricken countries which are in difficulties and are subjected to external aggression and threats.

In discussing the "necessity of correctly understanding political-economic relations," the article stresses: Stringent efforts should be made to master advanced science, culture and management methods from other countries while resolutely [illegible]ng the influence of corrupt bourgeois ideas.

The article says that China is implementing special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces, and has also established in the two provinces four special economic zones, namely, Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen special economic zones. We should clearly understand that the special policies are adopted under the guidance of the unified national policy. Deviating from the four basic principles and the socialist orientation is not a part of the special policies but is called degeneration. Our flexible measures can play flexible roles only on the basis of firmly adhering to a principled stand. Casting away the communist stand, the party spirit and the party principles is not called a flexible way of doing things but is called capitulationism. This fundamental demarcation line must not be obscured.

The article notes: Through the development of our foreign economic relations, the special policies and flexible measures are primarily aimed at enabling us to do a better job of boldly promoting construction on our own initiative and under better conditions, and to improve product quality, production techniques and management for the sake of making new progress in two fields, namely, the management of economic construction and the development of foreign economic relations.

Referring to the "profound and lasting significance of expanding foreign economic relations," the article, in conclusion, regards the development of foreign economic relations as one of the four closely connected links for opening up a new prospect for our modernization program. The other three links are: bringing our agricultural potential into full play and particularly bringing about a great development of our diversified economy; bringing our industrial potential into full play and particularly achieving success in reorganizing enterprises at an early date; and developing China's financial, monetary and commercial circulation in a more healthy way.

PROPAGANDA HEAD DENG LIQUN ADDRESSES MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 17 Apr (XINHUA) -- Speaking to representatives at a recent work conference of film literature editors from feature film studios and to some of the film workers in the capital city, Deng Liqun, director of the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee, said that literary and art workers, particularly those who are party members, must observe, analyze and handle questions from the viewpoint of communist ideology and use communist ethics as the norm for their words and deeds.

The 10-day film literature editors' work conference opened on 7 April in Beijing. On the afternoon of 12 April, Deng Liqun attended the conference and made a lengthy speech stressing that literary and art workers who are Communist Party members should have the communist ideal, faith and goal.

He expressed the hope that all comrades would strive to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and frequently go deep among the masses at the grassroots level and visit factories and villages to see things there. This, he said, will be of great advantage.

Following the national feature film creation meeting held at the end of 1981, this year's film literature editors' work conference was another meeting aimed at further developing movie work. The conference was attended by over 100 people including film literature editors from various feature film studios in the country, leading comrades concerned and representatives from pertinent departments in Beijing. They held that the central task before movie workers at present is to improve the quality of films. They said that film literature scripts are the basis for the creation of movie art and the shooting of films. For this reason, it is necessary to first raise the quality of scripts if film quality is to be improved. At the conference, experience in film literature editing was exchanged. The editors attending the conference called on leaders of the departments concerned and publications on literature and art to attach importance to film literature creation and raise the quality of scripts. They hoped that writers who have original ideas, rich life experiences and accomplishments through self-cultivation would create more scripts in order to make greater contributions to developing film work, raising the level of movie art and promoting the socialist spiritual civilization.

The conference discussed the film plan for 1982 and 1983 with emphasis on themes. According to statistics covering 11 film studios, including the Beijing, Shanghai, Changchun, Zhujiang, Xian and "1 August" studios, about 100 feature films will be produced in 1982. Of these, 20 to 30 have already been completed, while most of the [illegible]ainder are being shot or are in a preparatory stage. Compared with last year, the fi[illegible] be produced this year have a wider range of themes with efforts by various film studi[illegible] reflect the reality of life and portray the images of new individuals of socialism.

He Kang, vice minister of the State Agricultural Commission, and Zhong Peizhang, deputy chief editor of ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO [CHINA YOUTH NEWS] were invited to the conference to make reports on the current rural situation and on the question of youths respectively.

The conference was called by the film bureau of the Ministry of Culture. Chen Huangmai, Chen Bo and Ding Qiao addressed the conference. They emphasized that movie art should strive to portray the new individuals of socialism, enthusiastically and dynamically publicize Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and the communist ideal and educate the people in the spirit of communism. They hoped that film studios would produce high quality films on multifarious themes and of diversified styles and forms to satisfy the audience's demands.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON RETIRING PLA CADRES

[Report: "A Number of Old Cadres of Beijing PLA Units Happily Retire to the Third Line"]

[Text] Some 1,300 old cadres of the Beijing PLA units, with the overall interests of the revolution in mind, have happily retired since last year. This has speeded up the pace of reducing the average age of the leadership groups at all levels in the units.

This group of old cadres includes leading cadres of regimental, divisional, army and corps levels. They are meritorious ministers of the revolution, having braved untold dangers during the war years and worked hard during the period of socialist construction. In recent years they have broadened their vision as a result of studying the spirit of the Central Committee and Central Military Commission instructions on abolishing the cadre lifelong tenure system and on having younger, knowledgeable, professional and revolutionized cadres, and have regarded obeying the organization's assignments and allowing cadres in the prime of life who possess political integrity and ability to take their places as a practical expression of making yet another contribution to the people.

They regard retirement as an honor and choosing and giving way to able men as their own mission. Liu Yunzhen, deputy director of the Political Department of the Logistics Department of the Beijing PLA units, is an old comrade who has done political work for 30 or 40 years. After his retirement had been approved, he actively passed on his experience in work in the organs to the young cadres, and helped the upper-level leadership organs to sum up experiences in wartime logistics and supply work. During rectification of the leadership groups last year, eight divisional level cadres including Hu Jinsuo, political commissar of the logistics department of a certain army, sincerely requested the party committee to let them retire from the groups on the one hand, and actively recommended and chose outstanding young cadres for the leadership groups on the other. They also held family meetings to deal with their dependents', sons' and daughters' inability to think out the retirement issue, to explain the importance of lowering the average age of the leadership groups, and dissect the erroneous idea of "benefiting from being in office but coming to grief from retirement." They thus enlightened the thinking of their dependents, sons and daughters, gained their support, and happily retired to the third line.

After retiring, many old comrades have spontaneously maintained their nature of struggling hard amid difficulties, regarded the party's interest as the overriding thing, and voluntarily shared the burdens with the state; they have not haggled over conditions or stretched out their hands to the party. Some of these old comrades fought and struggled in the mountains north of the Great Wall for 20 to 30 years. They did not complain about the harsh environment but were willing to retire on the spot and work with the local masses to transform the mountain areas. Some old cadres have continued living in their old houses on retirement because cadre retirement centers have not been built. They have not grumbled about this at all but are happy to act as "supernumerary cadres" and regularly visit the training, construction and production sites to act with enthusiasm as "staff officers" and put forward ideas for the yound cadres. Zhang Junming, deputy political commissar of a certain division, voluntarily abandoned his superior conditions in going to live in a cadre retirement center in an urban area and went back to a remote village in the Liaoxi Mountains to work as a peasant with his relatives and dependents, and make new contributions to developing agricultural production. After his retirement, Li Xhongshan, an old cadre of a certain antiaircraft division, went down to the countryside to investigate and study while the unit was conducting education in the rural economic policies, and provided vivid and abundant educational material for the cadres and fighters; when the cadres of the unit were transferred to civilian work, he actively undertook the transfer work and journeyed day and night to a place 1,000 li away in connection with the transfer of the cadres to civilian work. He was praised as "the man who cannot rest." Some other retired old cadres have taken medical bags and acted as itinerant doctors while some have gone to factories, organs and schools to lecture on the revolutionary traditions to youths and juveniles, and other have proudly taken up the pen to write memoirs of the revolution.

Due to the fact that large numbers of old cadres have retired to the third line, while large numbers of outstanding young and middle-aged cadres have taken up leadership posts in the regiments, divisions and armies, a situation of great vigor and vitality has emerged in the leadership groups at all levels.

BEIJING EVICTIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION PLAN DISCUSSED

[Text] Beijing, 15 Apr (XINHUA) -- Beijing RIBAO today published on the front page a report that some 800 households in Beijing took the situation as a whole into consideration and actively cooperated in vacating their houses for dismantling under the city's construction plan. The paper also published another report that 61 households, known as "unmovable households," who raised all manner of difficulties for the state and seriously obstructed urban construction, were evicted in accordance with the law. Beijing RIBAO published a short commentary, entitled "It Is Prohibited To Fleece the State," on the events.

The report says that since January 1981, a total of 854 households in areas designated for Beijing's urban construction projects have taken the situation as a whole into consideration and actively vacated their houses to create conditions for the construction of Zuojia village and 21 other small residential areas. Many of them said that the government is building new houses for the citizens, which is a good thing. How could we not support its action?

However, there were also a number of units or residents who raised all manner of difficulties for the state or even willfully made trouble on the question of land requisition and house dismantling, posing serious obstacles to urban construction. During the last year, 61 "unmovable households" were evicted by the public security and judicial organs in accordance with the law after legal proceedings were filed by the municipal departments concerned.

Recently, the municipal judicial organ again issued a verdict on forced eviction of two "unmovable households" who willfully pestered the state, refused to vacate their houses and move, and seriously obstructed urban construction. Their eviction ensured the normal progress of the urban construction works.

Beijing RIBAO points out in the commentary: Making use of the opportunity of land requisition and house dismantling to bargain with and fleece the state is an illegal practice. Without taking into consideration the entire situation in urban construction, some of the households have refused to implement the government regulation on land requisition and house dismantling and deliberately created obstructions of every description to make things difficult for the state. They hang on and refuse to clear out of the construction site, seriously impeding the smooth development of the urban construction projects. There are also individual units and individuals who willfully erect buildings in violation of the building code on land the state is ready to acquire or has already requisitioned, and illegally move their households into such houses while demanding houses and money from the state. They try to make a fortune from land requisition and house dismantling and let the state suffer losses. All such practices are extremely wrong.

To actively safeguard the interests of the state and support state construction is the bounden duty of every citizen and the fine tradition which we must vigorously bring into full play. The emergence of such an evil practice as fleecing the state is the result of the anarchist trend which prevailed during the decade of internal disorder. Some people, even leading cadres, have onesidedly emphasized the interests of one's own unit and the individual, while ignoring the interests of the state.

We must strive to eliminate the influence of anarchic, cliquish and individualist mentality by vigorously developing the "two types of civilizations." As the masters of the state, we must correctly handle the relations among the state, the collective and the individual, always put the interests of the state above everything else and resolutely combat the evil practice of regarding the trick to fleece the state as a form of glory. In the meantime, we must enforce law upon the handful of "unmovable households" that turn a deaf ear to all arguments and willfully make trouble.

1982 FIRST QUARTER INDUSTRIAL FIGURES RELEASED

[Text] Beijing, 17 Apr (XINHUA) -- According to the date released by the State Statistical Bureau, China has achieved progress in its industrial production and raised the economic return to some extent in the first quarter of 1982.

In the first quarter, the total industrial output value amounted to 129.3 billion yuan, which represents an 11.6 percent increase over the same period last year, including 14.6 percent increase in light industrial output value and 8.5 percent increase in heavy industry. Of the 100 major industrial products listed in the state plan, the annual production plans for 82 have been fulfilled.

In line with the state plan and changes in consumer demand, industrial administrations at various levels reduced the production of transistor radios, metal cutting tools and other goods which were in excessive supply, cutting down their output by 15 to 46 percent of that in the same period last year. At the same time, vigorous efforts were made to increase the production of industrial goods in short supply. Compared with the same period last year, the increase in energy production converting to standard coal was 9.8 percent; the output of consumer goods, bicycles, sewing machines, cotton cloth, woolen fabric and beer increased by 10 to 40 percent. The production of such metallurgical and chemical industrial products as strip steel, steel sheets, sulphuric acid and caustic soda, which were needed for developing light industry, increased by 10 to 50 percent. In construction materials, the output of cement increased by 9.8 percent and glass sheets by 23 percent.

As for the profits earned by indudstrial enterprises in the first quarter, the 40,000-odd industrial enterprises run under the state budget earned 5.4 percent and turned over to the state 3.6 percent more profits than the same period last year. The deficits of enterprises which had been operating in the red decreased by 8.4 percent. The quality of most products stabilized or improved somewhat, while the consumption of energy and raw materials in their production either remained the same or declined.

Judging from the development in various regions, the increase in the sales and revenues from industrial goods, which was bigger than the growth rate of industrial output value achieved by Shanghai, Zhejiang, Anhui, Jiangxi, Shandong, Heilongjiang, Guangxi, Yunnan, Shaanxi, Qinghai, Ningxia and Xinjiang, demonstrates that the overstocking of goods at industrial enterprises in these provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions has decreased. Shanxi, Liaoning, Jilin, Heilongjiang, Anhui, Fujian, Guangxi, Sichuan, Guizhou and Ningxia scored the outstanding achievement in making the rate of increase of profits turned over to the state greater than the growth rate of industrial output value. Shanghai, China's largest industrial city, not only achieved a rate of increase in sales and revenues larger than that of industrial output value but also lowered the amount of floating funds in use and total cost of the production of comparable products.

However, judging from the situation as a whole, the economic return of the industrial production in the first quarter was still not good. This can be seen mainly from the facts that some enterprises produced goods unwanted by consumers and thus increased their stock, that the increase rate in the profits turned over to the state was smaller than the increase rate in the profits actually earned, that the cost of production of comparable products increased in most regions, that the quality of a few products was lowered, and that the consumption of energy and raw materials somewhat rose again after a fall. Therefore, greater efforts must be made to raise the economic return.

ECONOMIC DATA OF 40 CITIES TO BE STUDIED MONTHLY

[Text] Beijing, 18 Apr (XINHUA) -- From this month, the State Statistical Bureau will conduct statistical analysis of the economic indices for industrial production of 40 large and medium-sized cities in an effort to bring into full play the role of statistics in serving and supervising our efforts to improve economic results.

This is another important measure to raise China's economic results in industrial production after the departments concerned of the state have decided to announce at regular intervals how the indices on economic results in industrial production of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions are being implemented. The 40 cities are: Shanghai, Beijing, Tianjin, Shijiazhuang, Tangshan, Taiyuan, Shenyang, Dalian, Anshan, Fushun, Dandong, Changchun, Jilin, Harbin, Nanjing, Wuxi, Suzhou, Changzhou, Hangzhou, Ningbo, Hefei, Fuzhou, Nanchang, Jinan, Qingdao, Zhengzhou, Luoyang, Wuhan, Shashi, Changsha, Guangzhou, Nanning, Liuzhou, Chengdu, Chongqing, Xian, Lanzhou, Guiyang, Kunming and Baotou.

It is understood that the total industrial output of these 40 cities accounts for 50 percent of the total national industrial output, and the profits and revenues delivered to the state by these cities account for 56 percent of the total amount of profits and taxes delivered to the state by China's industrial departments. These cities' economic results in industrial production play a decisive role in developing industrial production throughout the nation.

In order to reflect in an overall manner the economic results of these cities in industrial production, the State Statistical Bureau has joined the departments of statistics in these cities in working out some specific projects to compile statistics and has requested various cities to submit their monthly reports on statistical figures. Some of the figures are already listed in the economic indices soon to be announced to reflect the economic results in industrial production in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions such as the total industrial output, the accrued profits, the profits delivered to the state, taxes, circulating funds, production costs and so on. Some of them are newly added including the number of enterprises, the number of workers and staff members, the total amount of wages, the profits retained by the enterprises and the portion of enterprise funds earmarked for the welfare and bonus of the workers and staff members. All these statistical data will play a significant supplementary role in verifying, understanding and examining the economic results in industrial production of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions throughout the nation.

NEW WHEATFIELD MANAGEMENT METHOD DEVELOPED

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese scientists have devised a method by which farmers can tell, by judging leaves on the main stalk of the wheat plant, the correct time to stimulate or restrain the growth of wheat to raise the yields. Known to professionals as the "leaf sequence method," it calls for application of fertilizer and irrigation of the fields when the first leaf is about to come out after the winter wheat resumes green growth in the spring. This, said scientists at the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences, will promote tillering of the crop.

Wheat that grow in most parts of China develops five or six leaves, said scientists. The appearance of the second or third leaf indicates the jointing period and measures should be taken to restrain the growth of the crop. Otherwise, there will be high, fragile stalks with the last two leaves too heavy and big, thus causing lodging, scientists said. Appearance of the fourth or fifth leaf coincides with the beginning of the earing stage. So it is again time to water and fertilize for fuller ears.

The method was developed by the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences and the Beijing Academy of Agricultural Sciences. It is now being used for demonstration purposes on 200,000 hectares in Hebei, Shanxi, Shandong, Henan, Shaanxi, Jiangsu and Anhui Provinces and the municipalities of Beijing and Tianjin. Scientists said it is easy to learn, applicable to many places in China and saves water and fertilizer while increasing output by roughly 10 to 15 percent.

Output of wheat per hectare averaged eight percent higher on experimental plots in Wenxian County, Henan Province, one of the best known wheat producing counties in China. The cost per hectare was 30 yuan less, as less water, fertilizer and manpower was used.

The leaf sequence method was first developed in Tengxian County, Shandong Province, and Xincheng County, Hebei Province, between 1975 and 1978. In 1980, the Ministry of Agriculture decided to popularize it nationally.

ARTICLE RECOUNTS DEEDS OF MING OFFICIAL WANG AO

HK160901 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 29 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Zhang Haipeng [1728 3189 7720]: "A Brief Talk on Wang Ao"]

[Text] Few people studying the history of the Ming Dynasty have paid attention to Wang Ao. As a matter of fact, in so far as honesty in performing one's official duties was concerned, he was on a par with Bao Zheng of the Song Dynasty and Hai Rui also of the Ming Dynasty.

Wang Ao (1384-1467), sometimes called Jiugao, was a native of Yanshan (now Yanshan County in Hebei Province). During the Yong Le period of the reign of Emperor Chengzu, he was "so successful in two examinations that his name was included in both namelists of successful candidates" though he was a scholar from the north. ("History of the Ming Dynasty -- A Biography of Wang Ao." Herein after quotations with no source cited will be from this biography. No further explanations will be given.) Being in Emperor Chengzu's good graces, he rose to the post of senior vice president of the Grand Court of Revision. During the reign of Emperor Xuangzong, at the recommendation of Grand Secretary Yang Shiqi, he was promoted to the post of censor. After Emperor Yangzong ascended the throne, Wang Ao was ordered to assume command of the Jiangxi Garrison and then to serve as commander in chief in Liaodong Province and later as viceroy of the provinces of Guangdong and Guangxi. From the fourth year of Jingtai (1453) to the third year of Chenghua (1467) he served as minister of official personnel affairs. Having served as an official under five emperors, he became a figure who "enjoyed the confidence of the court and the commonalty." People are awed when they read his deeds published in historical records, describing him as a man "who led a thrifty and simple life" and "who was upright and outspoken" and strict with himself.

Though Wang Ao held important posts, he enforced strict "domestic discipline." While he was serving as censor, his wife took a concubine for him without his knowledge. When he learned of this half a year later, he angrily bawled at his wife, saying: "how can you wreck my domestic discipline!" Thereupon, he "sent the girl away by giving her some gold coins."

There were far more instances of Wang Ao's "domestic discipline" than we have just mentioned. Chui Xian, a junior vice president of the Board of Rites in Nanjing during the reign of Jiajing in the Ming Dynasty, wrote an article entitled "Anecdotes of Wang Ao" which was included in his collected works "Huan Ci." The anecdotes were described with such authenticity that summaries of them were included in the "History of the Ming Dynasty." The three anecdotes as recorded by Chui Xian gave details of both Wang Ao's "domestic discipline" for regulating his family and his "official discipline" as an official. They are now recounted briefly as follows:

First, a grandson of Wang Ao had been enrolled into the Imperial College as a reward bestowed upon him from the monarch. On the eve of an autumn examination, this grandson, who was not so proficient in writing, intended to take the examination and so, by taking advantage of the name of his grandfather who was minister of official personnel affairs, he got hold of an examination paper from the official in charge of the examination. Determined to stop [illegible]'s act when he learned of it, Wang Ao said earnestly to his grandson: "If you had the [illegible] to pass a competitive examination, I would not be the one to fail you. But if you should be selected by mistake, you would jeopardize the prospects of another poor scholar." The grandfather knew very well that his grandson did not have the talent to "pass a competitive examination," but why did he mention the fact that his grandson could possibly be "selected by mistake?" It turned out that since the reigns of Hongxi and Xuande in the Ming Dynasty, "there were lots of malpractices in civil examinations for government degrees," such as "buying over or currying favor with people in authority for personal gain," "carrying a paper under one's arm when going for an examination or asking another to take the examination on one's behalf," "transmitting messages by tearing off parts of the examination paper" and "taking another's place by assuming his name."

As for the sons of senior officials who had no talent, "not a few of them were selected or even listed among the best of the successful candidates." ("History of the Ming Dynasty -- Annals of Selection, Part II") As minister of official personnel affairs, one of the six ministers of the Ming Dynasty, even if Wang Ao did not make a suggestion on the sly, the chief examiner would likely take advantage of this opportunity to curry favor with him. Therefore, it was likely that his grandson would be listed among the successful candidates. According to the imperial examination system in the Ming Dynasty, beginning in the first year of the reign of Hongxi (1425), the number of successful candidates for the "triennial examination in each province" and "national examination" was limited. If Wang Ao's grandson should be "selected by mistake," he would surely fill one of the slots of the quota and prevent a poor scholar from "passing an imperial examination." Wang Ao held that it was no good jeopardizing another person's prospects to become an official through the imperial examination because his grandson was selected "inappropriately." Consequently he forbade his grandson to take the examination by "burning the examination paper."

Second, Wang Ao had a daughter, who was married to Jia Jie, an official in the suburbs of the capital. Every time she returned to her parents' home, Mrs Wang made a point of going to the suburbs personally to fetch her. Jia Jie not only refused to see his wife off but poured out a lot of complaints to her, saying: "Your father is the minister of official personnel affairs. If he were willing to transfer me to a post in the capital, you would be able to wait upon your mother day and night. Moreover, transferring me to the capital is as easy as rolling off a log for him. Why should he be so obstinate and miserly?" In the view of Jia Jie, his father-in-law, being head of the Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs, held the power of transferring personnel and it was easy for him to transfer Jia Jie from the suburbs to the capital. Since he was unwilling to do this "little service," he was a bit too "obstinate" and "miserly." Jia Jie's wife reported his views to her mother. One day, Mrs Wang placed some wine on the table and, while Wang Ao was drinking to his heart's content, she asked him to give their son-in-law a transfer. Wang Ao flew into a rage at hearing her words and, snatching something from the table, struck her in the face with it. His wife was so angry at this that she left her "private residence" and stayed at the "antechamber to the throne room" for 10 days before she returned home. In spite of this, Wang Ao upheld his "official discipline" and "domestic discipline" and refused to give his son-in-law a transfer."

Third, while serving as commander in chief in Liaoding Province, Wang Ao was on good terms with a eunuch who was inspector general of the army. When he was later assigned to the post of viceroy of the provinces of Guangdong and Guangxi, the eunuch gave him a sendoff party and presented him with four pearls. Wang Ao, however, refused to accept the gift. The eunuch tearfully said: "They were not given to me as a bribe but as a present from the late emperor, who distributed to attendants the foreign pearls bought by Seng Bao. I got a total of eight pearls and now I give you half of them as a parting gift." By explaining the origin of the pearls he showed his good faith. Upon learning that the eunuch did not get these pearls as a bribe and being moved by the sincerity of his old friend, Wang Ao had to accept them and put them away by sewing them in his cloak. When Wang Ao was recalled to the capital years after to take up the post of minister of official personnel affairs, the eunuch had died. In an effort to find the eunuch's relatives, Wang Ao sought out his two nephews. He asked them solicitously: "Since your uncle was so strict, you must be in financial straits." "Yes," they said in unison. Thereupon, Wang Ao told them: "Tell me if you do not have any means of obtaining a livelihood. I will assist you in trade." They thought to themselves that Wang Ao had uttered these courteous words merely out of his friendship with the deceased and that it was impossible for him to help them out of his own pocket. Consequently, they feigned compliance. Wang Ao, however, often urged them to consider going into trade. In response to Wang Ao's "repeated urging," the eunuch's two nephews forged a certificate on the purchase of a house, the price of which was listed at 500 taels of gold.

To keep his promise of "assisting them in trade" Wang Ao "took out the pearls by tearing open his cloak and presented them with the pearls." In this way he returned the four pearls intact to the relatives of the eunuch.

The three anecdotes recounted above presented Wang Ao from three different aspects. Although holding an important state post, he did not use his powers to seek personal gain. He neither sought "inappropriate" scholarly honor, official rank, wealth or position for his grandson; nor did he facilitate the transfer of his son-in-law; nor did he hold on to "ill-gotten" money by greedily hanging on to the pearls. His honesty and integrity was something that was rarely seen within the bureaucratic strata of feudal society.

It is also clear from Wang Ao's deeds that "discipline" for regulating a family is interrelated with that of administering the state. Just as an old saying goes: "Wishing to govern their states well, they first regulated their families." Though this saying originated from the Confucian classics and reflected the idea of equating a state with a family, it explained the close relationship between "regulating the families" and "governing the states." Judging from historical facts, officials who enforced "discipline" in regulating their families generally also enforced "discipline" while serving as officials. Rectifying "domestic discipline" was a precondition for rectifying "official discipline," while rectifying "official discipline" was a basic factor for "governing the state and making the whole kingdom tranquil and happy." That is why there is some truth in the words "their families being regulated, their states were rightly governed."

Wang Ao was precisely an official who was strict in regulating his family and good at governing the state. For over five decades, he always carried out his official duties and kept at heart the interests of both the emperor and the common people. Authors of the "History of the Ming Dynasty" praised him as "an honest old man who enjoyed a good reputation and had a high moral character." Now let us have a look at how he helped the emperors to govern the state.

Wang Ao was industrious in carrying out his official duties. It was recorded in history that while in the capacity of minister of official personnel affairs he refused all invitations and often stayed overnight at his office while off duty without returning to his own private residence. The Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs was "an important place for judging the suitability for employing or dismissing the many officials." A minister should be "in charge of selecting and appointing officials, granting titles and checking government decrees in order to screen talented persons," which was naturally a heavy burden. ("History of the Ming Dynasty -- Annals of Selection, Part I") Therefore, when the Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs was selecting officials, Wang Ao made a point of testing them personally. Sometimes he had an audience with the emperor and therefore had to delegate the selection work to the vice presidents, his deputies. However, as soon as the audience was over, he always went to his office, "however late it might be," to learn of the developments of the work "lest there should be some mishandling."

In testing officials, the Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs was to promote able and virtuous persons and dismiss unworthy ones. It was not to promote people who were on intimate terms with them regardless of their foolishness or dismiss people who were not on intimate terms with them regardless of their good ability and virtue. However, since the reigns of Hongxi and Xuande, the administration of officials had become worse and, in testing officials for the imperial court, "all people relied on their personal relations in order to further their own lot, with the result that officials were divided into many factions." ("History of the Ming Dynasty -- Preface to the Chronological Table of the Seven High Officials") Appointing people by favoritism inevitably resulted in the formation of factions and unhealthy tendencies in officialdom. Wang Ao was quoted as saying: "The Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs is not a place for satisfying one's feelings of gratitude or resentment." He uttered these words in the light of the malpractices of the time. That was why he historically was "the right man at the right place" when he was in charge of the Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs.

The key to a good or bad government lies in the administration of officials. In order to rectify the administration of officials, it is imperative to mercilessly punish and suppress corrupt and treacherous court officials. In a class society, there are always officials who pervert justice for a bribe or commit offenses against law and discipline. Failure to punish them severely will inevitably aggravate social contradiction. In the early years after Emperor Xuanzong ascended the throne, he stipulated that "officials guilty of crimes may be reinstated in turn irrespective of the seriousness of their crimes." This policy of handling matters in the same manner in utter disregard of the nature and seriousness of the crimes made it impossible to attain the objective of punishing the evil and encouraging the healthy. In view of this situation, Wang Ao suggested: "Officials guilty of corruption will be allowed to atone for their crimes but they will not be reinstated." It was only reasonable to severely punish "officials guilty of corruption" and so "the Emperor Xuanzong accepted his suggestion." Emperor Xuanzong later issued an imperial edict: "Regulations Concerning Dismissed Officials Guilty of Corruption Atoning for Their Crimes." This dealt further blows at the corrupt officials. ("History of the Ming Dynasty -- Notes About Emperor Xuanzong") After serving as commander in chief of the Jiangxi Garrison, Wang Ao "severely punished and suppressed treacherous court officials so that he was feared and obeyed by officials and common people alike," and the unhealthy tendency of corruption improved to some extent.

It would be impossible to redress the grievances of the people without getting rid of corrupt and cruel officials. The Songpan region in Sichuan Province was inhabited by various minority nationalities in a compact community, such as the descendants of Di and Qiang of the olden times. In the early years of the Ming Dynasty, apart from appointing officials to govern the region, the government also authorized 13 tribal officials to govern the minority nationalities by appointing them as "chiefs of the tribes." Officials of the Han nationality rode roughshod over the minority nationalities now and then and tended to make false reports to the imperial court about the real situation. In the fourth year of the reign of Zhengtong (1438), Songpan military commanders Zhao Liang and Zhao De made a false report, accusing a monk official by the name of Shangba of plotting a rebellion. They arrested Shangba by strategem and put him in prison with the intention of "plundering his wealth." This aroused the indignation of his younger brother who gathered people together for a "rebellion." The imperial court readily believed the false report filed by Zhao Liang and company and dispatched Wang Ao to the region at the head of the government army to put down the rebellion. Soon after his arrival in Songpan, Wang Ao learned about the wrong done to Shangba. By setting Shangba free, putting to death the cruel and greedy commander Zhao Liang and placating the people of various nationalities there, Wang Ao succeeded in "putting down the rebellion in Songpan." While serving as viceroy of the provinces of Guangdong and Guangxi, Wang Ao also adopted the policy of being "strict" with officials and of "placating" the people. Formerly, the officials in Xunzhou, Wuzhou and their vicinity often rode roughshod over the Yao people, resulting in a "rebellion by the Yao people." When "Wang Ao arrived there, he suppressed the officials and earnestly placated the people so that the Yao people offered their allegiance to him," thus promoting a harmonious relationship among the various nationalities.

Wang Ao was loyal to the emperor and was not given to finding fault with his subordinates. In his later years, owing to his failing memory and slow response, he always took his attendant Tanlang along when he had an audience with Emperor Yingzong. When the emperor asked for the reason, Wang Ao said: "I am old now. I am afraid I shall not be able to remember what you have instructed and, lest I should 'miss' something, I have asked him to help me. He is honest and prudent and can be relied upon." He was open-minded and magnanimous toward his subordinates and did not entertain any personal prejudice against them. Cao Xun, a junior official of the Ministry of Official Personnel Affairs, who had been transferred to Jiangxi, returned to the capital owing to some illness. Wang Ao reported this matter to the imperial court.

Thinking that Cao Xun did not want to leave the capital, the emperor ordered him to "return to his native place." Nursing a grievance, he waylaid Wang Ao when he was on his way to the court and "manhandled him, slapped his face and cursed him bitterly." This was indeed an extremely bitter insult to a minister of the second highest rank. Consequently, the imperial court decided to put Cao Xun in prison, but Wang Ao interceded for him so that he was acquitted. "Everybody admired his magnanimity."

In view of the fact that Wang Ao was "very famous" his fellow official Li Xian evaluated him by saying: "Gaoyao had nine virtues while Reverend Mr Wang has five: prudent in time of disturbances, firm under all sorts of interference, simple and honest, resolute and steadfast and valiant and just."

Naturally, Wang Ao was after all a figure of the fuedal ruling clique. All his actions, such as exercising strict "domestic discipline" upon himself and carrying out his official duties according to "official discipline" were aimed at protecting the fundamental interests of his own class and demonstrating his loyalty to the feudal system. However, if we compare him with his contemporaries, he was indeed, "a cut above them." His conduct and way of doing things served as a model for officials of the feudal landlord class. "By taking other people as examples, we can understand our merits and demerits." His deeds were praised both in official historical records and recounted in works of individual writers, so that they played the role of being "beneficial to the manners and morals of the time." JIEFANGJUN BAO PRAISES SENTRIES ON XISHA ISLANDS

Zhongjian Island, the southernmost fortified island of China's Xisha Islands, is far from the motherland's mainland and is nearly a 1,000-li voyage from the southern coast of Hainan Island. It is like a skiff floating on the rolling seas. The area of the whole island is less than 2 square kilometers. At noontime in midsummer the surface temperature on the island reaches as high as over 60 degrees. Slapped by the moist sea wind, many fighters suffer from rheumatism and arthritis. The living conditions on the island are very difficult. Even a pinch of soil or a cup of fresh water on the island must be transported from the mainland or the big island.

The fighters of this garrison unit are standing guard for the people of the motherland at this place year in and year out. They actively plant trees and vegetables in this place where not even a blade of grass grows. The island is full of vitality as a result. They heighten their vigilance in this place of great strategica importance to carefully garrison the motherland's territorial seas.

JIEFANGJUN BAO's newsletter gives a touching description of how the fighters cherish, build and garrison the island.

JIEFANGJUN BAO also carries a commentator's article entitled "Learn From the Patriotic Sentiments of the Sentrymen at the Remotest Corner of the Earth."

At present, there are 10 major basic projects, such as airports, docks and railways, underway in Fujian and efforts are being made to develop the textile, sugar, paper and food industries there. SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING SPEAKS ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK

[Text] According to our reporters, Comrade Bai Rubing, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, spoke at the provincial industrial and communications work conference on 12 April, emphasizing ways to strengthen the party's leadership over the industrial front and strengthen ideological and political work in enterprises.

Comrade Bai Rubing pointed out: There is a great deal of work to be done if we want to implement the spirit of the speech delivered by Comrade Zhao Ziyang at the national industrial and communications work conference, correct the guiding thought in industrial production, genuinely put emphasis on improving economic results and have a solid, not inflated, growth rate in developing the industrial production of our province. The most important work, the priority work, is to strengthen the party's leadership over the industrial front and to enhance the ideological and political work in enterprises. If we fail to do so, it will be impossible to do a good job in promoting industrial production.

Comrade Bai Rubing said: Agriculture is the foundation and industry is the leading factor of the national economy. They are two inseparable wings of the national economy. If we fail to promote agriculture, the people will have nothing to eat and the national economy will have no foundation. If we fail to promote industry, it will be impossible to improve the backwardness in agriculture and to achieve the four modernizations. Over the past few years, party committees at all levels have concentrated their main energies on agriculture and scored great achievements. This is absolutely necessary and correct. Had we not done so, there would not have been such an excellent situation in agriculture, which is now in the forefront and on the rise. As for industry, generally speaking, party committees at all levels have also paid attention to it, done a great deal of work and realized relatively good achievements. However, we must realize the fact that some of our leading comrades have not yet profoundly and comprehensively understood the dialectical relationship between agriculture as the foundation and industry as the leading factor. They do not have a clear understanding of the guiding thought that we must pay attention to both agriculture and industry simultaneously to enable them to promote each other. A phenomenon of paying attention only to agriculture and ignoring the role of industry as the leading factor still exists. If we fail to eliminate this phenomenon, the development of our agriculture, industry and the entire national economy will be hindered.

To achieve good economic results and maintain a relatively good growth rate in our province's economic construction, we must continuously do a good job in promoting agriculture and, at the same time, make up our minds to strive to promote industry and give full play to its role as the leading factor in the national economy. I hope that comrades of party committees and government organs at all levels will conscientiously study this issue, place it in its due leading position and adopt a number of practical and effective measures to realize some obvious achievements as soon as possible.

After listing a number of new tasks for industrial production required by the development of agriculture and the national economy, Comrade Bai Rubing emphasized: Comrades in party committees at all levels and on the industrial front should give overall consideration to and make comprehensive arrangements for industrial and agricultural plans, for industrial production to suit the needs of agricultural development and for industry and agriculture to promote and compete with each other. In guiding work, it is necessary to put emphasis on both the foundation and the leading factor, so as to enable both to have relatively rapid development and to maintain continuous progress in the national economy. The top leaders of party committees at all levels should pay equal attention to both agriculture and industry. Localities whose industrial foundation is relatively weak should place industrial development high on their agenda, genuinely strengthen leadership and work and enable industrial production to develop harmoniously with agricultural production. Localities whose industrial foundation is relatively good should give full play to their strong points, take the lead in promoting advanced technology, producing high-grade, precision and advanced products and improving economic results and set an example for others.

Comrade Bai Rubing said: Whether party committees can concentrate their main energies on implementing the party's principles and policies and strengthening the ideological and political work plays a major part in deciding whether they can improve and strengthen the party's leadership and enhance the party's fighting capacity as well as in deciding whether they can bring into full play the enthusiasm of staff and workers and achieve the best economic results in the national economy. Party committees should use their main energies to conduct ideological and political work and strengthen party building. Through the party's organizational, propaganda and educational work, and by making good use of party members' model and exemplary role, party committees should genuinely strengthen the party's leadership over enterprises in politics and ideology and supervise and see to it that enterprises adhere to the socialist orientation and strictly implement the party's and government's principles, policies and plans, observe the state's systems and rules, protect the interests of the state and the people, ensure the fulfillment of various political and economic tasks of the enterprises and correctly handle the relations between the interest of the state, enterprises and staff and workers. If party committees of enterprises fail to fulfill such tasks and are keen on concrete administrative and economic affairs, they will be considered as neglecting their duty and failing to perform their leading role. All localities and departments should sum up experiences and solve the question of which aspects enterprise party committees should concentrate their main energies on.

Comrade Bai Rubing emphasized: To strengthen ideological and political work, we should first of all conduct ideological work among leading cadres at all levels and solve their ideological problems. Party committees at all levels and all departments and units on the industrial and communications front should conscientiously examine the ideological status of leading bodies in accordance with the instructions and requirements of the CCP Central Committee to see whether they suit the needs of the current situation, whether they put the interests of the party and the people first, whether they are in high spirits, whether they are as brave as the women's volleyball players and whether they can defy difficulties or are afraid of them. Leading cadres at all levels should conduct criticism and self-criticism in light of reality. I hope that leading cadres at all levels will exert themselves, further improve the listlessness in ideological and political work and score greater achievements in work.

Resolution Adopted

OW081415 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 5 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] The Fourth Session of the Seventh Shanghai Municipal People's Congress has examined the "report on opinions concerning arrangements for the 1982 Shanghai city economic and social development plan" and the "report on Shanghai city's 1981 final accounts and 1982 budget" and has adopted the following resolution:

The session approves the 1982 Shanghai city economic and social development plan. Since the third session of the seventh municipal people's congress, the municipal people's government has resolutely implemented the measures decided upon by the State Council for further readjusting the national economy and has actively worked for and made achievements in developing industrial and agricultural production, expanding domestic and foreign trade, stabilizing market prices and improving the people's livelihood. The session demands that the municipal people's government, in this year's economic work adhere to the guiding ideology focusing on raising economic results, strive to achieve a realistic growth rate with better economic results than last year and ensure the fulfillment of this year's economic and social development plan.

On the basis of the budget examination committee's report, the session approves Shanghai city's 1981 final accounts and 1982 budget. In 1981, the city's finance departments played an active role in accelerating economic readjustment; supporting production development; promoting culture, education, public health and science; and improving the people's livelihood. The session expresses satisfaction that the city, in the course of readjusting and transforming the national economy, has made efforts to increase revenues, cut expenditures and fulfill the revenue targets fairly well. To achieve a basic balance between revenue and expenditure and between credit receipts and payments remains a matter of prime importance this year. The session calls on the municipal people's government to continue to work hard to develop production, actively organize revenue sources, cut expenditures, oppose waste, strengthen financial inspection, strictly enforce financial and economic discipline and ensure the fulfillment of this year's financial tasks assigned by the state.

JIEFANG RIBAO CITED ON STATUS OF BAOSHAN PROJECT

[Text] Residents of Shanghai will soon be receiving the first benefits from the multi-billion-dollar Baoshan iron and steel complex when the first generator on the site begins to supply them with electricity. A third of the Baoshan project -- China's biggest steel works -- is now complete. Work first began in 1979, but was suspended in 1981 and resumed this year.

In an interview with JIEFANG RIBAO (LIBERATION DAILY), Zhu Erpei, party chief of the complex, said 95 percent of the imported equipment had been delivered and was being installed in the workshops. "If this project was viewed as a bottomless pit which swallowed immense investment, people can now rest assured that the bottom is within reach," Zhu said.

The project should be complete by 1985. By then, the first stage will be able to produce 2.8 million tons of iron, three million tons of steel, half a million tons of staple steel ingots. To divide the entire Baoshan project into two stages is a positive result of the national economic readjustment programme, said Zhu.

Will the Baoshan complex lose money in its first stage of operation? Zhu said that an economic evaluation made by more than 200 experts last year showed it would not lose money, though its economic results would not be very favourable. This was because the first stage of construction would cost 62 percent of the total investment (of two stages), while its output would amount only to one-third of the entire finished project, because of the pending erection of the hot and cold rolling mills. To make up for the financial disadvantage, the authorities have decided to step up construction of the power station. The two generators in the power centre, totaling 70 mW, generate 5 billion kWh of electricity each year and will bring considerable revenue to the Baoshan complex.

Zhu Erpei said the complex would not cause any pollution problems for Shanghai.

The State Bureau of Environmental Protection conducted simulated tests last year in Baoshan, and the results proved that all effluents would conform with health standards.

After that, in connection with the actual conditions in our own areas and units, we should stipulate specific measures for correctly implementing this decision and summon up resolve to resolutely carry this struggle through to the end.

The CCP committees and governments at all levels throughout our province should include planned parenthood work in their agenda of important matters and earnestly strengthen their leadership over this work. YUNNAN PARTY MEMBERS' RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES SCORED

HK080635 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Apr 82

[Text] A letter from Yunnan Radio's Lincang Prefecture reporter (Shi Jiyuan) says: I was recently visiting the border area when I found that some party and CYL members were taking part in religious activities. This included the brigade party branch deputy secretary, who is leader of the brigade; apart from taking part himself, he was also encouraging his son, a senior middle school graduate, to do so.

There are numerous reasons why party and CYL members take part in religious activities. Some are unable to make clear distinctions in ideologies and policies; some lack scientific and cultural knowledge; and some bow to the pressure of social public opinion and their families. In taking part in religious activities, they not only weaken the combat effectiveness of the party and CYL organizations, but also have a bad effect among the masses. The party and CYL organizations should pay full attention to these incidents.

The constitution stipulates that citizens have freedom of religious belief and also freedom not to follow any religious belief and to publicize atheism. Party and CYL members have Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as their guiding ideology and dialectical materialism as their world outlook. They certainly do not believe in gods, and still less can they take part in religious activities. If a party member believes in religion or takes part in feudal superstitious activities, that is a question not just of understanding, but also of party spirit, and is incompatible with the regulations of the party constitution. Hence, it is necessary to carry out work among those party and CYL members and branches that have taken part in religious activities, conduct propaganda in atheism for them and arm their minds with dialectical materialism, so that they can understand that party and CYL members are atheists who should not only refrain from taking part in religious activities, but should also struggle against behavior that, under the pretext of religious activities, harms society and affects production, so as to ensure the smooth progress of our modernization drive.

HEBEI COMMENTS ON COMBATING ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Station commentary: "Speeding Up and Doing a Good Job of Striking at Economic Criminal Activities"]

[Text] The struggle to crack down on the unlawful and criminal activities in the economic field is being carried out throughout our province, and is being developed in depth. Judging from the cases that we have inquired into and dealt with, especially the major ones, we see that most of the economic cases are complicated in nature and have involved many departments and people. In order to promptly and thoroughly investigate and deal with all the economic offenses, and in order to carry out this struggle to the end, the leading groups should pay serious attention to this struggle and adopt vigorous measures.

The criminal case of collusion with outside speculators by people in the service company dealing with means of production of the Handan prefectural material and goods department is an old case that we began to deal with as far back as February 1981. True, at that time we organized some people to investigate the case, but the investigational work made slow progress because we failed to adopt vigorous measures and because we failed to pay close attention to the work. In September 1981, the Central Discipline Inspection Commission and the provincial CCP committee directly sent people to form a joint investigation group with people from the Handan prefectural and municipal organizations. After 5 months of investigation, we finally completed a thorough investigation of the case. This fact proves that an economic criminal case often involves many departments and enterprises. Therefore, in investigating economic offenses, all the enterprises, departments and organizations at all levels should cooperate with each other in the struggle. The organizations at each level should pay close attention to those organizations directly under them in order to ensure that the struggle of striking at economic offenses will be carried out thoroughly.

The commentary says that the struggle to crack down on unlawful and criminal activities in the economic field is one of the key tasks this year. This requires the CCP committees at all levels to strengthen their leadership in this work. The principal leading comrades in these CCP committees should personally pay attention to this work. They should organize the leading comrades of the relevant departments into strong special leading teams to be responsible for this work. These leading teams should promptly analyze the cases that we already detected and the clues in these cases and focus their efforts on key cases in order to make a thorough investigation of them. They should implement the responsibility system. Every unit is responsible for investigating and dealing with the cases in it, but if the cases involve the principal leading cadres of the unit, they will be put in the charge of the department responsible for this work or be put in the charge of the CCP committees at higher levels. We must vigorously and speedily handle the cases of serious offenses and crimes such as smuggling, trafficking in contraband, embezzling, bribing and misappropriating large amounts of state property. We should mete out judicial punishment to the cadres, especially leading cadres, who have committed serious economic crimes. We should pay attention to making a clear distinction between proper economic activities and the activities of smuggling, trafficking in contraband and speculating and between common unhealthy practices and economic crimes. In investigating and affixing responsibility for offenses of embezzlement, we should clearly affix the responsibility of the individuals who have committed embezzlement, as we should not indiscriminately treat all the staff and workers in a department where embezzlement activities have been committed as embezzlers. We should be lenient in punishing first offenders, accessories and those who have voluntarily confessed their crimes, who have exposed the offenses of others and who have promptly disgorged their criminal gains. We should reduce the number of offenders whom we punish and enlarge the number of offenders whom we make mend their ways through education. We should mitigate the punishment of or exempt from punishment those who have committed ordinary economic offenses, as long as they thorougly confess their offenses and disgorge all their unlawful gains.

The struggle of striking at economic offenders and criminals is a major issue that has a vital bearing on the success and failure of the socialist modernization of our country, and a vital bearing on the prosperity and survival of our nation. Of course, we will encounter a large number of difficulties, but we are sure to carry out this struggle to the end, as long as we are determined to earnestly strengthen leadership and carry out the mass line and as long as we correctly implement the party's policies and mobilize all the people and all the departments to take part in this struggle.

HEBEI REPORTS PROGRESS OF CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

[Text] Shijiazhuang, April 4 (XINHUA) -- China's central government has appropriated more than 820 million yuan this year for the construction of large and medium-sized key projects, including railways, harbors, coal mines, power plants and petroleum projects, in Hebei Province, north China, according to the provincial capital construction department.

Construction has begun on the Beijing-Qinhuangdao railway, which is scheduled to be opened to traffic by 1984. The railway linking Beijing with Datong, a leading coal base in Shanxi Province, is being electrified. The two projects will speed up the transportation of coal to Qinhuangdao on the coast for export. Meanwhile, construction of a coal wharf in Qinhuangdao harbor is being accelerated. The 57-kilometer-long railway from Shijiazhuang, capital of the province, to Dezhou is being double-tracked and will be completed by the end of this year. The railway linking Handan in Hebei Province with Changzhi in the neighboring province of Shanxi is still under construction. The completion of these projects will increase the coal shipping capacity from Shanxi, China's leading coal producing center, to other areas.

Several big and medium-sized coal mines are under construction in Hebei Province, also an important coal producer in the country. These include the Qianjiaying and Fangezhuang mines, each with a designed annual production capacity of 4 million tons; the Dongpang mine, designed to produce 1.8 million tons a year; and three other mines, each with an annual production capacity of 1.2 million tons. Construction has also be intensified on the Fangezhuang coal dressing plant, with a capacity of 4 million tons a year, the biggest of its kind in the country, and the Dongpang coal dressing plant, with a capacity of 1.8 million tons a year, according to the department.

New generating units are being added to the Douhe and Matou power plants, with a combined capacity of more than 2.4 million kilowatts. A 100,000-kilowatt generating unit will be put into operation at the Xiahuayuan power plant before the end of this year. In addition, the north China oilfield plans to increase 800,000 tons of crude oil this year by drilling more wells, the department said.

HEILONGJIANG COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Report on HEILONGJIANG RIBAO 17 April commentary: "Study and Implement the Decision"]

[Excerpts] The commentary notes: The decision promulgated by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council concerning dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is a document of great importance. It is a general principle for guiding us in dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. It is also a powerful ideological weapon for the vast numbers of cadres and state functionaries in preserving the purity of communists and in guarding against the five evils. Studying this decision and resolutely and seriously implementing it is very important in ensuring the fulfillment of the great task of the four modernizations drive.

The commentary states: The activity of striking sharp blows at serious economic crimes is developing in depth. Over the past 3 months, many serious criminal offences have been uncovered. Of these, some have been dealt with publicly, and some are currently being dealt with. This has had a notable impact on stopping economic crimes, improving the party work style and social practices and on enkindling the masses' enthusiasm for the four modernizations drive.

In studying the decision, we must, first of all, fully grasp the essence of the decision and then deepen our understanding of the great meaning of this struggle. We should note that most party members and cadres in the province, leading comrades at all levels in particular, have increased their understanding of this issue through studying the central documents and waging struggles in the previous period. However, we should also note that some comrades still have obtuse and muddled ideas.

Leaders at all levels should conscientiously investigate the work done in the previous stage in accord with the decision, sum up the experiences, discover problems and shortcomings and improve the leadership over the struggle against serious economic crimes.

JILIN URGES CONSTRUCTION UNITS FULFILL CONTRACTS

SK091202 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "Construction Contracts Should Be Executed Earnestly"]

[Text] Recently, some enterprises in charge of capital construction projects have neglected the legal role of contracts and built construction projects which were not in accordance with the signed contract. They have often extended time limits for projects, and their construction has been of poor quality, thus not only detrimentally affecting the usage of projects, but also engendering grave losses to the state and the people.

One reason for this situation is that leaders of some construction departments and the units in charge of construction fail to understand the significance of execution of contracts. Another reason is that advantages and disadvantages of contracts do not coincide with the individual economic interests of the parties concerned.

Leaders of construction departments and of the units in charge of construction should conscientiously study, grasp and apply the economic contract law, strengthen the sense of economic responsibility, pay attention to the trustworthiness of construction contracts and observe contract discipline. As for those who seriously break contracts, their individual economic as well as administrative and criminal responsibilities should be ascertained. In addition, we should intensify management of construction contracts and regard the execution of contracts as an economic task for the units in charge of construction. Construction banks, industrial and commercial administrative departments and judicial organs at all levels should timely investigate and deal with contract violations and enforce contract discipline to make the most of investments in capital construction projects.

QINGHAI URGES STRUGGLE AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK150959 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 14 Apr 82

[Excerpts] According to QINGHAI RIBAO, on the morning of 14 April standing committee members of the provincial CCP committee conscientiously studied and discussed the decision adopted by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at criminals who seriously undermine the economy. They also formulated, in line with the province's actual situation, measures to accurately implement this decision, and pledged to carry the struggle against criminal activities in the economic field through to the end.

In reviewing development of the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field, these standing committee members said: Although we have done much work and scored initial achievements in implementing the guidelines of the central directives, we still lag far behind the demands of the State Council. This is mainly because many comrades fail to understand the seriousness of the struggle against corruption. Some comrades doubt that this struggle can adversely affect production. Worse still, some comrades themselves engage in criminal activities, and thus dare not wage struggle for fear of getting in trouble. All these wrong ways of thinking should be eliminated promptly. We must strengthen leadership and work hard in line with the guidelines of this decision to advance this struggle.

The standing committee of the provincial CCP committee has decided to organize all cadres and party members to conscientiously study this decision. From now on, all units should organize cadres, workers and staff as well as their family members to study the decision for a week. Leading cadres of various units should explain and publicize this decision to the people to deepen their understanding. In addition, we should give full publicity to this decision to bring into play the power of the legal system. All economic criminals should turn themselves in to the police as soon as possible to receive lenient treatment. Party and government leading cadres at all levels, major leading cadres in particular, should personally assume responsibility, rigorously enforce rules and regulations, adopt the mass line, pay attention to cracking down on conspicuous and major cases, investigate economic crimes hidden in their own units and handle them as soon as possible.

SOFTBALL LEADERS URGE RELOCATION OF WORLD MEET

[Text] Zhengzhou, April 16 (XINHUA) -- The call for the relocation of the fifth world women's softball championship was firmly voiced by leaders, coaches and players of Chinese women's softball teams today.

Participating in the first-stage matches of the 1982 national women's softball tournament here, they interviewed XINHUA this afternoon.

Jiang Ying, deputy secretary-general of the Chinese Softball Association, stated: The Chinese Softball Association hopes that the Chinese delegation will have an opportunity of participating in the world championship on Chinese soil alongside their compatriots [XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1514 GMT on 17 April in its version reads: "...alongside the Chinese players..."] in Taiwan in order to win honours jointly for the Chinese nation. For this purpose, necessary preparations have been made. However, some Americans in the International Softball Federation are now trying to exploit the upcoming world championship for the creation of "two Chinas." This is something that will never be tolerated.

Li Minkuan, coach of the women's softball team now under training for the forthcoming world championship, said: Don Porter, secretary-general of the International Softball Federation, has time and again resorted to tricks. Under the pretext that there is need to abide by the resolutions of the International Olympic Committee and the International Softball Federation on the issue of China's Taibei, Porter said that only the flags of the International Olympic Committee and the International Softball Federation will be hoisted and the anthem of the International Olympic Committee played at the fifth world championship and that all the political issues had been solved. But, responsible members of the Chinese Taibei Softball Association repeatedly claimed that the right to hoist the flag of the "Republic of China" and the anthem of the "Republic of China" had not been abandoned. At the same time, Porter neither refuted nor negated this practice. [The XINHUA Chinese version reads: "... neither refuted nor obstructed this practice."] As a matter of fact, he continued to make use of the championship for his "two Chinas" trap which was set not only to hoodwink a number of softball teams for the Taibei championship but also to make the Chinese Taibei Softball Association take part in the "two Chinas" scheme. This will naturally go against the wishes of all the Chinese people (Taiwan people included) for the peaceful reunification of their motherland.

Su Chengfu, coach of the team of Hunan Province and compatriot of Gaoshan nationality in Taiwan, said: If the Chinese Taibei Softball Association acts in accordance with the dictate of Porter and other Americans by erecting obstacles in a bid not to allow the players from the Chinese mainland and Taiwan to jointly participate in the championship on the soil of their motherland, it will fail to meet the expectations of the Taiwan compatriots.

Zhang Guixiang, player of the Beijing team, who was a member of the Chinese youth softball team to the world youth softball championships in Canada last year, pointed out: The players from the mainland and Taiwan Province ate, stayed and played together then and, therefore, unforgetable affections and friendship existed among them. The players of the mainland are convinced that their fellow players in Taiwan really welcome them to Taibei for the forthcoming championship. But, certain responsible persons in the International Softball Federation are creating "two Chinas." This, of course, can never be tolerated.

HSIN WAN PAO SEES PROGRESS IN SINO-U.S. TALKS

["New Talk" column: "Shoals Have Been Avoided, but Crisis Is Not Over Yet"]

[Text] Sino-U.S. relations have not retrogressed, though Washington decided to sell military spare parts to Taiwan, and Beijing's protest has enabled U.S. officials to have a breathing spell. However, there are no indications that the relations will not retrogress. The danger still exists.

After Washington announced its decision to ask for congressional approval to sell $60 million worth of military spare parts to Taiwan, Beijing's Foreign Ministry issued a strong protest. The U.S. Department of State deemed it as a "strong and serious" protest while some official quarters held that it was "mild." Anyhow, the relations were not downgraded, and the Chinese Ambassador to the United States Chai Zemin was not recalled to Beijing.

The talks in Beijing will be continued.

Western sources said that this was a "significant concession" made by Washington. Before asking for congressional approval, the U.S. Government explained the following three points to the Chinese Government: First, this is not a new sale but a continuation of an old deal. Second, this is not a sale of weapons but a sale of spare parts. Third, during the course of talks with China, the United States will not sell any arms or military spare parts to Taiwan. The third point is actually an assurance, which means the "suspension" of the sale.

Thus, Beijing might as well wait and see, and continue to negotiate with the United States, "just this once to see how the other side behaves."

It was said that on Beijing's demand, the talks have now come to the question of the quantity and quality of arms sales. Besides, there is also the question of a time limit. Although the details of the talks are being kept strictly secret, judging from what was said, there has been some progress in the talks, at least, there has been no retrogression.

On the other hand, pro-Taiwan people are showing contradictory feelings of being elated and being apprehensive. They are afraid that Taiwan will be unable to buy U.S. weapons or military spare parts in due course or after the months' talks, and that this deal will possibly be the last deal.

Of course, things may not develop so smoothly. However, this shows that some diehards in the United States can no longer act willfully and "do whatever they please."

This is only one aspect of the matter. The other is that the diehards still have not mended their ways. They are playing little tricks, and big tricks too. They are still advocating arms sales, which is, in essence, the creation of "two Chinas" or "one China, one Taiwan," or an expression of regarding Taiwan as a "political entity." Thus, the danger of a retrogression of Sino-U.S. relations still exists.

Beijing has kept a clear head. It knows what to say and what to do. While adhering to principles, it is also flexible in implementing principles. It does not yield an inch and does not press the other side too hard. If Washington has a clear head, it will also do things in a correct way.

[Text] Beijing, April 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet at the Great Hall of the People this evening for Joao Bernardo Vieira, head of state and chairman of the Revolutionary Council of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, and his party. Premier Zhao and Vieira both spoke at the banquet.

Zhao Ziyang praised the people of Guinea-Bissau for winning national independence after waging protracted struggles. "Since the independence of Guinea-Bissau, the people have made unrelenting efforts to end the poverty and backwardness caused by colonial rule. Under the leadership of Chairman Vieira, the people of Guinea-Bissau have in recent years chosen a road suited to the conditions of their own country and scored many successes," he said.

Referring to the situation in Africa, Zhao Ziyang said "at present the African countries, like other Third-World countries, are confronted with threats of aggression and intervention by imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism. In international economic relations, the African countries still hold unequal status. We, the Third World countries should make common efforts and continue our arduous struggle to change this situation."

Premier Zhao Ziyang said the Chinese people and the people of Guinea-Bissau, as well as all the African people, have always sympathized with and supported each other. "Our friendship has stood the test of history," he said. "The Chinese Government and the Chinese people have always followed the five principles stated by Premier Zhou Enlai during his 1964 visit to Africa. We have made them our guiding policy in our relations with African countries."

He said Vieira's visit is a big event in the relations between China and Guinea-Bissau. "We are confident the visit will strengthen the friendship and cooperation between the two countries and enhance the fraternal sentiments between the two peoples," the premier said.

Vieira said he has come to China to strengthen the traditional fraternal friendship between Guinea-Bissau and China. His visit reflects the admiration of the people of Guinea-Bissau for the Chinese people's prolonged efforts to oppose foreign aggression and build a modernized country.

He also praised the Chinese people for their efforts in building a society where there is no exploitation of man by man.

Vieira said his country is particularly concerned about the international political and economic situation and is deeply worried about the continuous emergence of new spots of tension. "Guinea-Bissau supports the movements of the Asian, African and Latin American people to oppose imperialist rule and aggression and to win national liberation. We are willing to march ahead hand in hand with all countries working for a new international economic order so that all countries would develop in a coordinated way," he said.

Also present at the banquet were Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Chen Muhua, vice-premier and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs; Huang Zhen, minister in charge of the Commission for Cultrual Relations With Foreign Countries; Liu Huaqing, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; and Liu Yingxian, Chinese ambassador to Guinea-Bissau.

Zhao on Foreign Policy

[Text] Beijing, April 19 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang summarized China's foreign policy as strengthening unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, opposing hegemonism and maintaining world peace here this afternoon. He made the statement in talks with Joao Bernardo Vieira, head of state and chairman of the Revolutionary Council of Guinea-Bissau.

During the talks, Premier Zhao Ziyang briefed the visitors on the following three basic points governing China's foreign policy:

"First, China always belongs to the Third World. It will firmly stand on the side of the Third World countries and strengthen unity and cooperation with them. It will support on the one hand the Third World countries' just cause of developing their economies and of consolidating their political independence on the basis of economic independence and, on the other hand, make positive efforts to develop economic and technical cooperation with them according to China's capabilities and conditions.

"Firmly standing on the side of the Third World countries, China will work with them for changing the unjust international economic order and for establishing a new international economic order. China firmly supports the people of all the countries of the world in their struggle against imperialism, colonialism, hegemonism, and racial discrimination and in their other just struggles.

"Second, China follows an independent foreign policy and firmly opposes hegemonism. China holds that the cause of the current tension and turbulence in the world lies in the scramble between the two superpowers. China stands for the strengthening of unity among the Third World countries and will by no means create dissention among them.

"Third, China will make efforts to maintain world peace. Like all other Third World countries, China is facing the heavy task of building its own country. To raise the cultural and material levels of the Chinese people, China needs a long period of peaceful international situation."

Chairman Vieira said that his country resolutely supports China's foreign policy. "In international affairs," he said, "Guinea-Bissau opposes imperialism, old and new-colonialism and interference in other countries' internal affairs, definitely adopts the policy of nonalignment and holds that all countries should have their affairs settled by themselves. Guinea-Bissau also supports the people of various countries in their struggle for national liberation and is willing to promote its friendship and cooperation with various countries on the basis of equality."

Vieira said that his country is dedicated to the development of its national economy and to the improvement of the livelihood of the people. Therefore Guinea-Bissau follows the tension in world situation with close attention, he said.

In the course of the talks, Premier Zhao and Chairman Vieira said they hoped to strengthen friendly cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic, scientific and technological fields.

The two sides also briefed each other on their domestic situations and exchanged views on the international situation and some major international issues.

Taking part in the talks on the Guinea-Bissau side were Carmen Pereira, commissioner of state for health and social affairs; Joseph Turpin, commissioner of state for trade, fisheries and crafts; Avito Jose da Silva, commissioner of state for rural development; Commandate Pedro Ramos, director of the department for training personnel and cadres of the People's Revolutionary Armed Forces; Quemo Mane, governor of Guinara; and Julio Semedo, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Present on the Chinese side were Gong Dafei, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Liu Huaqing, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Tan Yunhe, vice-minister of public health; Wang Zhongfang, vice-minister of the Commission for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries; and Liu Yingxian, Chinese ambassador to Guinea-Bissau.

Zhao Fetes Guests

[Text] Beijing, April 19 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet in honor of visiting Somali Second Vice-President Hussein Kulmie Afrah and his party here this evening.

In his speech, Premier Zhao Ziyang said: "Since independence, the Somali people have carried forward their glorious tradition of combating imperialism and colonialism by opposing power politics and foreign interference and vigorously safeguarding state sovereignty and have surmounted various kinds of difficulties. They have achieved gratifying successes in developing their national economy and culture. We wish the Somali people led by President Siad continuous new victories on their road to progress."

Premier Zhao said that since the two countries established diplomatic relations, Sino-Somali friendship has developed vigorously on a new basis. "In the struggle against colonialism, imperialism and hegemonism, we have always sympathized with and supported each other. In our bilateral relations, we have carried out fruitful cooperation in the economic, cultural and other fields. The Chinese Government and people will work untiringly for the maintenance and development of such friendship," he said.

Zhao Ziyang said, in the world today, the rivalry between the superpowers for hegemony has extended to all parts of the globe. Facts have shown time and again that the superpowers are bent on controlling, subverting, exploiting and invading other countries, Third World countries in particular, and thus have posed a grave threat to peace and tranquility in the world. As an African saying goes, "When elephants fight each other, grass suffers." This vividly shows that it is us Third World countries that suffer most in the contention between the superpowers.

He declared that the Chinese Government and people are willing to unite with other Third World countries and all the peace-loving countries and peoples in making joint efforts to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace and establish just and equitable international economic relations.

In his speech, Vice-President Kulmie spoke highly of the traditional friendship between Somalia and China. He said: "The development of Sino-Somali relations, since the independence of Somalia, is characterized by two decades of intensive cooperation."

He said that in the international arena, "China and Somalia are sharing the same views on many problems."

Referring to international issues, the second vice-president said the Somali Democratic Republic is against colonialism, imperialism and hegemonism.

Kulmie pointed out: "Today, we live in a perturbing world in which superpowers are engaged in rivalrous competition for world domination. In the Horn of Africa, a dangerous situation still prevails there."

The Somali Democratic Republic, he said, "would like to see the conflict in Horn solved politically, with participation of all interested parties. We firmly believe that the interest of all people in the region lies in peace and tranquillity and in the rewarding task of national development and inter-regional cooperation."

Present at the banquet were Vice-Premier Ji Pengfei; Acting Minister of Culture Zhou Weizhi; and Vice-Foreign Minister He Ying as well as Mr. Salah Mohamed Ali, Somali ambassador to China, and Mrs. Salah.

Before the banquet Premier Zhao Ziyarg had a cordial conversation with Kulmie and his party.

ARTICLE EQUATES CORRUPT CADRES TO COMPRADORS

[Article by De Min [1795 3046]: "It Is Not 'Alarmist Talk'"]

[Text] While flipping through some old books and newspapers I came across some material introducing the various functionaries in old China's "foreign concessions." I read of one group known as compradors or inspectors who became wealthy by helping foreign capitalists exploit the Chinese people.

According to the record, compradors were eligible for a commission of 0.125 percent on bank notes, gold or silver purchased or sold by the foreign banks. A meager 0.125 percent does not look like much at first glance, but it often amounted to more than ten times and even tens of times more than the nominal salary of a comprador. Wang Huaishan, who was the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation's first comprador in Shanghai, started as an assistant in a small Chinese bank but because he was particularly energetic in his role as a comprador he "earned the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation incalculable profit and rapidly became very rich himself." The head of the Jiren foreign trade firm promised its comprador A Wu a commission of .4 taels of silver for every bolt of foreign cloth he sold for more than 2 taels. A Wu gained considerable fame and fortune as a result of such sales. Contemporary political commentator Wang Tao described Shanghai as "being flooded with foreign goods and its foreign trade depended solely on the negotiations of the compradors"; "great wealth could be earned in a matter of minutes."

Of course, these are now all past events. In socialist China there is no place for this evil product of colonial and semicolonial rule, the comprador. While the comprador class itself may be dead and buried, it does not look as if their "traditional habits and customs" have followed them into the grave. For example, not long ago it was reported that the deputy head of a certain city's television factory took advantage of negotiations with a Hong Kong businessman for the purchase of television parts in order to get two television sets and some clothes for himself. Although he knew perfectly well that a single 12-inch television should cost $57, he agreed to buy 5,000 of these sets from the Hong Kong businessman at a price of $62 each. There is also the case of a deputy manager of a provincial machinery import-export company who, during a visit to Italy to place an order for leatherworks machinery, accepted bribes totaling $5,000 from foreign businessmen. During the contract negotiations he submitted to the demands of these foreign businessmen, causing the nation to squander a large amount of foreign exchange. Can such people possibly call themselves Chinese?

It may seem rather "alarmist" to link the bribes taken by this factory chief and manager with the rise to fame and fortune of Wang Huaishan and A Wu. In actual fact, however, it is not, since their actions certainly share a number of common features. Of course, Wang Huaishan and A Wu made immense fortunes by being compradors, while these others obtained no more than petty gains. But it never occurred to them that they should perhaps not accept such petty gains from these foreign businessmen. Foreign capitalists have never been keen on dispensing charity from their coffers. These bribes are no more than meager crumbs from the banquet tables of the people offering bribes. The cost of such a banquet is considerable not only in terms of national resources but also in terms of personal and national dignity. Some have been bribed by accepting gifts and attending banquets; and once the gifts have been accepted the damage to the state is immense.

With the implementation of the open-door policy, contact with foreign businessmen will become increasingly more frequent and the amount of trading will continue to increase. This in no way violates the principle of self-reliant reconstruction of the socialist motherland. So long as the principle of mutual profit is observed, we should allow people to earn any money they are entitled to earn.

The important point, however, is that we must keep a clear head and conscientiously observe law and discipline, making sure that at no point do we damage the dignity of either ourselves or the nation. Punishment should be administered in accordance with the law as soon as it is discovered that any cadre is engaged in any illegal activities such as accepting a bribe.

Historically, the imperialists' invasion of China was a slow and gradual process, developing from the opening of banks, the establishment of factories and markets into the formation of a country within a country -- the concession areas. The success of their aggressive aims depended on their being able to take advantage of the stupidity and incompetence of the reactionary rulers and the unscrupulousness of avaricious villains. If you said today that foreign gunboats are still capable of forcing open the door to China, people simply would not believe you. However, if we relax in our struggle against corruption and fail to punish the small number of party members and cadres who sacrifice national honor for the sake of petty gain, there is a possibility that such activities could become the "gunboats" of the 1980's. We must seriously guard against the danger of damaging the door to our country from the inside!

ECONOMIC OFFENDERS SURRENDER BEFORE DEADLINE

[Text] Beijing, 19 Apr (XINHUA) -- According to a XINHUA reporter, since the resolution on severe punishment of criminals who seriously undermine the economy was promulgated by the NPC Standing Committee on 9 March, large numbers of individuals who committed serious economic offenses in various places have surrendered themselves, frankly confessed their criminal acts, returned the spoils and exposed the crimes of others involved in the same cases. They have thus received lenient treatment by the government. According to incomplete statistics made by departments concerned covering 20 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, as of 16 April, more than 2,900 people had surrendered to the organizations concerned.

As this reporter has noted from the records of the departments concerned, in some localities there have been instances in which parents admonished children, wives exhorted husbands, and younger brothers and sisters urged elder brothers to surrender, to confess their criminal acts and return the spoils of their own accord. In other localities it has been discovered that many criminal offenders have secretly returned their spoils to the locations where they committed the offenses or placed the spoils at the doors of public security or judicial organs along with letters expressing repentance for their actions. Some criminal offenders have not only confessed their own crimes but also exposed others who committed offenses in the same case. The initial result of the struggle during the current period shows that this serious struggle -- which concerns the prosperity or decline, rise or fall of our party and state -- has promptly checked the unhealthy trend and is saving the criminal offenders from being deeply bogged down in the quagmire of crime. It gives the vast number of cadres and people an anticorruption, socialist education which is of vital significance.

It has been emphatically pointed out by the departments concerned that the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, which was promulgated on 13 April, is an extremely important document and that its promulgation indicates the firm determination of the party and the government to carry this struggle through to the end in order to ensure the purity of our party and the smooth progress of our socialist modernization program. Now that only 10 days remain before the 1 May deadline as stated in the NPC Standing Committee's resolution, all those who have committed economic crimes must see the matter clearly and know that it is time to realize their errors and mend their ways. They must surrender to the government as early as possible in order to receive lenient treatment. If they obstinately stick to the wrong course, continue to act defiantly and to conceal their crimes, they are bound to be severely punished by the state law.

HONGQI ON CURRENT QUESTIONS IN LITERATURE, ART

[Article by Wen Hua [5113 6985]: "Several Questions Which Call for Attention in Literary and Art Creation at Present"]

[Text] Socialist literature and art must be improved and developed through a continuous process of practice and summing up of experience. In recent years, literary and artistic creation has flourished, bringing about a situation that has rarely been seen since the founding of the PRC. In the second half of last year, comrades in literature and art circles began to study and implement the spirit of the Central Committee's forum on questions on the ideological front, earnestly carrying out criticism and self-criticism in a comradely and realistic manner. In addition to affirming the achievements and mainstream of this development in literature and art, on the question of overcoming and preventing the mistaken tendencies of bourgeois liberalization, they reached a basically unanimous understanding, exchanged ideas and strengthened unity, creating conditions that are conducive to the further flourishing and healthy development of literature and art.

These studies and discussions have played an important role in the development of our country's socialist literature and art. One of the most outstanding results is the fact that we have had to draw a clear distinction between right and wrong on certain basic questions of literary and artistic creation.

1. A number of literature and art works describing social life during the "Great Cultural Revolution" have appeared since the smashing of the "gang of four." These works have played a positive role in understanding this internal disorder that brought serious calamity to the party, the state and the people of all nationalities and in understanding the essence of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques. However, an outstanding problem that exists in a few of these works is that they are unable to draw a clear distinction between, on the one hand, Lin Biao and the "gang of four," and on the other hand, the party, the state and the socialist system. As a result, objectively they have varying degrees of bad effects on the party, the people's regime, and the socialist system.

It should be noted that, although Lin Biao and the "gang of four" seized a considerable amount of the state's and party's power during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and invariably waved the banner of the party and socialism to justify their perverse acts, they were in fact a diseased growth on the body of the party and the socialist system. Lin Biao and the "gang of four," along with the serious calamity they brought on the people, were certainly not products of the party and the socialist system itself. On the contrary, they were the enemies of the party and socialist system of the working class. While they may have prevailed for a while, in the end they did not and could not escape the punishment of history. Once the victory against them had been achieved, it was inevitable that our party and socialist system should move rapidly into a new historical period. This is the true face of Chinese history during and after the "Great Cultural Revolution" and is also something that our party, and the people of all nationalities, including workers in literature and art, have come to understand through the summing up of the experiences of this historical period. As the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" pointed out, "although we suffered from sabotage by the counterrevolutionary cliques during the 'Cultural Revolution,' we won out over them in the end. The party, the people's political power, the people's army and Chinese society on the whole remained unchanged in nature." These highly complex social and historical phenomena occurred under very special conditions and some authors have failed in their efforts at artistic condensation and judgment, believing that the "Cultural Revolution" represented 10 years of fascist dictatorship, during which time the state's political power was completely in the hands of the "gang of four."

This mistaken understanding has meant that their works paint a very dark picture of the social reality during that time, giving no hint of either the reactionary nature of the Lin Biao counterrevolutionary cliques or the historical trend which was to result in their eventual downfall and offering no insight into either the struggle of the party and the people of all nationalities or the inevitability of their final victory. The inability to grasp the true nature of society in a correct and comprehensive manner has prevented a small number of authors and artists from correctly understanding and expressing the most profound and inherent truth of the age that "our people are a great people and that our party and socialist system have enormous vitality." It seems that a summing up of both the positive and negative experiences and lessons of literary and artistic creation and a deep study and appreciation of the "resolution's" scientific analysis of the "Great Cultural Revolution" will contribute significantly to the improvement of artistic and ideological standards in this type of creative activity.

2. Practice has proved that pursuit of special privileges and bureaucratism are, in the entire ranks of revolutionary cadres, only partial and temporary phenomena which can certainly be overcome by the forces of the party and the people's regime themselves. In observing life, selecting material, refining plots and portraying characters, writers and artists should take a stand that conforms to the basic interests of the party and the people. Moreover, through their own creative work they should be able to play a positive role in improving party work style and work and in promoting socialist modernization. However, an important point that needs to be put forward here is that it is essential to clearly distinguish the fundamental differences between the old and new social systems and between the party's cadre force and the very small number of degenerates and speculators who have worked their way into it. The socialist system is incompatible with the phenomena of pursuit of special privileges and bureaucratism. Our cadres are certainly not bureaucrats of the old system; they are the people's servants and communists who devote their all to the cause of liberating the whole of mankind. Otherwise, there could be no new China in which the people are masters, and there could be no victory for socialism in China. It is absolutely essential to mercilessly expose the small number of degenerate elements and speculators. However, there is no basis at all for maliciously uglifying and launching unbridled attacks on good comrades who have shortcomings or going so far as to paint a dark picture of the entire party and cadre rank. There is a school of thought which believes that those within the party have come to form a "privileged class"; maintaining that only artists have a "conscience" and that politicians have no "conscience." No matter what an individual author's motives may be, any work which is written on the basis of such thinking will be basically contrary to historical facts. Our party and the people of all nationalities earnestly hope that writers and artists will be able to shift the focus of their creative activities towards the ongoing struggle, to build a new life. To say that this represents a ban or a disguised ban on any writing dealing with privilege and bureaucratism reflects a serious misunderstanding of the situation. There is still a dark side to our life and not a single day passes without the party and the people having to struggle against these dark aspects, including privilege and bureaucratism. The task put forward by the Central Committee of struggling against corruption is further proof of this. Two years ago, Comrade Hu Yaobang's "speech at the playwright forum" clearly pointed out that "our party has already resolved to solve the problems of bureaucratism and privilege and is currently adopting measures to this end. The party dearly hopes that comrades in literary and art circles will join us in adopting the correct policy, using literary and artistic creation to expose and overcome bureaucratism and privilege seeking." This is both the sacred right and the unshirkable responsibility of socialist artists and writers. Faced with the various problems for which the party and people show concern, our writers and artists must not close their eyes to any of the backward, negative and ugly phenomena that confront them. Rather than remaining silent, they should bring the indispensable critical functions of socialist literature and art into play in a real and effective manner. In fact, in all areas of artistic creation -- novels, films, plays and poetry -- there have been a considerable number of successful works which have had the correct ideological viewpoint, shown great artistic creativity and adopted the correct method in exposing and opposing all types of unhealthy trends, including privilege-seeking and bureaucratism.

The party and the people have, of course, shown great interest in and welcomed these works.

3. Since the smashing of the "gang of four," we have sharply criticized all kinds of expressions of the personality cult in the literature and art field. Take the ideological stand of Marxism, for example. A number of writers and artists have used the form of literature and art to expose the complex, multifaceted political and historical causes of "overconcentration of party power in the individual, and the growth of autocracy in the party and of personality cults," to help people to draw the necessary lessons. This is very significant. But of course, not all works which deal with this subject and theme have the correct stand, viewpoint and method, nor do they all express a rigorous creative attitude and a sense of revolutionary responsibility. Certain works take a one-sided and vulgar view of the problem and use insinuations and satire to describe the proletarian revolutionary leaders, especially Comrade Mao Zedong, as symbolizing "monarchical power" and "divine rights." This leads to distortions of history. "Comrade Mao Zedong was a great Marxist and a great proletarian revolutionary, strategist and theorist. It is true that he made gross mistakes during the 'Great Cultural Revolution.' But, if we judge his activities as a whole, his contributions to the Chinese revolution far outweigh his mistakes. His merits are primary and his errors secondary. He rendered indelible meritorious service in founding and building up our party and the Chinese people's Liberation Army, in achieving victory in the cause of liberation of the Chinese people, in founding the People's Republic of China and in advancing our socialist cause. He made major contributions to the liberation of the oppressed nations of the world and to the progress of mankind." Every writer and artist who seeks to express this solemn and important theme and subject should use the "resolution's" scientific and factual assessment of Comrade Mao Zedong's historical position as an ideological guide. Several writers have recently tried to sum up lessons and experience in this area in the light of their own creative practice. This has been of enlightening significance in the question of how our literary and artistic creation should solve the relationship between opposition to personality cults, on the one hand, and correct treatment of revolutionary leaders, on the other.

4. In the past there was a simple tendency among our creators of literature and art to completely ascribe a person's social nature to his class nature. This tendency has been criticized and has started to be corrected in practice. In recent years bringing order out of chaos on the theoretical level has led to the appearance of a group of successful works guided by the Marxist world outlook which express concretely the richness and complexity of human society. However, a number of works preaching abstract human nature have also appeared. This is mainly expressed in the following ways: 1) observing life and history from the viewpoint of abstract human nature and defining the struggle between the masses under the Communist Party's leadership and the "gang of four" as a struggle between human nature and antihuman or animal nature; 2) making vigorous efforts to seek beautiful human nature in class enemies or reactionaries, blurring the distinction between the enemy and ourselves and even making "human nature" and "human feeling" an excuse for defection to the enemy, treason and other treacherous acts; 3) preaching that abstract human nature is the lever of history and the motive force by which mankind can hold together and society can develop; 4) holding that the revolutionary war and land reform waged under party leadership and even the socialist system itself depress and ruin human nature; 5) in theoretical circles, confusing a person's nature with his natural properties and abilities. As a result of this, people have begun to believe that "writing about emotion means writing about love, and writing about love means writing about sex." Such a viewpoint and tendency has, in reality, only opened the way for vulgar works advocating "sexual emancipation" and promising sensual excitement. There is an urgent need for further analysis, study and criticism of such a viewpoint and tendency.

5. Serving the masses and socialism is the fundamental orientation of our literature and art. The reason that literary and art creation has been able to achieve such outstanding results and to win the support and praise of the broad masses of the people in recent years is that, through the accurate portrayal of people's lives, this creation has expressed the thinking, the emotions, the aspirations and the demands of the people. Serving the people means regarding the people as an entity and as a decisive factor stimulating the advance of history, and means serving the people's fundamental interests and desires. Hence we certainly cannot separate serving the people from party leadership and the socialist system, nor can we set them against each other. However, certain literature and art workers claim to be the people's spokesmen on the one hand and adopt a posture of opposing "the politics of government" and "official politics" on the other. There are others who announce that they will stand on the side of the people whenever any conflict emerges between the party and the people. However, it can be said with certainty that any attempts to drive a wedge between the party and the people or any attempt by the so-called representatives of the people to deviate from the party and the socialist system will inevitably come to naught. We can also say with certainty that the people have no need for such representatives. The ideological sentiments expressed in the works of those writers who profess to "stand resolutely on the side of the people" are invariably those of individualism and anarchism. The people openly decided long ago whether such ideological sentiments are beneficial or damaging. There are also some writers who regard "box-office value" as the sole criterion for judging whether the masses are being served well or badly. In fact they are just catering to and satisfying vulgar and backward emotions and interests not yet overcome by a part of the masses. This is quite different from truly serving the people. Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out 40 years ago that, "undertakings which truly serve the masses of people are now certainly under the leadership of the proletariat." History has borne witness to the truthfulness of this judgment. Only those writers and artists who uphold the four basic principles will ever become true representatives of the people's interests and will ever be able to create good works that suit the basic interests of the broad masses of the people.

6. In literature and art creation, reflecting the essence of life should be the meaning of the task "writing about the truth." So-called artistic truth, however, does not refer to the simple copying of the phenomena of life, but to using living artistic images to expose the inherent connections and objective trends that exist in and between objects. In literature and art theory and practice, some people set "writing about truth" against "writing about the essence" and confuse "writing about the essence" with embellishing life and advocating "hiding the truth and deceiving people." This both violates the Marxist theory of cognition and also belittles and twists the truth of literature and art. Just as the affirmation of simple facts cannot be termed "truth," the naturalistic portrayal of the daily phenomena of life cannot be called "artistic truth." Artistic truth should be the reproduction of the real essence of life. The most essential things, however, are always concealed by the superficial phenomena of daily life. Therefore, in order to achieve artistic truth one must explore and uncover the details and true meaning of life and condense them artistically. If one is incapable of seeing the "deep currents" of life and notices only the froth on the surface and the dress, and if one does no more than list life's phenomena, exaggerating catastrophic scenes and displaying only ugly phenomena, this will not only distort the true face of life, confuse people's understanding and create bad social effects but will eventually also bring into question the artistic content of the things described.

Our socialist literature and art are developing healthily. We firmly believe that so long as efforts are made to study, and regular attention is paid to guarding against and overcoming bourgeois liberalization and other unhealthy trends, our socialist literature and art will certainly be able to achieve even greater success. As a crude outline of several questions concerning creation, this article provides reference material for further discussion among comrades in literature and art circles. If there are places where the wording or analysis is either imperfect or simply erroneous, we sincerely hope that readers will offer their criticism.

NATIONAL FORUM ON MILITARY WRITING OPENS 19 APR

[Text] Beijing, 19 Apr (XINHUA) -- A national forum to discuss literary writing on military subjects, the first of its kind since the founding of new China, opened today in Beijing. The forum will discuss the question of how to further develop literary writing on military subjects in our country so that works on such subjects will play an immense role in promoting socialist spiritual civilization and in cultivating new men of socialism.

The forum was called jointly by the Chinese Writers Association and the Cultural Department of the PLA General Political Department. It is being attended by over 140 literary workers from various parts of the country and from the army.

Today's meeting was presided over by Zhang Guangnian, vice chairman of the Chinese Writers Association.

Ba Jin, chairman of the Chinese Writers Association, entrusted Feng Mu, vice chairman of the association, with reading his written speech at the meeting. In the speech, he warmly supported the convocation of this forum and wished it complete success. He said that military subjects make up a very significant part of the subjects for literary writing, and that many of our writers have already gained rich experience in this respect. At the same time, however, it is felt that some questions concerning the ideology and other aspects of writing have to be studied and discussed. Through the current forum, he added, we can sum up and exchange our experiences, affirm our achievements, discover our shortcomings, enhance our understanding of the importance of wroting on military subjects and heighten our sense of responsibility so as to further develop work in this field.

Liu Baiyu, director of the Cultural Department of the PLA General Political Department, delivered a lengthy speech at the meeting, entitled "Strive To Develop Socialist Literature on Military Subjects of Our Country During the New Historical Period." The speech stressed the vital significance of developing literary writing on military subjects and dwelt on the question of energetically raising the level of and strengthening the leadership over work in this field during the new period.

Liu Baiyu said: Today our country has entered a new historical period. Writers and artists should, through their works, play an immense role in promoting socialist spiritual civilization and in cultivating new men of socialism. As far as this sacred historical task is concerned, literary works on military subject play a unique educational role, irreplaceable by those on other subjects. Good literary works on military subjects are "textbooks of life" for conducting education in patriotism, revolutionary heroism, internationalism and communism. They are indispensable to the vast numbers of commanders and fighters in the armed forces and to the broad masses of people, in particular the young.

Liu Baiyu said: Making all-out efforts to improve rather quickly the quality of literature on military subjects is a relatively urgent question confronting us at present. We must clearly and vividly portray individuals, intensively reflect contradictions, work out realistic and moving plots for stories and try to elevate the ideological aspects of our works. To do this, the key is to plunge into the thick of life and bring forth new ideas. He said: In our literature on military subjects, there are many experiences worth summing up in creating artistic models. In recent years, influenced by the viewpoint of "abstract, eternal human nature," a few writers have regarded the so-called "human essence" as something antisocial in nature and have used this concept to observe and delineate life, resulting in some works showing unhealthy trends. Though such unhealthy works are few in number, we must draw experience and lessons from this matter.

Liu Baiyu pointed out that to promote socialist literature on military subjects during the new period, it is imperative to take a clear-cut stand in upholding the four basic principles under the party leadership. Writers should act as Marxists, resolute, sober-minded and with accomplishment in the current struggle against bourgeois liberalization and capitalist corruption.

It is necessary to unwaveringly implement the party's principle of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend," make active and healthy comments on literary and art works and carry out correct criticism and self-criticism. Meanwhile, measures should be taken to help writers broaden their vistas and raise their ideological level. He said: I hope that our literature on military subjects will give off a splendid light in the course of the new long march and on the socialist literary front of our country.

Among those attending today's meeting were responsible persons of the departments concerned, including He Jingzhi, Hua Nan, Zhou Weizhi, Ding Ling, Ling Mohan, Chen Yi, Chen Huangmei, Sha Ting, Wei Chuantong and Ma Shitu.

Ba Jin's Written Greeting

[Text] Beijing, 19 Apr (XINHUA) -- Ba Jin, chairman of the Chinese Writers Association, said: Our army is a beloved army. It has made new contributions in recent years to the struggle of defending and building the socialist motherland and in modernizing the army. I think volumes should be written about the army's glorious fighting history and heroic example. This is the duty of us writers.

He said: Whether from the angle of educating young people and future generations, building a socialist spiritual civilization and opposing wars of aggression, or from the angle of literature depicting rich and colorful real life to satisfy the people's increasing spiritual needs, we should all energetically promote and develop creative literature on military themes.

Ba Jin said this in his written address at the forum on creative literature with military themes which opened today. In his talk, he particularly pointed out that, at present, creative literature is faced with the problem of raising quality. Having an intimate knowledge and plunging into the thick of life is the key to bringing about flourishing literary creations on military themes and the premise for raising the quality of literary works.

He said life is the source, and the only source, of literary and artistic creation. Any serious writer, ancient or modern, Chinese or foreign, must always derive nourishment and look for material from this source. Divorced from life, what else has a writer to write about? And how can what is written be any good? If we do not proceed from life, we can only proceed from notions and fabricate. If a writer does not know life well, lacks accumulated experience, does not have a profound base in life and fails to experience and study it in depth, all these shortcomings will be exposed when he writes.

He said: To create new works depicting the new era, experience in life accumulated only in the past is not enough. We must have new experiences, accumulated from life, and new knowledge and skills. And all this can only be known and grasped step by step in the process of plunging into the thick of life.

In his written address, Ba Jin also talked about adhering to the creative method of revolutionary realism. He said: On the question of broadening our field of vision, for example, it is necessary to link the military with other fronts and depict wars and military struggles with a broad, social background. Also for example, on the question of truthfulness, it is necessary to respect truths in life (including historical truths), dig for them in the depths of real life, and not to "elevate" or dismember them subjectively and at will.

Ba Jin said enthusiastically in conclusion: Let us all pick up the pen, use it as fire and as a sword, extol the true, the good and the beautiful, extol the "Great Wall" and the new generation of most beloved people and strike at and eliminate the dark, decadent, old and ugly. Let us use our literary works to make greater contributions to our beloved motherland and people and to building a socialist spiritual civilization!

BAN YUE TAN QUOTES HU ON CCP'S POPULARITY

HK180526 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 7, 10 Apr 82 pp 3-6

[Article by BAN YUE TAN reporters Zhu Mingzhi [2612 2404 0037] and Zhou Cipu [0719 1964 2883]: "Hu Yaobang Says We Must Not Go Against the Wishes of the People"]

[Text] On the afternoon of 21 March, Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CCP Central Committee, had a philosophical conversation with Professor Li Zhengdao from America's Columbia University in the Fujian Room of the Great Hall of the People. Discussing the ups and downs of Chinese history over the past 100 years or so, Hu Yaobang repeatedly emphasized that history bears witness to an irrefutable truth: Those who follow popular feelings prosper, while those who act counter to the people's will fail.

During the conversation, Comrade Hu Yaobang was full of confidence in China's future. He pointed out that the policy currently being practiced by the CCP is popular with the people and that this is the fundamental guarantee of victory for our cause. Hu Yaobang said that no CCP member or cadre should ever deviate from the wishes of the people. He pointed out that this is an important principle that must be observed by every proletarian political party.

On that day, Comrade Hu Yaobang cheerfully received Professor Li Zhengdao, who has made 7 visits to China over the past 10 years. The name of this noted physicist, who works hard to speed up scientific and technological undertakings in China, has been familiar to the people for a long time. Although this was the first time they met each other, Comrade Hu Yaobang and Professor Li Zhengdao felt like old friends, and they had a very cordial conversation.

"This is our first meeting; I hope that you will visit China often."

"Over the past 10 years, in particular recent years, I have seen great changes in China during each of my visits."

"The changes were not very significant over the past 10 years. We can predict some even greater changes 5 years hence."

"Certainly, in physics terms, this is what we call changing potential energy into kinetic energy."

Professor Li Zhengdao's appropriate metaphor was applauded by Comrade Hu Yaobang and other Chinese scientists at the meeting.

Chairman Hu Yaobang then talked with Professor Li Zhengdao and his wife, Qun Huijun, about the past and the future of China. Hu Yaobang said, "Our party is 61 years old this year. The reason why the party and the state have been able to change the face of China and to achieve successes such as those we have today is that we have adapted to the trends of the times and acted in accordance with the will of the people. Those people who are in power today have a degree of talent; where does this talent come from? The important fact is that they represent the will of the people and that our policy is popular with the people and suits the needs of the vast majority of the people. As long as this is the case, we have reason to be fully confident in our cause. Once there is deviation from this, however, even someone of extraordinary talent is bound to make mistakes. Historical experience has told us that whoever goes against the wishes of the people will certainly fail."

Hu Yaobang said, "At present people are very concerned about the future of China and everyone is trying to work out the direction in which China will move. The United States is trying to appraise the situation, so are many foreign journalists and we ourselves are also doing the same. The appraisals of some of these people are relatively scientific while those of others are nothing more than foolish guesses. What exactly is China's future? In which direction will China move? In my opinion, it can only travel along the road toward unity, toward prospertiy and strength, toward unification and toward stability.

"Economically, it is necessary to carry out the four modernizations and make our country more prosperous and strong. Politically, it is essential to achieve unity, and the whole nation must be unified. While we do not claim an inch of foreign land, all of China's sovereign territory must be unified. Unity, prosperity, strength and unification all accord with the will of the people and are independent of the will of any individual. The fact that the policy currently practiced by the party accords with the people's will guarantees that our country's future will be glorious."

At this point, Li Zhengdao and his wife Qin Huijun, who had been listening carefully to Hu Yaobang, interrupted and said that many people overseas were very much concerned about this issue; they all hope that China will be strong, prosperous and unified.

Hu Yaobang also went on to say that Sun Yat-sen was entirely correct when he said that it was necessary to adapt to world trends and act in accordance with the needs of the people. The reason Chiang Kai-shek lost was that he went against the will of the majority of the people. In March 1943, 2 years before victory against the Japanese, Chiang Kai-shek wrote the book "China's Destiny." In this book he said that communism did not suit China's national character and that it was the Kuomintang, not the Communist Party, which had the answer. China's destiny could only be one of "one party, one ideology and one leader." At the seventh congress of the CCP held in April 1945, Mao Zedong also discussed the destiny of the two Chinas in his keynote speech, pointing out that China must be an independent, free, democratic, unified, prosperous and strong nation. What was the result of this? The Chinese Communist Party met the needs of the people and was eventually victorious; Chiang Kai-shek, on the other hand, ignored the will of the people and was defeated.

"In the past 142 years since the opium war, the Chinese people have suffered inordinate hardship and suffering in order to escape from control and oppression by the three great mountains of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic capitalism, to ensure that they never return and to build a strong and prosperous China. "The Cultural Revolution" was the last time we shall endure such suffering; the 10 years of internal chaos made China even poorer. The people today will no longer accept such poverty. This is a very profound lesson. We can no longer pursue stupid and divisive policies which only bring about poverty."

Hu Yaobang said, "It is now the people's will that China should find unity, should be strong and prosperous and should be unified. We must adapt ourselves to this trend and act in accordance with the will of the people."

Upon hearing this, the 56-year-old Professor Li Zhengdao said with deep feeling: The relationship between man and society is similar to that between atoms and matter; they are inseparable. The nature of atoms determines the matter, while man determines the destiny of society.

Having listened to the analysis of the physicist, Hu Yaobang nodded his head to show approval. He then said, "As far as the Chinese political situation is concerned, no matter how developed it may be or which leading person disappears, it is not individuals but the will of the people that determines the state of things. The Chinese political situation will certainly be able to achieve stability. China will certainly be able to carry out the four modernizations and thus make the country prosperous and strong. It is also absolutely essential that we complete the great task of unifying the motherland. This accords with the will of the people and is completely independent of the will of any individual. Therefore, as far as China's actual direction is concerned, I believe it can be summarized as follows: The political situation will be stable, the four modernizations will be carried out and unification will be achieved."

Hu Yaobang said, "Our party must constantly teach the party members and cadres not to go against popular feelings or violate the will of the people. As long as we act in accordance with the will of the people, there can be no doubt about the victory of our cause." Their conversation continued for about 2 hours without their knowing it. Professor Li Zhengdao and his wife looked at their watches and reluctantly bid farewell to Chairman Hu Yaobang, who had received them in the midst of pressing affairs; thereby also ends our interview. Outside the front gate, the rostrum of Tiananmen appeared extraordinarily magnificent against the sunset clouds in the square where spring was very much in the air. This tower over the city gate is the best witness to the power of the people. History has incontrovertibly proven that the masses have tremendous power. Just as Chairman Hu Yaobang said: Those who follow popular feelings prosper, while those who act counter to the people's will fail. If our party adheres to the policy that accords with the will of the people of all nationalities, we will be able to enjoy nationwide support. The strong, prosperous and unified China foreseen by Chairman Hu Yaobang will certainly stand like a giant in the East.

CCP DEVELOPS MEMBERSHIP AMONG INTELLECTUALS

[Text] Beijing, 19 Apr (XINHUA) -- The party organizations at various levels in the central state organs have in recent years attached importance to recruiting new party members from among the intellectuals and backbone professionals. In 1980 these party organizations recruited 3,040 new party members, 1,324 of whom were professionals and technicians, accounting for 43.5 percent of the total. In 1981 they recruited 3,130 new party members, 1,641 of whom were professionals and technicians, accounting for 52 percent of the total.

To change the situation in which few backbone professionals are party members, the party organizations in some central state organs, following a positive and prudent policy, have in recent years stressed recruiting new party members from among scientists, technicians and backbone professionals. In the past, the party's strength on the scientific research front in the Chinese Academy of Sciences was rather weak. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the party organization in the academy has recruited a number of veteran scientists and middle-level backbone professionals. From 1977 to 1981, 884 new party members were recruited in the Chinese Academy of Sciences, including 558 scientists and technicians. Of the scientists and technicians who were newly admitted to the party, 410 are associate research fellows and higher-ranking personnel, including such noted scientists as Yan Jici, Hua Luogeng, Ye Duzheng, Zhang Wenyu, Bei Shizhang, Yin Zanxun, Wu Wenjun, Ma Dayou, Wang Shouguan, Lin Lanying, Chen Sixiang, Wu Zhonghua, Lin Tongji, Yang Le and Zhang Guanghou.

In recent years, nine new party members have been recruited in the People's Publishing House and eight of them are backbone professionals. The party organizations in the Ministry of Culture, the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission and other units have admitted to the party a number of noted personages who earnestly asked to join it. Among them are Liu Kaiqu, Yuan Shihai, Fang Jufen, Wu Zuguang, Chui Meishan, Hu Songhua, Xie Tian, Wang Renmei and Ling Yuan in literary and art circles as well as Huang Jian, Qi Zutan, Hu Zurong, Wang Weijian, Li Yuejiu, Li Fenglou, Mou Zuoyun and Liang Zhuohui in sports circles.

While developing party membership, the party organizations in the central state organs have conscientiously stepped up the training, education and observation of prospective party members. Many units have assigned special personnel to educate activists applying for party membership and to help them solve the question of joining the party ideologically. Some units have also organized activists to attend party lectures and to receive education in party spirit in order to enable them to acquire a basic knowledge of the party. At the same time, those activists have been invited to some party meetings as observers and assigned certain tasks to carry out. The party organizations in the Ministry of Light Industry and other units have paid special attention to observing prospective party members' political attitude, motives in joining the party, ideology and work style.

As for those veteran activists who have been excluded from the party because of complicated personal records, family background or social relations, the party organizations in the state organs have in recent years paid attention to properly solving the problem of admission to the party for them in accordance with the party's policy. According to data, a senior engineer of the engineering bureau under the Ministry of Railways had serious political problems in the past. It was later proved through repeated investigations that his record was clean. In view of his longstanding application for party membership and his performance in recent years, the party organization of the engineering bureau admitted him to the party in accordance with the requirements for party members. Since joining the party, he has worked harder, thus being elected an advanced worker. Admitting comrades like him to the party can produce a tremendous influence among the masses. Some comrades of bad class origin who had some problems in the past or whose social relations were rather complicated thus feel that they have bright prospects. Many of those who applied for party membership but whose applications were disapproved have once again turned in their applications for party membership.

In recent years the party organizations in the central state organs have recruited new party members in strict accordance with the requirements for party members. As a result, the overwhelming majority of them have been playing an exemplary vanguard role as Communist Party members. Some of them endeavor to gain professional proficiency, others often do people good turns and still others are daring to struggle against unhealthy treands. Thus, many of them have been elected advanced workers, "8 March standard bearers," shock workers on the new long march or outstanding Communist Party members.

INDUSTRIES SEEK TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC RESULTS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 16 Apr (XINHUA) -- Recently a spectacular change has taken place in the office of the State Statistical Bureau. Often at the beginning of a month, there had been many telephone calls from various localities, requesting information on industrial output increases in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions during the previous month so as to compare them with those in the callers' own locality and judge their own achievements. This situation has become rare since the beginning of March this year. What the people see at present is statisticians busy analyzing the reports submitted by some areas and departments on how they fulfill their targets in improving economic results in industrial production.

Some people familiar with China's economic work point out that this change has reflected the fact that in line with the guidelines laid down by the national conference on industry and communications which was held by the State Council not long ago, China's industrial departments are changing the past practice of onesidedly emphasizing output value and speed and are beginning to pay attention to economic results.

News from Shanghai, Beijing, Gansu, Hubei and Nei Monggol vividly verifies this point. While summing up their experiences, a number of provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions have resolutely followed the correct guidelines laid down by the leading industrial and economic departments.

A number of enterprises in Fujian are developing the activities to compare the products in their own enterprises with those engaged in the same trade in the same province, in the whole nation and in the world, and to find out the existing problems in quality and variety, in energy and raw material consumption, in per-unit production costs, in labor productivity and in profits and taxes. After that they publicize the results and mobilize all the people concerned to work out measures to emulate and catch up with the advanced.

The industrial departments in Sichuan Province have also revised their production plans recently on the basis of the market changes and worked hard to increase the production of readily marketable products such as pure cotton cloth, woolen textiles, foodstuffs, sewing machines, famous brand wine, soda ash, sulphuric acid and others while curtailing and controlling the production of slow-moving products such as polyester cloth, tooth paste, alarm clocks, machine-made paper, aluminum pots and pans and calcium magnesium phosphate.

In order to help the industrial enterprises throughout the country improve their economic results and to help the cadres at all levels in the economic departments to clearly understand the situation, the State Planning Commission is studying a plan to set up a national economic forecast center. The minister of textile industry is prepared to set up 9 nationwide investigation and research centers in the fields of dyeing and printing, yarn-dyed fabric, knitwear, woolen textiles as well as others to study textile designs and varieties and forecast market trends. The commercial and supply departments have also begun to actively supply the industrial departments with all types of data for the market.

BEIJING RADIO ON DEVELOPING COLLECTIVE ECONOMY

[Station commentary: "Correctly Understand the System of Peasant Households Assuming Full Responsibility For Most of the Farm Work"]

[Text] Over 90 percent of the productive teams in rural areas of our country have put various forms of the agricultural production responsibility system into effect. In some places, many production teams have implemented the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work [bao gan dao hu]. This type of production responsibility system is simple and is greatly welcomed by the masses. The peasants say: With peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work, we can handle things directly and retain whatever surplus there might be after handing a portion over to the state and the collectives.

Communes and production teams in remote mountainous and poor and backward areas, where the collective economy has been poorly managed over a long period, have made very good progress since the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work was put into effect.

However, every form of responsibility system has its own scope of adaptability and the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work is in general applicable to certain areas suited for diversified undertakings or to units suited for working by themselves. It is not necessary to institute the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work in communes and production teams where the economy is more developed, the specialized and technical division of labor is clearly defined and the people there are happier with the current responsibility system. Putting in a diversified agricultural economic structure in our rural areas, with a different organizational scale and ways of management, will help develop the productive forces faster and put the superiority of the socialist system into play. In areas where the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work is established and the people are satisfied, efforts should be made to stabilize and perfect the system step by step.

The busy season for spring farming is here. We should see to it that agricultural production will not be affected by any change of the responsibility system. Some people thought that the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work meant returning farmland to households and dividing up fields for individual farming. This is an outright misunderstanding. The putting into effect of the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work has indeed brought about a big change in the form of management: management by each household and with each household responsible for its own profit or loss. However, this system is founded on the public ownership of land, and the peasant households and the collectives still keep their contractual relationship.

Under the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work, the use of land, large farm machinery and tools and water conservancy facilities will still be supervised and managed by the collectives under a unified plan and the peasant households will still have to accept guidance according to the state plans. The production teams must keep a fixed amount of public accumulation and make unified livelihood arrangements for dependents of revolutionary martyrs and armymen, the "five-guarantee's" and hardship households. They must also carry out agricultural capital construction under a unified plan. The system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work therefore is not a small, private, individual economy, but is a component of the socialist agricultural economy and a form of responsibility system under the collective economy. The system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work does not mean that full responsibility is assumed without a unified plan. Quite the contrary, the assuming of full responsibility is supervised thoroughly under a unified plan so that unified planning and division of labor is coordinated on a contractual basis. This will stimulate the initiative of commune members and also bring the superiority of the collective economy into full play.

Cases of tearing down and dividing up collectively owned property, indiscriminate tree felling and refusal to accept guidance under the state plans have been reported in some places in the past, because the system was misunderstood by the people. Some production teams, due to lax organization, failed to take good care of dependents of revolutionary martyrs and armymen, the "five-guarantee's" and hardship households. The key to solving all these problems lies in strengthening leadership. In fact, more efforts should be made to strengthen unified leadership, unified management and work coordination after the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work is put into effect. Thus, the burden of responsibility becomes heavier for the grassroots cadres. The production team, as an organization under the collective economy, must still retain the necessary economic functions and responsibility, especially to manage well under the unified plan. So long as the production teams remain structurally sound and the leading bodies firm and strong, all problems that cropped up after the system was put into effect can be solved without much difficult to make this form of responsibility system more perfect with each passing day.

Party organs at all levels in places where the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work has been put into effect, should intensify socialist education among the peasants. The summary of the minutes of the national conference on rural work distributed by the CCP Central Committee pointed out: Our country must uphold the road of socialist collectivization in agriculture; the system of public ownership of such basic means of production as land will remain unchanged for a long time; the establishment of the production responsibility system in the collective economy as a rule will also remain unchanged for a long time.

We must explain clearly to the peasants that collective economy is an unshakable foundation on which our country's agriculture moves toward modernization. It is inconceivable that we can build modernized agriculture on a small-scale economy of peasant households. Implementing the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for most of the farm work, however, does not mean that we are retrogressing to a small-scale peasant economy. With the development of production, the production teams under this system from now on should increase the number of diversified undertakings step by step, develop specialized division of labor and promote specialized contracts to make the collective economy better.

[Text] According to a report by JIEFANGJUN BAO, a field, aircraft-repair hangar was erected at an airfield of the air force of the Guangzhou PLA units on the morning of 16 April. An airplane was pulled into the hangar for inspection.

The field aircraft-repair hangar is the first bubble [qi bei] type, large, inflated building designed and produced in our country. It is supported by nine air pockets which can be filled within 2 hours by a small air compressor. It is 22 meters long, 15 meters wide and 6.5 meters high. Doors and windows can be opened at places other than the air pockets. It has good ventilation and light. It weighs only about 1 dun and is convenient for aircraft mechanics to carry. LEADERS AT DEBUT OF PRC-PRODUCED PASSENGER PLANE

[Text] Beijing, April 17 (XINHUA) -- The first passenger plane ever produced in China made its debut this morning at the Nanyuan airport of Beijing. Known as "Yun-7", the plane made a demonstration flight with 41 well wishers on board. It has 48 to 52 seats. The two-propeller plane took off at 9:45 and in seven minutes, it soared to a height of 3,000 meters. It flew at a speed of 410 kilometers per hour before it landed at 10:17. "The bird flew beautifully," said the pilot. "It met all international technical norms." China has produced nine Yun-7 planes and is going to start serial production, XINHUA learned. Vice-Premiers Geng Biao and Zhang Aiping received all personnel involved in the test flight of the plane yesterday afternoon. "I fully support you," Geng Biao said. "China needs to develop its aircraft industry."

More on Yun-7

[Text] Beijing, 17 Apr (XINHUA) -- The first transport plane ever produced in China known as "Yun-7" has recently completed all the tests and test flights.

On the afternoon of 16 April, Vice Premiers Geng Biao and Zhang Aiping received all the test flight personnel and praised the excellent performances demonstrated in the test flights and the achievements scored by the manufacturing departments and the personnel involved in the test flights.

The "Yun 7" plane is a multipurpose short/medium range transport plane. It has a wingspan of 29.2 meters, fuselage length of 23.7 meters and an overall height of 8.6 meters. It has two turbofan engines, a maximum flight range of 1,900 km, a cruising speed of 478 km/per hour and a maximum takeoff weight of 21.8 tons. It has 48 to 52 seats. If necessary, the seats and partitions can be rapidly removed to turn the plane into a freighter or a mixed cargo/passenger plane.

As of the present moment, the "Yun 7" plane has accumulated more than 1,600 hours of flight time and undergone over 3,600 landings and takeoffs during the test flights. It has landed at the civil airports in 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions except Xizang and Taiwan. Particularly during the test flight on 4 April, the civil aviation test pilots had successfully conducted a single-engine takeoff and landing. That is, when the plane with full payload had just left the ground, one engine was immediately shut off. The other engine was used to continue its flight and for landing. The plane remained stable in flight with only one engine operating, demonstrating its fine characteristics.

The "Yun 7" plane is made to satisfy the needs for the development of branch air routes in China. It is suitable for flying in southern China where the temperature is high and there are more rains or in the mountainous and plateau areas in southwest and northwest China. This kind of plane can easily take off and land and needs only a short runway. It is suitable for use on the short or low-strength runways in various small and medium-sized airports in China.

[Text] Resolution of the Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress on the work report of the Jiangsu Provincial Higher People's Court and the Jiangsu Provincial People's Procuratorate (adopted by the Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress on 7 April 1982):

The Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress approves the work report of the Jiangsu Provincial Higher People's Court made by President Fang Zhen and approves the work report of the Jiangsu Provincial People's Procuratorate made by Chief Procurator Wei Yongyi. The session holds that in the past year or so the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate have played their relevant roles in developing their various operations in an all-round way centering on strengthening social order, tackling problems in a comprehensive way, severely and promptly punishing all kinds of criminals who caused serious harms to society according to law and safeguarding economic readjustment and political stability.

The session points out: Both the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate are important organs of the people's democratic dictatorship. They should continue to work in coordination with the public security departments to further consolidate and strengthen social order, do a good job in conducting propaganda and education on the legal system, mobilize and rely on the masses, accurately and promptly deal blows at counterrevolutionaries and other kinds of criminal offenders and strive to achieve a very great turn for the better in social order this year. At the same time, it is necessary to firmly implement the "resolution on severely punishing criminals who seriously undermine the economy" adopted by the 22d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee, bring into full play the functions of the judicial organs and law-enforcement organs, properly use the legal weapon, deal heavy blows at criminal activities in the economic field and severely and promptly deal with serious cases of economic crimes according to law. Judicial and procruatorial personnel must be upright and honest, impartially enforce the law, insist on basing judgments on facts, use the law as the yardstick, lay stress on the weight of evidence and on investigation and study, make sure that no innocent people are wronged and no criminals get away and safeguard the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Economic, Financial Matters

[Text] Resolution of the Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress on the implementation of the 1981 national economic plan, opinions on the arrangement of the 1982 economic and social development plans, the 1981 final accounts and the draft budget for 1982 (adopted by the Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress on 7 April 1982):

The Fourth Session of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress, after examination and discussion, approves the "report on the implementation of the 1981 national economic plan and opinions on the arrangement of the 1982 economic and social development plans" made by Tian Lantian, chairman of the provincial planning commission; and, based on the examination report of the budget committee, approves the "report on the 1981 final accounts and the draft budget for 1982" made by Gong Zhiyi, director of the provincial finance department.

The session holds that the province's 1981 national economic plan and budget were well implemented. The economy made new progresses while being readjusted; the financial tasks assigned by the state were fulfilled; and the quota for treasury bonds subscription was overfulfilled. All this contributed to stabilizing the economy and maintaining a basic balance between state revenues and expenditures. This is a result of implementing the party Central Committee's important policy decision on furthering economic readjustments and achieving greater political stability.

The session holds that the province's draft budget and opinions on the arrangement of economic and social development plans for 1982 are based on the province's actual conditions, are positive while leaving some margins and embody the principle of continuing to readjust the economy. The session instructs the provincial people's government to organize implementation and ensure fulfillment.

The session points out that it is necessary to face up to certain weak links and problems in the province's economic construction at present, conscientiously implement the 10 principles for economic construction, persistently concentrate on increasing economic results and widely develop the mass movement to increase production and practice economy. It is necessary to strengthen the idea of taking the overall situation into account, adhere to the principle of taking planned economy as the key link with market regulation playing a supplementary role, strengthen administration of plans and strike an overall balance and correctly handle the relations between the state, the collective and the individual. It is necessary to consolidate and improve the administration and management of enterprises, put an end to losses and waste, strictly enforce financial and economic discipline and resolutely deal blows at criminal activities in the economic field. The session calls on the people of the whole province to work with one heart and one mind and strive to fulfill and overfulfill the province's economic and social development plans and financial tasks for 1982.

SHANDONG COMMENTARY VIEWS SPRING SOWING, DROUGHT

[Station Commentary: "Resolutely Win Victory in the Battle To Combat Drought and Carry Out Spring Sowing"]

[Excerpt] Now is the opportune time to sow spring crops. The broad masses of cadres and the people in rural areas must take immediate action, race against time, take the initiative and try in every possible way to win victory in the battle to combat drought and carry out spring sowing. This year, our province's spring sowing and preparations for spring plowing and sowing began earlier and have been carried out faster than usual. Therefore, relatively solid work has been done in this regard. However, since our spring crop acreage has increased nearly 4 million mu over last year, the drought continues to worsen and the water shortage is very serious. Our antidrought task is extremely arduous. We must fully understand this situation, resolutely overcome the slack mood and the idea of leaving everything to luck and prepare both mentally and materially for a serious and protracted drought.

GUIZHOU RIBAO REPORTS POWER FACILITIES DAMAGED

[Text] Today's [18 April] issue of GUIZHOU RIBAO carries on its second page a letter by (Chen Xue) and (Zhou Lianzhen). According to the letter, there have been serious cases of stealing and sabotaging parts of our province's power grids and power transmission facilities over the past few years. We hope that departments concerned will attach importance to such cases.

The letter says: According to incomplete statistics, since 1979, a total of 1,164 guyed [la xian] links of high-tension transmission lines in the province have either been stolen or sabotaged. Moreover, a total of 470 tension members and large numbers of earthing grids and porcelain insulators [ci ping] and a vast amount of materials in (?cooperative) sites have either been stolen or sabotaged since 1979. The losses directly caused by this theft and sabotage amount to over 195,000 yuan. There have been greater losses caused by the following factors: accidents arising from the sabotage of the power grid and drops in production due to power cuts and power failures. For example, due to the theft of three guy anchors [la xian xian jia] by criminals, the main tower of the high-tension transmission line between (Hong Feng) power plant's (He Kuo) power station and (Bai Yuan) transformer substation lost stability and collapsed. As a result, the 10-kilovolt line below the main tower was cut by falling parts of the tower and the power grid disintegrated, resulting in a 77-hour power failure of the two lines. Over 10,000 yuan were spent just on rush-repairing the lines.

The letter notes: In addition to the stealing activities of criminals, some units and people have neglected safety in the state's power grid and have damaged power grids and power transmission facilities while using explosives to cut into mountains nearby the lines, and by carrying out target practice, felling trees and flying kites nearby the lines. For example, on 14 February this year, a child was using a reel of lacquered string to fly a kite. When the kite's string snapped, the kite with the broken string lay at different times on the two 110-kilovolt high-tension transmission lines of the (Hong Feng) powerplant, thus creating short circuits, causing serious burns and fractures [shaoshang duan gu], and cutting off the power supply to the nearby districts, factories and mines. Over 3,200 yuan were spent on rush-repairing the lines.

GUIZHOU INDUSTRY, TRANSPORT CONFERENCE ENDS

[Summary] The Guizhou provincial industry and communications work conference concluded on 17 April. Governor Su Gang delivered a summation, and provincial CCP committee First Secretary Chi Biqing made an important speech. The conference concentrated its discussions on the question of how to improve economic returns, and formulated plans for achieving this aim.

Governor Su Gang said in his summation: "We must further enhance understanding of improving economic returns. Poor economic returns are a stubborn ailment in our province's economic work. I hope that after this conference we will truly understand the significance of improving economic returns, correct our guiding ideology, and shift the focus of economic work to stressing economic returns."

Su Gang demanded that the province carry out the following tasks, centered on improving economic returns: 1) Straighten out the enterprises; 2) strengthen planning guidance; 3) produce more and better products to meet the needs of society; 4) carry out technical reforms and equipment renovation; 5) study advanced technology and apply it to solve problems; 6) bring into full play the role of intellectuals in improving economic returns; and 7) strengthen leadership over industry. The province should get good results in the second quarter, so as to lay the foundation for the third and fourth quarters.

Comrade Chi Biqing said in his speech: "Our industrial production made a good start in the first quarter. The main problems are poor economic results, failure of certain products to meet the needs of society, universal high input consumption, and an increase in accidents. We must now resolve to reverse this situation."

Comrade Chi Biqing also pointed out: "We must deal resolute blows at criminal activities in the economic field. We must resolutely carry out the decision of the Central Committee and State Council. People are not permitted to act as they please and deviate from the decision. This is of major importance for improving economic returns. At the same time we must seriously tackle violations of financial and economic discipline and correct unhealthy trends such as overstating production costs, indiscriminate bonus payments, retention of profit that should be turned over to the state, abandoning industry for commerce and so on."

YUNNAN ISSUES CIRCULAR ON PRICES, MARKETS

[Excerpts] The provincial people's government recently issued a circular demanding that the province uphold the principle of regarding planned economy as primary and regulation by market mechanism as secondary, strengthen market control in accordance with the demands of the principle of control without excessive restriction and liveliness without disorder, deal stern blows at speculative activities, preserve normal order in the markets and maintain market price stability.

The circular demanded that all units handling commodities seriously implement the commodity supply policy. All commodities supplied in exchange for coupons must be so supplied. It is forbidden to sell commodities that are currently in very short supply. In cases of violation of these reules, the wages of those personnel responsible will be docked and their bonuses will be stopped. State workers in league with speculators for profiterring must be fined, subjected to party or government discipline, and even punished according to law.

The circular reiterated: First and second category agricultural and sideline products may not be bought or sold at negotiated prices or sold in the markets before the state procurement quotas are fulfilled. Units that are not state-designated procurement units may not interfere in the handling of these products. Organs, bodies, PLA units, schools, and enterprises which want to go to concentrated producing areas to buy third-category agricultural and sideline products must first register with the local industry and commerce administrative departments, and the departments in charge should allocate the sources of the products in a unified way.

The circular demanded that the province strictly implement the "five forbiddens": Units and individuals are forbidden to go to the producing areas to crash-purchase agricultural and sideline products for which there are state procurement or contract quotas, and to handle them there or elsewhere; it is forbidden to buy commodities in bulk from state retail shops for resale at high prices; it is forbidden to block and obstruct the sources of goods for sale by the state; it is forbidden to abandon business and stage a market strike, monopolize the markets or hike prices; and it is forbidden to use [words indistinct] commodities for resale at a profit.

The circular clearly stipulated: Butchers can only operate after receiving licenses issued with the official approval of the industry and commerce administrative departments, and they may only slaughter porkers retained by the peasants in accordance with policy after fulfilling the procurement quotas.

The circular demanded that government at all levels strengthen leadership over market control work and resolutely hit at speculative activities and smuggling and peddling of contraband.

HEBEI HOLDS INDUSTRY, COMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE

HK190907 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 9 Apr 82

[Text] The provincial industry and communications work conference summoned by the provincial CCP committee and people's government opened yesterday afternoon in Shijiazhuang. The conference is aimed mainly at relaying the spirit of the national industry and communications work conference summoned by the State Council in order to understand the spirit in depth and in order to carry out this spirit, summing up the experience in our practice and straightening out our guiding ideology in conducting industrial production and economic work in order to lead our work onto the path of improving economic effect. By raising economic effect, we will be able to do a good job of developing industry and communications this year, achieve good economic results and a satisfactory speed in development and fulfill the financial targets of increasing revenue and reducing expenditures. The conference will also discuss the problems related to the restructuring and technical reform of our enterprises, the readjustment of industry and the intensification of political and ideological work.

Jin Ming, Jiang Yizhen, Li Erzhong, Wang Zheng, (Liu Binyan), Guo Zhi, Zhao Yimin, (Liu Ying), Yue Zongtai, Lan Kaimin, Li Yongjin, Lu Zhiguo, Zhang Kerang, (Yang Naijing), Li Feng, Xu Ruilin and (Yang Yuan) -- leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's government and the provincial people's congress -- attended the opening meeting of the conference. Comrade Li Erzhong presided over the meeting and Comrade Yue Zongtai gave a briefing on the spirit of the national industry and communications work conference. In his briefing, he discussed the following five questions: the question of raising economic effect, of fixing in people's minds the view of taking the situation of the whole country into account, of the plans and requirements in developing industrial production this year, of the overall restructuring of the enterprises and of the intensification of political and ideological work.

The provincial CCP committee is of the opinion that Premier Zhao Ziyang's speech at the national industry and communications work conference is a speech as important as the one he made at the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC in which he put forth the 10 principles for economic construction. In Zhao's speech at the national industry and communication conference he summed up the experience and lessons from our practice in the past and clearly put forth the guiding idea of taking raising economic effect as the core. This guiding idea is the starting point for us in planning all our economic work.

By economic effect we mean both the economic effect in our enterprises and the economic effect in our society. The latter is more important than the former. We should take both into consideration. In an enterprise the economic effect must embody the unity of value and use value, the unity of production and marketing and the unity of increasing production and cutting down expenses.

In his speech, Comrade Yue Zongtai pointed out that although it is indeed wrong to say that the lower the speed the better, we should take economic effect into account in increasing our speed and strive to achieve an unexaggerated high speed.

NEI MONGGOL CCP COMMITTEE VIEWS ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK160643 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Apr 82

[Excerpt] According to our sources, on 14 April the regional CCP committee convened a study meeting of standing committee members to earnestly study the CCP Central Committee and State Council emergency circular on cracking down on serious crimes in the economic field. The meeting held discussions in line with the actual conditions in the region.

It unanimously held that the CCP Central Committee and State Council circular is very important and timely, providing additional and explicit stipulations on the nature, significance, policy bounds, focal point, methods and steps of the ongoing crackdown on serious unlawful activities in the economic field. We must earnestly study, profoundly understand, and implement it in a down-to-earth manner.

Following the promulgation of the central emergency circular on cracking down on serious economic crimes, the regional CCP committee's standing committee has studied and discussed it on many occasions. It formed a leading group to make arrangements. In the past 3 months it has primarily attended to the publicizing and study of the circular among the regional level organs and the various leagues and municipalities and instructued them to implement the circular in line with their specific actual situations. At present, the struggle against serious unlawful activities in the economic field is gradually unfolding across the region and many crimes have been uncovered.

On 13 April the standing committee heard reports. It concluded that units that had resolutely implemented the guidelines of the central emergency circular had achieved healthy progress. After study and discussions on the circular, the standing committee further understood that a crackdown on serious unlawful economic activities is a new manifestation of class struggle in the economic field under new historical conditions. Serious unlawful economic crimes exist in our region, as they do elsewhere, and we must carry out this struggle. Therefore, we must uphold the policy of opening our doors to the outside world and stimulating the national economy on one hand and persistently carry out a successful struggle against serious economic crimes on the other. It is extremely harmful and ostrich-like if we adopt a hesitant or wait-and-see attitude toward this struggle which could affect the success of our socialist modernization and the destiny of our party and country.

Attending the standing committee study meeting were responsible comrades of the discipline inspection committees, public security and procuratorial departments and courts.

NEI MONGGOL HOLDS RALLY ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK190926 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The regional CCP committee held a mobilization rally of party members and responsible cadres of subordinate organs on the afternoon of 17 April to study and implement the decision of the central authorities and the State Council on cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field. Yun Shiying, secretary of the regional CCP committee, presided over the rally. Ting Mao, second secretary of the regional CCP committee, delivered a report.

Comrade Ting Mao said: The decision of the central authorities and the State Council has elaborated on and made arrangements in an all-round way for a series of important issues concerning the nature, the significance, the lines of demarcation in applying a policy, the work method and the demands of the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. This decision has not only summed up the experiences in launching the struggle in the past 3 months but also experiences in waging the anticorruption struggle in the economic field in the history of our party, especially since the founding of the People's Republic.

All party organizations and party members, especially medium and high-ranking cadres, must unconditionally and unswervingly implement this decision to the letter and be resolute in carrying out this struggle. Furthermore, party members must be tempered and tested in the struggle and make due contributions.

He said serious economic crimes such as engaging in smuggling, trafficking in smuggled goods, embezzlement, bribery, speculation, swindling and appropriation of state and collective property are salient expressions of class struggle in the economic sphere in our socialist country under the new historic conditions.

These criminal activities have undermined socialism, jeopardized the state's economic construction and order and corrupted the party's work style and social values. If we fail to resolutely crack down on criminal activities, the consequences will be disastrous. We must never slacken our vigilance but enhance our understanding and make up our mind to become good Marxists.

Speaking of our region's economic criminal activities, Comrade Ting Mao said our region not only has serious economic crimes but also has salient features which are concretely expressed in the following points: Some people and units traveled a long distance to transport smuggled goods from coastal areas to illegally resell them at a profit. Some even accepted bribes to buy low-priced goods at a high price or to buy imitations, causing great losses to the state. Some ganged up with criminals in the inland areas and adopted all possible means to buy and resell at a high profit our region's livestock, timber and farm and sideline products. Some even resold gold, silver coins and narcotics at a profit.

All localities and organs are now organizing the work force to investigate serious cases. Generally speaking, the situation in our region in struggling against serious economic crimes is good. However, the development of the struggle is not balanced. Regional level organs are lagging behind league and banner level organs. This situation merits the people's great attention.

Comrade Ting Mao also set forth concrete suggestions for subordinate units on how to perform well in the struggle against serious economic crimes.

NEI MONGGOL INCREASES QUARTERLY INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT

SK090923 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Apr 82

[Text] Our region achieved an all-time high in quarterly industrial production. The regional industrial output value in the first quarter reached 1.44 billion yuan, an increase of over 12 percent over the corresponding 1981 period. Of the 100 major industrial products, 65 increased in output. The output of 21 industrial consumer goods including woolen thread, woolen blankets, carpets, silk fabrics, dairy products, sugar cubes, leather shoes and machine-made paper all increased more than 10 percent over the corresponding 1981 period. The output of consumer goods such as bicycles, televisions, washing machines and furniture increased from 40 to 100 percent. Since leaders at all levels have attached importance to raising economic results, the output of products in great demand has increased, resulting in a substantial increase in revenue.

In the past 3 months, our region's industrial and communications front stressed work in three aspects.

1. Leaders throughout the region took the lead in participating in work. Leading cadres and office cadres of industrial and communications departments were dispatched to investigate and help solve problems in key localities and enterprises.

2. Cooperation between coal, electricity and railway transport sectors was implemented to promote all-round development on the coal, power and railway transport fronts. All five collieries in the region overfulfilled their production plans. In the first quarter the total raw coal output increased by 680,000 tons over the corresponding 1981 period. Thanks to the advantage of receiving sufficient coal supplies this year, power departments rationally organized transportation, tried all possible means to raise work efficiency and overfulfilled the freight volume plan by 25.9 percent.

3. Production management and organization was strengthened. Leading organs at all levels examined and studied the production situation of key trades and professions and adopted appropriate measures to help them boost production. They helped enterprises which had problems to manage their affairs and gave them guidance to enable industry to develop healthily.

Resolution on Work Report

HK150650 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Resolution on government work report: "Unite To Promote the Excellent Situation and Strive For New Success in 1982," adopted by the Third Session of the Ninth Tianjin Municipal People's Congress on 3 April 1982]

[Text] The Third Session of the Ninth Tianjin Municipal People's Congress has examined and discussed the government work report made by Mayor Hu Qili on behalf of the municipal people's government. The session holds: The report reflects the important new policy decisions formulated recently by the central authorities on the building of socialist modernization. The report also accurately analyzes the current situation in Tianjin Municipality, affirms the successes achieved in work since the second session of the ninth municipal people's congress, puts forth the principal task for 1982 and reflects the aspirations and demands of the Tianjin people.

The session has approved the report made by Mayor Hu Qili.

The session demands that the people's government and functional departments at all levels earnestly implement all the tasks and measures specified in the government work report. In 1982, promoting economic returns should be taken as the basic starting point, the process and the end result in the building of material civilization, which includes industrial and agricultural production, capital construction, domestic and foreign trade and all other economic work. It is necessary to score achievements in earnest. In the building of spiritual civilization, we must grasp two major issues -- striking relentless blows at criminal activities in the economic field and combating corrupt phenomena of all kinds and promoting the preparatory work for reforming the structure.

We must consolidate and promote the results gained in the all-people decorum and courtesy month. We must profoundly carry out activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" on a long-term basis. In 1982, we must also strive for a great improvement in social mood and order.

The session points out: The 1982 tasks are heavy and difficult for our municipality. In particular the water and energy shortages are still a great threat to the production and people's livelihood of the municipality. The year 1982 is of crucial importance for rehabilitating and repairing the damage caused by the earthquake, and this is really an arduous task. Strong measures and great efforts should be made to tackle all these problems so as to achieve good progress. The session calls on workers, peasants, intellectuals and the people of all walks of life of the municipality to unite still more closely around the CCP Central Committee and strengthen their resolve to win victory with one heart and one mind so as to make great contributions to accomplishing all combat tasks of 1982 and to opening up new prospects.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY DISCUSSES ECONOMIC CRIME

[Excerpts] Zhao Dezun, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, who was conducting investigations on the work of Yichun municipality, conscientiously studied the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious crimes in the economic field together with comrades participating in a Yichun municipal meeting to report the struggles against crimes in the economic field. Zhao Dezun also delivered a report yesterday to give guidance in studying the decision. He urged party members, cadres and ordinary people throughout Yichun municipality to conscientiously study the decision and carry out the struggle to deal blows at serious economic crimes in a sound and comprehensive manner.

Zhao Dezun set forth the following eight tasks to implement the decision:

1. Persistently combine the struggle to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field with production. Principal leading comrades of party committees should assume direct leadership over the handling of important cases. In the meantime, leading bodies should guarantee sufficient efforts to attend to production and make it better. They should strengthen ideopolitical work and prevent the appearance of any negative forces which adversely affect production.

2. Review problems from all angles. We should not negate the work of party committees at certain levels merely because some leading cadres have done something wrong. When treating leading bodies or individual cadres, merits and demerits should be clearly distinguished.

3. Seek truth from facts. Lessons from previous political movements teach us that we should particularly stress seeking truth from facts in this struggle. Departments where economic criminal activities exist should conduct conscientious investigations and handle them in a serious manner. Where economic crimes do not exist, we should not arbitrarily choose the targets of the struggle from subjective viewpoints. The process of handling a case, including filing the case, investigations, verification and meting out punishments should proceed in a truth-seeking manner.

4. Strictly implement party policies. Generally speaking, we should correctly distinguish and handle contradictions of two different natures.

5. Follow the mass line. We should resolutely avoid a large-scale mass movement in carrying out this struggle, but we should follow the mass line earnestly.

6. Stress education. Struggle does not mean to handle some important cases and punish some persons only. More important, we should use the negative examples as lessons to conduct specific ideological and political education among party members and cadres to enhance their ability to combat corrosive influences.

7. Strictly observe discipline. To ensure the smooth progress of the struggle, every party member and cadre should vigorously participate. We should not be indifferent to the struggle. We should not let criminal activities go unchecked even if we know the facts. We should uphold party spirit and principles and not engage in tricks to make irresponsible remarks, create disturbances, abuse power to retaliate against others or stir up factionalism.

8. Combine efforts to deal blows at economic crimes with efforts to improve our work.

JILIN CCP IMPLEMENTS DECISION ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK171227 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Excerpts] According to JILIN RIBAO, on the very day when the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field -- an extremely important document -- was promulgated, the Jilin Provincial CCP Committee held an emergency meeting of its standing committee to study and discuss the decision in light of the realities of our province. Everybody has unanimously supported the decision, because it has comprehensively and systematically explained the nature, significance and purpose of the struggle to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field and clearly defined principles, policies, and measures for dealing blows at criminal activities. The decision is a powerful ideological weapon for successfully conducting this struggle. Party and government organizations at all levels, enterprises, establishments and mass organizations throughout the province are urged to immediately conduct earnest study and discussion to comprehensively and accurately master the spirit of the document and implement it to the letter.

In order that the struggle to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field can be carried out firmly to the end, the following tasks must be fulfilled:

1. By studying the decision, it is necessary to enhance our understanding, remove mental blocks and carry out the struggle in a better way. In the past 3 months, since cadres at all levels enhanced their understanding and gradually strengthened leadership, the struggle has been unfolded in our province and initial results have been scored. However, progress in the struggle is uneven. Some leading comrades lack an adequate understanding of the urgency and necessity in the struggle. Some comrades are not bold and active enough in guiding the struggle for fear that it may affect work and production. Some comrades are afraid of offending people, causing trouble and many other things; in other words, they worry too much. Some persons who are implicated not only refuse to join the struggle but also impede the investigation and handling of the cases. All these phenomena are very wrong and must not be permitted.

2. In view of many incidents which have been exposed, violations of law and criminal activities in the economic field by some localities and persons in our province are very serious. Despite the fact that our province is not a coastal area, incidents of economic crimes related to timber, grain, gold, and precious herbal medicines such as ginseng and pilose antler in our province are more prevalent than in coastal provinces. In the name of enlivening the economy, some criminals collude with persons inside and outside the province to engage in smuggling and marketing of smuggled goods, corruption, bribery, speculation, fraud and stealing of state and collective property. Their activities are rampant and methods tricky, causing grave losses to the state. This is far more serious than in 1952, when the movement against the three evils was carried out. We must never take it lightly or underrate it. The view that since our province is an island and has little contact with foreign countries, there are few economic crimes is completely wrong. In studying and implementing the decision of the CCP Central Committee, party committees at all levels should discuss and analyze in light of the realities of their units and localities the characteristics and patterns of criminal activities in the economic field and discover loopholes in economic work so as to remain sober-minded, mete out measures for correctly implementing the decision and relentlessly carry out the struggle to the end.

LIAONING HOLDS MEETING ON PRESS REFORMS

[Text] According to our sources, the provincial CCP committee's propaganda department convened an experience-exchange meeting on press reforms on 8 April in Shenyang.

At the meeting, (Liu Heijia), editor in chief of Shenyang RIBAO, introduced methods and experience in boldly instituting reforms, blazing new trails, actively exploring ways for proletarian press reforms and promoting the efficacy of newspapers under the new situation. (Liu Mingzhou), deputy editor in chief, and (Zhang Yong), member of the editorial board and director of the general editorial office, introduced their experience in bringing into play the militant functions of party papers and strengthening the ranks of journalistic workers.

Liu Yiyun, standing committee member of the provincial CCP committee and director of the propaganda department, and Deputy Director (Zhou Wizhi) attended the meeting and spoke. They fully endorsed the orientation Shenyang RIBAO took in instituting press reforms and commended it as a fresh, lively newspaper with distinctive features which has effectively popularized the four basic principles and the party's line, principles and policies.

Comrade Liu Yiyun said: In a great historical transitional period newspapers must adopt a new approach, have a new starting point, take on a new appearance and gain new experience. Magazines such as XIN QINGNIAN and XIANGJIANG PINGLUN published during the 4 May period were examples of progressive periodicals in that great transitional period which started something unconventional, bold and forceful and left their impact on a whole generation.

He said: We must combine Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought with actual conditions in running newspapers. A successful newspaper is the result of a good combination. Combining with actual conditions denotes two things: The actual conditions of localities -- we must have a good understanding of the local situation -- and the special features of newspapers. Only by keeping these two things in mind can we achieve something unconventional.

Nearly 200 comrades from provincial, prefectural, county and commune press, broadcast and publishing units attended the meeting.

LIAONING REPORTS INCREASED INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT

[Text] Shenyang, April 10 (XINHUA) -- Liaoning Province, China's biggest heavy industrial center, reported substantial increases in both heavy and light industrial output value in the first quarter of this year. According to the Liaoning Provincial Industrial Department, the province's heavy industrial enterprises yielded a total of 7,167 million yuan in output value in the first quarter of this year, up 5.6 percent compared with the same period of last year. Liaoning's light industrial output value was 3,958 million yuan, representing a 13.1 percent increase over the like period of 1981.

Over the years, the province put one-sided emphasis on heavy industry and only three percent of the rolled steel needed by the province for industrial expansion every year went to light industry. In line with the policies for readjustment, the province now puts greater emphasis on light industry to change the imbalance. The province last year trimmed the production of heavy industrial products not needed at the present. Last year the province's heavy industrial output value went down while light industrial production rose.

Due to a series of readjustments made, the province's heavy industrial production has been on the rise again. The province has turned out more steel sheets, wires and strips for the manufacture of light industrial goods. Tens of thousands of machines were made by the province's machine building plants in the last two years to equip light industry factories. Some of the heavy industrial plants have switched over to the production of durable consumer goods such as bicycles and sewing machines. The readjustment has enabled the province's industry to achieve better economic results.

The province's industrial enterprises turned over to the state profits totalling 922 million yuan in the first three months of this year, 6.5 percent more than in the same 1981 period.

GANSU MILITARY DISTRICT EXPOSES ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK190357 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Text] According to our sources, on the afternoon of 17 April, the Gansu Provincial Military District sponsored a rally at which (Li Weiji), deputy political commissar of the provincial military district, on behalf of the party committee of the military district, explained and publicized the decision adopted by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at economic crimes and offered suggestions on implementing this decision.

In his speech, Comrade (Li Weiji) reviewed the initial achievements scored by the provincial military district in dealing blows to serious economic crimes. He noted: According to the investigation data on exposed cases compiled by provincial military district, crimes in the economic field are serious. We are very shocked at some cases. It is completely out of keeping with the fact that some comrades contended at the beginning of the drive that tasks to deal blows at economic crimes should be taken up by local civilian organs and are not connected with PLA units and that tasks in this regard should be taken up by personnel in charge of financial and administrative work and not by other personnel. Some have even contended that tasks in this regard should be taken up by southeast coastal provinces and are not connected with Qinghai Province, covered by mountains which cause great transportation difficulties.

However, facts have shown that some economic crimes are directly connected with our province and have involved not only personnel in charge of financial and administrative work, but also other personnel; not only ordinary staff, but also leading cadres.

Comrade (Li Weiji) urged the broad masses of party members, members and revolutionary fighters among the PLA units under the provincial military district, particularly leading cadres at all levels, to earnestly study the central authorities' decision and to take the lead in implementing the decision. The party committees at all levels should enhance their leadership over the work, do their work strictly according to the decision and severely deal blows at serious economic crimes by distinguishing between cases that are different in severity and by upholding policies so as to continuously carry out the struggle against economic crimes in a thoroughgoing way.

In his speech, Comrade (Li Weiji) emphatically gave a warning to those who have committed economic crimes and have not yet confessed to realize their errors, to mend their ways and to surrender to the authorities before May Day this year in order to receive lenient treatment as soon as possible.

SHANXI'S MA WENRUI DISCUSSES ECONOMIC CRIME

[Text] The Shaanxi Provincial CCP Committee recently held a work conference on hitting at criminal activities in the economic field. Ma Wenrui, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, spoke at the meeting in the afternoon of 17 April. In his speech, Ma Wenrui stressed that CCP committees at all levels must strengthen leadership so as to carry out the struggle according to the instructions of the central authorities in a smooth manner. He said: Since the central authorities issued the decision to combat serious criminal activities in the economic field, the standing committee of the provincial CCP committee has held two meetings to discuss and study the issue. In the future, more discussion will be held in accordance with the actual situation. The decision of the central authorities has explicitly pointed out the nature, policies and methods of this struggle; it is the program for carrying out the struggle. The CCP committees at all levels must seriously study the decision of the central authorities; they must overcome their muddled and erroneous thinking by studying it and adopt effective measures to organize and lead the struggle against criminal activities in the economic field.

On strengthening party leadership, Ma Wenrui pointed out: The provincial CCP committee has decided to assign the standing committee of the provincial CCP committee and the leading cadres at departmental and bureau levels to directly investigate a number of major cases. All prefectural, municipal and county CCP committees should also assign capable leading cadres to carry out the struggle. We should strengthen and assist work in localities that are weak in handling cases. The CCP committees should assume unified leadership in combating serious criminal activities in the economic field, and the discipline inspection committees at all levels are the executive bodies of the struggle. Judicial and public security organs must work in close coordination and bring their role into full play. Propaganda departments must adopt various measures to launch ideological and political education for the party members, cadres and the masses in a lively and concrete manner by means of typical cases, so as to enhance their political consciousness and their ability to resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas and encourage party members and cadres and the masses to resolutely struggle against unhealthy trends and evil practices and criminal offenses.

Ma Wenrui emphatically pointed out: The CCP committees at all levels must pay special attention to the central decision's stipulations on the key targets and on drawing clear lines of demarcation in policy when they lead the struggle against criminal activities. Under no circumstances should they obtain confessions by force and give them credence. We must not readily believe statements made under interrogation. We must distinguish the nature of different cases in accordance with the facts and promptly handle the cases in accordance with party discipline, administrative discipline and state law.

Ma Wenrui pointed out: We must pay attention to handling the relationship between combating serious criminal activities in the economic field and carrying out industrial and agricultural production. They must be integrated with each other and not set against each other. The important aim of combating serious criminal activities in the economic field is to get rid of obstacles so as to speed up the development of industrial and agricultural production and the pace of building modernization. Therefore, in the course of the struggle, we must guard against negative factors that might affect industrial and agricultural production. We must also pay attention to the relationship between combating criminal activities in the economic field and investigating and correcting unhealthy trends in recruiting labor, cadres and students, changing agricultural to nonagricultural household registration, changing the status of rural youths to educated youths sent to the rural areas from the towns, and changing the status of temporary and contract workers and teachers in schools run by local people to permanent state workers, using one's power to build private houses and so on. Although these are problems of different nature and the solutions to them are different, in the sense of correcting party work style and social mood, their aims are the same. At present, we must give priority to combating severe criminal activities in the economic field. In handling these cases, we must distinguish the primary from the secondary cases and make overall suitable arrangements so that the two drives will coordinate with and promote each other.

The provincial CCP committee work conference on striking at criminal activities in the economic field was held from 12 to 17 April. Comrade Yan Kelun, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, who presided at the conference, gave his opinions on making further arrangements for combating criminal activities in the economic field at the end of the meeting. He demanded that all localities and provincial departments grasp major cases and concentrate efforts in April, May and June on tackling major and severe cases, steeling the cadres and educating the masses, so as to gain experience and get things going.

Comrade Yan Kelun pointed out: In hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field, it is necessary to investigate the nature of the crimes committed and also the question of responsibility of the cadres concerned, especially leading cadres. We must by all means avoid simply considering something as it stands and handling a case simply as it appears. We must not view major cases purely as criminal cases, but as a major means of correcting the party work style. As regards leading cadres who act as protectors for criminal elements and activities, and leading cadres who do serious economic sabotage, we must investigate the responsibility, no matter who is involved.

We must carry out rectification, under leadership and with plans, of units that are gravely impure. Certain units will have to be reorganized. At the same time we must resolutely implement the policy of leniency for those who make a clean breast of things and severity for those who resist, and urge the criminal elements to take the path of giving themselves up and making a clean breast of things.

(Luo Wenzhi), secretary of the provincial CCP committee's provisional discipline inspection committee, spoke at the conference on the situation in correcting unhealthy trends in "three enrollments, three changes, and one dwelling," and gave his views. Attending the conference were responsible comrades of all prefectural and municipal CCP committees and their discipline inspection committees, and of provincial departments concerned.

WANG ENMAO INSPECTS FOUR XINJIANG COUNTIES

[Summary] "Regional CCP committee First Secretary Wang Enmao recently made an inspection tour of out-of-the-way oases in the depths of the Gobi. He called on the cadres and masses of various nationalities to develop the spirit of self-reliance and arduous struggle and try every possible means to solve the water problem, to plant more trees and to grow more grass to serve as wind and sand shields [words indistinct]."

In early April Wang Enmao visited the four counties of Yuli, Ruoqiang, Qiemo and Minfeng and collected a lot of firsthand material. He told the cadres and masses in these localities that it is first of all necessary to solve the water problem by fully utilizing the existing water resources and harnessing the rivers in the region one by one. It is necessary to plant more trees and vigorously develop afforestation. Afforestation in these localities has developed to some extent since liberation but this is not quite sufficient. Too few trees have been planted, so vigorous efforts should be made to develop afforestation. It is necessary to grow more grass for it should not only serve as wind and sand shields but also can be used as fodder or compost to improve the soil.

He said: "If we succeed in solving the water problem, planting more trees and growing more grass, our oases will be expanded, the production of agriculture and animal husbandry will register greater development and the cause of other economic construction will also forge rapidly ahead."

XINHUA REPORTS ON XINJIANG COAL INDUSTRY

[Text] Urumqi, April 15 (XINHUA) -- Output value of coal in the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region reached 250 million yuan in 1981, making up 6.1 percent of the region's gross industrial output value. Xinjiang has abundant coal deposits. Sixtythree counties in the region have good quality, easily extracted coal seams.

Since New China was founded in 1949, Xinjiang has, with government aid of more than 300 million yuan, built seven large and medium mines each with an annual production capacity of 300,000 tons; 22 small pits each with production capacity of 90,000 tons and 12 shaft mines each with a capacity of 50,000 tons. Two big coal producing centers have been built in Urumqi and Hami. The Hami opencut coal mine, with an annual production capacity of 1.5 million tons, has mechanized whole production process. By 1981, the region's coal output had increased 64 times the 1949 output.

The region now has 80,000 coal miners and an 1,800-member geological prospecting force. A designing institute for coal mines, a research institute and coal mining schools have also been established. In the first three months of this year, Xinjiang supported its neighboring provinces of Qinghai and Gansu by shipping them 440,000 tons of coal, 60 percent more than the same period of 1980.

CHINA POST VIEWS REAGAN'S ARMS SALES DECISION

[Editorial: "President Reagan's Timely Decision"]

[Text] President Ronald Reagan's decision to request the U.S. Congress to approve U.S. $60 million sales of military spare parts to the Republic of China despite Peiping's objections is a timely decision.

In so doing, the U.S. President is implementing the Taiwan Relations Act in letter and spirit and at the same time fulfilling his campaign promises regarding supporting the Republic of China and its 18 million people.

According to the UPI dispatch from Washington, Tuesday, the formal presentation of the controversial package may be part of a closed-door briefing given to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge. The U.S. administration has already withheld the sale of sophisticated FX planes to the Republic of China. But the Peiping regime kept up its nuisance campaign of objections to any sales or putting a time limit of future sales.

Whether this batch of sales represents the result of understanding between Washington and Peiping of limiting sales to spare parts only is not clear. But the fact that the Peiping regime's HSINHUA NEWS AGENCY in its commentary on April 12 blasted the Chicago TRIBUNE, the WALL STREET JOURNAL and the New York TIMES for supporting arms sales to the Republic of China shows that no such understanding was reached.

It is hoped that the United States would follow this decision with more arms sales to the Republic of China, which needs such purchases to bolster its defense capabilities to counter the Peiping regime's threat to conquer Taiwan by force. It should realize that the Chinese communist peace offensive recently launched by Yeh Chien-ying is as phoney as its profession of peaceful settlement of the "Taiwan question." The only way to ensure peace in the Taiwan Strait and the western Pacific is by strengthening the ROC's defense capabilities.

The American people should support President Reagan's decision on the arms sales issue to the Republic of China and encourage him to continue along this line and not to soften his stand as a result of Peiping's agitations, which will surely be made again and again. They should also expose Peiping sinister lobby activities in the United States aimed at seizing Taiwan by diplomatic means and with the help of the United States. Such a sinister plot must be exposed and defeated by the righteous American people.

CHINA POST LAUDS EXPANDING ARMS SUPPLY SOURCES

[Editorial: "Diversifying Our Arms Supply Sources"]

[Text] The Executive Yuan's decision to seek arms supplies from all advanced countries is a laudable one. The decision was revealed in a written report submitted to the Legislative Yuan Monday [12 April].

The news report indicated that in our search for new arms and planes, the French Mirage planes might be one of our targets. At the same time, we will strengthen our capacity for producing our own weapons and missiles. In this respect, our production of the Ching Feng and Hsiung Feng missiles in addition to other weapons represents a step in the right direction.

Recent international developments are highly in favor of expanded substantial relations with all advanced nations. They will pave the way for launching such a program of arms procurement in the Free World's market. We should indeed exert our efforts in this regard in a positive manner without delay.

In Europe, it may be noted, the holding of the first World Anti-Communist League [WACL] council for Europe's regional conference from February 5 to 6 at Brussels, Belgium represented a breakthrough of great importance. Thirty delegates from 12 countries, including Belgium, Norway, Denmark, United Kingdom, Sweden, Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece and Switzerland, and several international organizations and observers attended the epoch-making conference. Dr Ku Cheng-kang, honorary chairman of the World Anti-Communist League, attended the conference and delivered a keynote address. The conference supported President Chiang Ching-kuo's valiant leadership and the ROC's stand. Those delegates can serve as our goodwill envoys in that vital region. They can help our representatives in Europe to meet our needs in arms sales.

The WACL has indeed become an effective instrument of people-to-people diplomacy.

PAPER CALLS FOR DIVERSIFYING ARMS IMPORTS

OW191432 Taipei CHUNG YANG JIH PAO in Chinese 14 Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Two Ways of Reinforcing Weaponry and Equipment"]

[Text] In a written reply to an interpellation from three legislators, the Executive Yuan 12 April stated that the government is making positive efforts to increase our capability in arms production and seeking to acquire arms from various advanced nations so as to open up more sources of weaponry. Efforts are also being made to study how the procurement of military equipment can be diversified.

The first goal of building up our national defense is to provide for the security of this bastion for reconstruction and then to create opportunities for the recovery of the mainland. Presently, the principle for reorganization is to work for establishing an independent national defense system based on the needs of the political strategy of "attaching equal importance to defense and offense," while giving consideration to the two major tasks of army building and war preparations. Furthermore, stress should be laid on ensuring our air defense capability, command of the sea and capability of countering landing operations as well as on maintaining military superiority over the Taiwan Straits. In accordance with this established policy and in consideration of the current situation, our most urgent task is to improve and have an ample supply of arms and equipment, to strengthen the combat capability of our armed forces and to guard against an enemy's rash actions.

Modern weapons have become more sophisticated with each passing day. In order to keep up with the times and meet our own needs, we must constantly replenish and renew our weaponry. The most effective way is to study arms production while continuing to procure arms from abroad. By coordinating arms production at home with arms procurement from abroad, we can promote self-sufficiency and acquire a sufficient supply of arms to meet our needs at the time.

With the goal of attaining self-sufficiency in mind, the government has been working to enlist the services of experts and to expand the equipment and facilities needed for arms production so as to develop science, technology and industry related to national defense and to increase our own capability in arms production. A solid foundation has been established for the production of advanced weapons and high-performance airplanes.

Arms production should be promoted in the future through development of research work and cooperation with foreign countries so that we will be able to produce more items at home and attain the goal of self-sufficiency step by step.

It is of equal importance to open up more sources of new weapons and diversify arms procurement. As science and technology advance by leaps and bounds, various sophisticated arms are brought forth while the old are eliminated. The development of arms production has become more and more costly.

Mr Chiang Pai-li, the late military strategist, held that the principle for self-sufficiency in weaponry is "not to fall behind in invention but strive to be the first in production." In his view, we must be able to stop the enemy without spending too many funds on arms production. With our nation's current level of science and technology, we are still incapable of producing most sophisticated weapons and the government does not have sufficient funds to support arms production. Therefore, it certainly is economical and effective to procure what we need from foreign countries. Since the United States refuses to sell high-performance fighter planes to us, we are in greater need of acquiring weapons from various advanced countries so as to have more sources for sophisticated weapons.

In its written reply to the interpellation, the Executive Yuan explained that equal attention would be paid to the two measures mentioned above and stressed that efforts would be made to open up sources of arms supply in Western Europe. Efforts would also be made to acquire all those weapons that will contribute to the strengthening of the combat capability of our armed forces. Among them is the Mirage fighter produced in France. At the same time, continued efforts would be made to urge the U.S. Government to sell us practical and effective defensive weapons to ensure the country's national defense.

The most fundamental question lies in the development of science and technology related to national defense which will allow us to strengthen our capability in the production of sophisticated weapons. Various types of domestically-produced missiles and rockets, including Hsiung Feng and Ching Feng missiles, cannons with increased range [tseng cheng pao 1073 4453 4276] and vehicles equipped with electronic communications devices have already been put on public display. Other arms including tanks, vessels and sophisticated weapons, which are still under development, will soon be put into production. Hereafter, it is of greater need that experts, both at home and abroad, participate in fulfilling this task and that all industrial enterprises run by the military, the government or civilians, cooperate and speed up arms production by increasing the achievements made at individual enterprises.

To ensure the command of both our sea and air, we need to procure high performance fighter planes. However, under the complicated and contradictory international situation at present, it is necessary not only to use every possible measure to seek proper sources but also to obtain a continuous supply guarantee. The Executive Yuan pointed out that, first of all, we must take into consideration the supply of spare parts and accessories needed for maintenance and repair work. Only if the sellers guarantee the supply for a prolonged period of time can we sign the procurement agreement. Without this guarantee, the procurement may result in serious consequences. Therefore, the government will meticulously appraise this issue and make efforts to diversify arms procurement to avoid overreliance on one sector's supply, as well as to maintain our flexible position and to take initiative in arms procurement.

Whether producing arms at home or procuring sophisticated weapons from abroad, we need an enormous amount of funds. The government must appropriate more funds for this purpose in its budgets while contributions from the people will be urged. In the central government budgets for fiscal year 1983, more than 144.2 billion dollars in new Taiwan currency has been appropriated for national defense and foreign affairs, accounting for 42.5 percent of the total expenditures. In expounding this budget plan, President Sun of the Executive Yuan stated that if any breakthrough is made in the procurement of military equipment, special budget plans will be worked with perseverance to attain this goal and that the government will also make efforts to appropriate as much money as possible to support arms procurement.

In the past few years, nationwide campaigns for contributions to the "patriotic and self-reliant" funds have been launched by personages from all walks of life. The contributions amounted to several billion dollars in new Taiwan currency and a large portion of the contributions are designated for procuring arms to strengthen national defense. The funds have been used in procuring planes and vessels, and an air force "self-reliant" squadron, a navy speedboat squadron and a tank brigade have already been organized separately with the funds contributed. This indicates that the people are of the same mind in their support for building national defense. Hereafter, it will be necessary to call on the people to make further contributions to coordinate with the government's determination to carry out this policy decision. This will certainly make our arms increasingly superior and our combat capability increasingly substantial. Thereby, an independent national defense system will be established and the tasks of ensuring self-defense and overcoming enemies will be fulfilled.

WORLD WOMEN'S SOFTBALL EVENT DRAWS 18 COUNTRIES

[Text] (Li Cheng-i), vice president for international relations of the Chinese Taipei Softball Association, has announced that Don Porter, secretary general of the International Softball Federation, has informed him that 18 countries, including the Republic of China, have completed registration procedures for the fifth world women's softball championship to be held in Taipei 2-11 July.

(Li) is on his way to the United States for business and is expected to meet with Porter Monday evening to discuss the details of which countries have registered.

The 18 countries on the list Porter forwarded to the Chinese Taipei Softball Federation are the Republic of China, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Belgium, Sweden, Indonesia, Norway, Argentina, the Bahamas, Bermuda, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Venezuela.

(Li) emphasized that countries such as Singapore and New Guinea, which have expressed their firm intention to come, have not appeared on Porter's list yet, since their registration materials have not reached the International Softball Federation headquarters in Oklahoma City. In addition, despite earlier reports, the Japanese have said they want to attend the championship in Taipei. It raises an interesting question as to why they have changed their mind after supporting the Chinese communists in the political controversies which have troubled the planning for the tournament. The Japanese had indicated that the softball tournament site should be changed unless sports officials in the Republic of China make certain promises on the protocol to be used at the opening and closing ceremony. Their recent change in mind was also accompanied by a statement saying the Japanese team would return home if the flag of the Republic of China was used at the championship. Local sports officials have expressed indifference whether the Japanese attend it or not and indicated that the change in heart may merely be an attempt to play a disruptive role at the tournament by pulling out their team once the event has started.

PRESS VIEW SINO-U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

HSIN WAN PAO Column

["New Talk" column: "Hot and Cold Between China, the United States and the Soviet Union"]

[Text] Brezhnev is now confined to bed in the Kremlin. In the latter half of last month, he delivered a speech in Tashkent, making overtures to Beijing (although there was no lack of the old tune of attacking China in his speech). He fell ill once he returned to Moscow. Of course, this was not because Beijing got him angry. A spokesman of the Chinese Foreign Ministry used three phrases to answer his speech -- pay attention to what he has said, refuse his attack and always see how he actually behaves. We should say that the reactions were not stern, although we should not judge things by speech and countenance. The reactions can be described as moderate.

More than 20 days have passed since the speech. The day before yesterday, Ceausescu, secretary general of the Romanian Communist Party, expressed his views that China and the Soviet Union should hold direct talks on the basis of equality, mutual respect and territorial integrity. Such a view is more "direct" than the reactions made by Beijing several days ago. With regard to direct talks, Beijing only said that it would see, but refused to reveal what practical actions it would take.

Actually, on the same day that Ceausescu expressed the above views in Beijing, the Sino-Soviet goods exchange agreement for 1982 was signed in Beijing. Chen Muhua, Chinese vice premier and minister of foreign trade and economic relations with foreign countries, attended the signing ceremony. The trade volume will be increased by 45 percent, valued at 600 million Swiss francs or 1.8 billion Hong kong dollars. This will be the highest trade volume of the past 15 years (since 1967). It has also been decided to reopen border trade.

Judging by trade, it seems that China and the Soviet Union have improved their relations a bit.

However, these are the normal affairs of two countries that have established diplomatic relations. Beijing has never said that it will not maintain normal diplomatic relations with Moscow. Furthermore, it has never said that Sino-Soviet relations will retrogress or be downgraded. The representatives of both sides in each other's capitals are officials of ambassadorial level.

Although their relations have not retrogressed or been downgraded, they are actually very cold. But it seems that nobody has said that they are as cold as frost.

At present, nobody has said either that Sino-Soviet relations are no longer cold or too cold.

People talk about the possibility of retrogression and downgrading of Sino-U.S. relations which have recently become cold because of the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. Notwithstanding that, these relations are much hotter than Sino-Soviet relations.

Brezhnev's purpose in delivering his speech in Tashkent was to take advantage of the slightly cold Sino-U.S. relations in the interests of the Soviet Union.

The situation is complicated and delicate.

China is a weak nation compared with the United States and the Soviet Union. However, it is a big nation, which occupies a decisive position, and nobody can bully it easily.

WEN WEI PO Article

[Article by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311]: "News on China and the United States and China and the Soviet Union"]

[Text] The recent developments in Sino-U.S. and in Sino-Soviet relations have attracted people's attention. People are now showing concern for the negative development of the former and the positive development of the latter.

It is the United States and the Soviet Union, rather than China, that have caused people to have such concerns.

China's principles and stands toward these two countries have remained unchanged. That is, in international contacts, to adhere to the five principles of peaceful coexistence, especially to the principle of mutual respect for territorial integrity and sovereignty and the principle of noninterference in each other's internal affairs.

In handling Sino-U.S. relations at present, China's stand is opposing the United States for creating "two Chinas." The dispute is on the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, on the U.S. regarding Taiwan as a political entity, a "small China," and encouraging it to reject peaceful reunification, to be independent and to become an "unsinkable aircraft carrier" of the United States. In other words, this is a practice of U.S. hegemonism in China.

Therefore, China has risen in opposition to U.S. hegemonism and creation of "two Chinas," to its violation of China's territorial sovereignty.

The recent development is the Reagan administration has asked for congressional approval to sell $60 million worth of military spare parts to Taiwan and China has lodged a strong protest with the United States for violating its territorial sovereignty. But since the United States has explained that this was a decision made before the Cancun conference held last year, that is, before Reagan's meeting with Premier Zhao Ziyang, that only spare parts and not weapons would be involved in the sales, that is, no new arms would be provided, and that it would not provide Taiwan with new weapons during its talks with China, China, besides lodging the protest, would also like to wait and see whether the United States keeps its word. It warned the United States that if it fails to keep its word, it will be responsible for all serious consequences occurring thereafter.

U.S. correspondents hold that the assurance is a great concession made by the United States, and that is why China has not taken drastic measures to downgrade relations.

In the sense that the dispute should be settled through negotiations, it might be right to consider the assurance as a concession. But when the cause of the dispute is examined, the assurance given by the United States that it would not go on acting recklessly can, on no account, be regarded as a concession. This is because that the United States should not have done such a thing which violates China's sovereignty. This assurance is but to suspend this act of violation.

Thus, the dispute between China and the United States has not yet been fundamentally settled, and the possibility of a reverasl of relations still exists.

As to Sino-Soviet relations, what attracted people's attention is Soviet President Brezhnev's Tashkent remarks. In these remarks, in addition to his usual attacks on China's foreign policy, he said something which had not been said for a long time. That is, the Soviet Union has always recognized China's sovereignty over Taiwan and opposed the concept of "two Chinas," and it is ready to settle the dispute between the two countries through negotiations.

The Soviet Union has thus made use of the United States' creation of "two Chinas" to curry favor with China. To this, China has made a three-point response: First, China took note of the Soviet leader's remarks. Second, China has rejected his attacks. And third, China will see how the USSR behaves.

Having taken note of the remarks means China has not only heard, but also paid attention to them. Rejecting the attacks means China will adhere to its policies. To see how the USSR behaves means to see what actions it will take in the future.

This three-point response is also an example of combining principle with flexibility. What affords much food for thought is that instead of responding with lengthy articles, the remarks were treated with indifference; instead of being answered back sarcastically, the Soviet attacks were only rejected firmly and calmly. Besides, the Soviet proposal was neither accepted hastily nor refused rashly. China will just wait and see how the USSR behaves along the Sino-Soviet border before making any decision.

When talking with the Chinese party and government leaders these days on Sino-Soviet relations, Romanian President Ceausescu suggested that the two sides settle the dispute through direct negotiations. In addition he said that this would not only be good for both countries but also for world peace.

These remarks can be read in full in China's official press. In the past, such remarks were usually reported in a few lines. So, this seems to imply some new turn of events. At a press conference held in Beijing, President Ceausescu even said that there are good prospects for Sino-Soviet relations. In this visit, he may have brought some messages to and from China. This affords much food for thought.

OFFICIALS RECEIVE FORMER WORLD BANK PRESIDENT

Meeting With Gu Mu

[Text] Beijing, April 19 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Gu Mu said here today relations between China and the World Bank have progressed in the past two years. Speaking at a meeting with Robert S. McNamara, former president of the World Bank, Vice-Premier Gu Mu said China will develop its national economy mainly by relying on its own efforts, but it also needs foreign capital on relatively favorable terms. "China will keep contact with the World Bank and study the possibilities of their cooperation in various fields," he said. The vice-premier thanked McNamara for his contributions to promoting the relationship between China and the World Bank during his tenure as president of the bank.

McNamara said he appreciated China's achievements in developing its economy in the past few years. He said he hoped the links between China and the World Bank would continue to grow. He said the loans and other forms of aid offered by developed countries to developing countries are not only conducive to the international stability, but also beneficial to developed countries.

Later, Vice-Premier Gu Mu gave a dinner in honor of McNamara. Chinese Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian was also present.

The former World Bank president arrived here yesterday at the invitation of Minister Wang.

Meeting with Zhao

[Text] Beijing, April 20 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Robert S. McNamara, former president of the World Bank, this afternoon in Zhongnanhai, and exchanged views with him on China's economic situaton and world economic problems.

McNamara said that he appreciated very much Premier Zhao's report on government work at the Fourth Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress. "It's not so easy for a government to openly admit its shortcomings. This requires courage," he said. In the report Premier Zhao made frank comments about the past, looked forward to the future and put forward the 10-point principles, McNamara said.

Premier Zhao said, "We must tell the people the truth and be responsible to them." The premier also solicited McNamara's views about the prospects of China's economic development in the 1990's mentioned in the report.

McNamara said that the planning for China's economic development is very realistic. "China will surely [word indistinct] successes," he said. China's achievements in satisfying the basic needs of the people have left a deep impression on him, McNamara added.

Premier Zhao thanked McNamara for his contributions to promoting relations of cooperation between China and the World Bank during his tenure of office. "China's seat in the World Bank was restored when McNamara was the president of the bank," he said.

McNamara said when he was president of the World Bank he held that without the participation of China in the bank it should not be called the World Bank.

Premier Zhao also discussed with McNamara ways for China to use foreign capital. The premier added: "China is willing to develop cooperation with the World Bank."

Chinese Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian was present at the meeting.

U.S. DEBATES 'FIRST-USE' OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

HK201206 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Apr 82 p 7

[Report: "U.S. Internal Debate on Not Being the First To Use Nuclear Weapons"]

[Text] Recently, the spring issue of the U.S. FOREIGN AFFAIRS QUARTERLY carried an article by four former high-ranking officials of the United States. In this article, these former officials called for a change in the present U.S. nuclear strategy and upheld that the United States should renounce "first-use" of nuclear weapons.

These four former government officials are McGeorge Bundy, former White House national security adviser; Robert S. McNamara, former secretary of defense; George F. Kennan, former ambassador to the Soviet Union; and Gerard C. Smith, former chief delegate to the U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. Their proposal has been rejected and criticized by the U.S. Government and by French and West German personalities and has provoked a strong response and a new controversy in the United States.

For a long time, the United States and NATO have adhered to the nuclear strategy of "being the first to use nuclear weapons to counter an aggression against Europe," which is called the strategy of flexible response. In the article by Bundy and others, it was for the first time proposed that "it is time now to restudy" this nuclear strategy and see whether it is a wise one. They are of the opinion that "both the United States and the Soviet Union have produced an amazingly large number of various kinds of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems." Under such circumstances, "the mere use of nuclear weapons in Europe, whether by the alliance or by the Soviet Union against the alliance, will bring about the escalation of the war and result in the tremendous and unavoidable risk of a full-scale nuclear war" that no one will be able to win. Therefore, they put forward the strategy of "refraining from being the first to use nuclear weapons."

The article also says that the adoption of the strategy of "refraining from being the first to use nuclear weapons" by no means signifies deserting our European allies nor the unilateral nuclear disarmament on the part of the United States. It is only aimed at freeing the United States from the "pressure" of the obligation of being the first to use nuclear weapons and at getting rid of people's "worries." Some high-ranking U.S. officials have expressed their rejection of the proposal of "refraining from being the first to use nuclear weapons." Alexander M. Haig Jr. criticized this strategy and said that if this strategy is adopted, "it will be impossible for the West to counter Moscow's preponderant conventional forces in Europe." On 13 April, Paul H. Nitze, U.S. chief delegate to the U.S.-Soviet talks on deployment of medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe that have been held in Geneva published an article, in which he refuted, one by one, the arguments for the strategy of "refraining from being the first to use nuclear weapons." He said that such a proposal would destroy the foundation of the deterrent policy of the NATO. He pointed out that the theory of "being the first to use nuclear weapons" was based on the disparity between the forces of the West and the East. Since this disparity continues to exist, "we will run great risks if we abandon the nuclear deterrent strategy which is the backbone of our policy."

In his press interview on 10 April, former Vice President Walter F. Mondale also expressed his objection to Bundy and others' proposal. He pointed out that the writers of the article have given no answer to the question of what we should do if our conventional forces are not strong enough to play a deterrent role. He said, "If we abandon our strategy of flexible response, we will probably give the Soviet Union the impression that it can win the war by launching a conventional attack." Nevertheless, in the United States there are quite a few people who support the proposal of the four former officials.

In Western Europe, a French foreign affairs specialist is of the opinion that this proposal must be treated as "a sign of a pacifist crisis in the Atlantic alliance." A personality of the West German governing party said that he would not agree to any revision of NATO's strategy. (?Mertes), spokesman of the West German opposition parties -- the Christian Democratic Union and the Christian Social Union -- is also of the opinion that this proposal will reduce the deterrent force immeasurably. Because this deterrent force is precisely what the West relies on to prevent a Soviet conventional attack, this proposal will also cause difficulties to the West in its efforts to eliminate the military disparity and maintain the present level of security.

RADIO COMMENTARY VIEWS U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT

[Commentary from "International Current Events" program: "The U.S. Economy as Viewed From the Unemployed"]

[Text] The U.S. unemployment rate for March reached a record high for the 37 years since World War II. On 2 April, the U.S. Department of Labor announced that the March unemployment rate rose to 9 percent, matching the postwar high registered in May 1975 in a period of economic crisis. The number of jobless in March this year was 9.9 million, well above the May 1975 level.

These are merely officially published statistics. The real situation is much more serious, since the statistics do not include the following two categories of people: one is the so-called part-time workers, including those who worked only 1 hour a week. The U.S. official statistics of unemployment do not include these people, numbering as many as 5 million. The other category includes those who have long been unable to find jobs and thus become disappointed and did not register with the government because they could no longer receive the government unemployment subsidy. In issuing the unemployment statistics, the government did not include such disappointed laborers. Jobless people in this category number 1.3 million. Jobless people, partially unemployed people and those who were out of work but did not register as such, total an estimated 17 million.

The serious unemployment problem has evoked strong reaction from the U.S. public. Leaders of labor and industrial workers' associations have made statements criticizing Reagan's economic policy, which has led the nation into a grave economic depression. To more and more ordinary Americans, unemployment has become a horrible threat. In particular, at this time when the problem of economic recession facing the United States is worsening, the Reagan administration has not only failed to make appropriations as relief funds for some of the unemployed, as was the case in previous economic crises, but on the contrary it was slashed, to a great extent, the expenditure budget by reducing the variety of subsidies for jobless workers. This has thrown the numerous jobless workers into a more tragic predicament.

In capitalist countries, the number of jobless workers invariably increases with the advent of an economic crisis. The United States, of course, is no exception. The Reagan administration had hoped that the implementation of its economic renaissance program would have changed the economic recession and cut the unemployment rate to less than 7 percent in 1981. Nonetheless, a year has passed, and the unemployment rate has risen to 9 percent. Why has it been impossible to cut the unemployment rate? There are complicated reasons for this, but the chief one is that the Reagan administration has put into effect a policy of tightening the money supply in order to control currency inflation. To this end, bank interest rates have been raised. When there is a high interest rate, enterprises borrowing money from the bank have to pay higher interest. Accordingly, less money has been borrowed from banks for the purpose of setting up new enterprises or expanding existing ones. When small and medium enterprises have insufficient funds to operate, there are naturally fewer job opportunities for workers.

Difficulties, due to inadequate operating funds, have forced more and more enterprises into bankruptcy and pushed a large number of workers out of work. In addition, high interest rates have caused harmful effects on the construction, automotive and steel industries. Most people are unwilling to use high-interest bank loans to buy houses or cars, resulting in a slump in the construction industry and a slack car market. This has, in turn, adversely affected the market for steel. Because of less work in these industries, large numbers of workers have been dismissed.

The past few years have seen the merging of big enterprises in the United States. While previously it was not uncommon for big fish to eat up small fish in that country, now big fish have begun to eat up big fish as well. For example, the biggest American chemical company has spent $7.4 billion to incorporate the largest petroleum company. Because monopoly capitalists have spent large sums in taking over other companies rather than in establishing new enterprises, workers have experienced difficulty in finding new jobs.

In formulating the economic renaissance program, Reagan had hoped that the reduction of government tax on enterprises would enable entrepreneurs to invest more money in expanding production. However, because entrepreneurs are not optimistic about the prospects for the U.S. economy, only a few of them have invested in establishing new enterprises. This state of affairs has not provided the unemployed workers with new job opportunities as intended. Increases in the number of jobless workers have inevitably reduced purchasing power, causing large stockpiles. With large quantities of commodities overstocked, factories have had to reduce production and let more workers go. This has resulted in a vicious circle.

Furthermore, the increased number of unemployed has become a heavy burden on the U.S. Government, causing an adverse effect on the nation's finances. The government cannot levy income tax from jobless workers; on the contrary, it has to give them unemployment subsidies and pay out in other ways. According to Reagan, when the unemployment rate grows 1 percent, the U.S. Government has to suffer a loss of $25 billion because of the reduced revenue and increased expenditure. The large loss adds to the government's financial deficit and aggravates the problem of currency inflation. Obviously, if the U.S. economy does not improve, it is impossible to reduce the number of unemployed.

Of late, people in the United States have been discussing Reagan's budget for fiscal 1983. A poll, jointly sponsored by American journalist organizations, reveals that 62 percent of the people favor a drastic revision of Reagan's budget. This poll also shows that Americans are pessimistic about the future of their economy, and that they do not agree with the tax reduction and the cut in social welfare spending.

According to the U.S. press, President Reagan has begun a series of 5-minute broadcasts each Saturday evening when there is the largest audience -- such speeches starting on 3 April, to last 10 weeks. He is doing this because he knows that his prestige is declining and that it is necessary to speak directly to the American people in a bid to gain their support. In his first broadcast on the evening of 3 April, he admitted that the U.S. economy is in a serious recession and that the unemployment rate has climbed to 9 percent. However, he said, there is no quick, effective way to deal with the current economic recession. He asked the American people to give him some time to realize the goal of his economic program.

As a matter of fact, Americans have their own views on Reagan's economic renaissance program. Some have long held that the program is aimed at reducing taxes on the rich while cutting spending for social welfare, which affects the livelihood of the poor. It can be envisaged that if the serious unemployment problem remains unresolved for a long time, the broad masses of workers will become increasingly resentful. The serious unemployment problem has not only adversely affected the U.S. economy, but has also added to political turbulence and social unrest. Unemployment is an impending problem to be resolved in the United States. With the current economic recession, however, it is a truly unbearable headache for Reagan to maintain a high interest rate to control currency inflation and, at the same time, to increase job opportunities for the large number of unemployed workers.

PLA VETERAN OF ANTI-U.S. WAR IN SRV INTERVIEWED

[Feature: "The Months and Years of Friendship"]

[Text] Dear friends, probably you still remember that more than a decade ago, at a time when the Vietnamese people were making sacrifices and fighting against U.S. imperialist aggression, the Chinese Government and people not only devoted efforts to supporting them, both morally and materially, but also sent their outstanding sons to fight side by side with them. Many Chinese combatants shed their blood and sacrificed their lives in Vietnam to nurture the flower of friendship between the Chinese and Vietnamese peoples.

Recently, we interviewed Comrade Xu Shiqi, cadre of an antiaircraft regiment of the Chinese People's Liberation Army who had participated in Vietnam's resistance against U.S. aggression for national salvation. He recounted his unforgettable experience in fighting alongside the Vietnamese Army and people for 10 months in Vietnam. He said: In February 1966, our antiaircraft regiment was sent to Vietnam to participate in the fight against the American air pirates. We were stationed in a district in Ha Bac Province with the task of defending a railhead. This was a rather big station in northern Vietnam used mainly for onward transportation of Chinese aid goods. Daily trains, filled with weapons, ammunition and food, came from China. Because of overloading, two locomotives had to be used for pulling and one for pushing the cars. Unloaded aid goods piled up like mountains at the railhead. The trains then returned empty to China.

Comrade Xu continued: To prevent damage to the aid goods piled up at the railroad station, goods which the Chinese people had reserved for Vietnam by enduring privation, our antiaircraft regiment had, on many occasions, fought bravely against the American air pirates, who came to strafe the Khac Phuc station. On 5 May 1966, while Chinese engineers were urgently building a side road at the station, American planes suddenly attacked. In the fierce struggle, many Chinese combatants sacrificed their lives. I myself was wounded.

On 16 May, our unit moved to a district in Lang Son Province to protect a bridge and a dam. On 18 May, 22 U.S. F-105 planes strafed this bridge. At that time, I was with the 4th Company. Our company successively shot down two enemy aircraft. However the 3d squad's battle position was hit by a bomb. Everyone in the squad was killed.

At this point Comrade Xu shed tears. After a pause, he continued: I remember there was a combatant in the 3d squad who hailed from Liaodong Province. When he was about to go to Vietnam, his father died, while his mother was seriously ill. He went to Vietnam with deep grief. Arriving in Vietnam, he saw bomb craters everywhere and fallow land. The peasants had to hide in the mountains during daylight and did not dare to go out and till their land until nightfall. He was filled with rage against U.S. imperialism. At the battle in defense of the Khac Phuc railroad station, although wounded, he did not leave his battle position. In the defense of the Ngoai Cau bridge, he fought bravely until his last breath.

At that time, the battle position commander was Huang Dafa, assistant political officer and squad leader. He himself was wounded. His clothes were torn by a bomb blast. His body was covered with blood and mud. However, he continued commanding until his death. The bones of these fallen combatants were left in Vietnam.

Comrade Xu continued with deep emotion: Vietnam's resistance has long ended. That country has become unified. However, the Le Duan clique is openly opposing China, slanderously charging that China helped Vietnam with the aim of controlling it. How angry the souls of the Chinese combatants, who are resting permanently in Vietnam's soil, would be if they knew about this! Comrade Xu went on: However, the Vietnamese people will never forget them and they still have deep affection for the Chinese troops. At Tong Hoa and a number of other areas, the local people had built a cemetery for fallen Chinese combatants and often visited it.

Each time we engaged in a battle in Khac Phuc, Vietnamese people brought us water and leaves to camouflage our antiaircraft guns. On festive days, leading provincial cadres also visited us. At that time, the commander of the 923d Regiment of the Vietnam Air Force at the Khac Phuc airstrip often called on us. Our relations with the Vietnamese antiaircraft units were very good. We reserved new-design antiaircraft guns for them. As for us, we used ordinary ones.

Comrade Xu said: We went home in November 1966. While in Vietnam, we and friendly units shot down or damaged more than 60 U.S. pirate aircraft. I myself was awarded by the Vietnamese Government and Defense Ministry Vietnam's anti-U.S., national salvation medal, a determined-to-win medal and a certificate attesting to my assistance to Vietnam in its anti-U.S. resistance bearing Mr Pham Van Dong's signature. The day we left, the local people came to see us off. They emotionally held our hands and shouted: Long live China and Vietnam! These were words that came from the bottom of the Vietnamese people's hearts.

In conclusion he said: I am confident that the friendship between the Chinese and Vietnamese peoples, built in the long, common struggle, is lasting. The Vietnamese authorities who arrogantly oppose and hate China are unpopular. The days when China and Vietnam will be friends again will certainly come.

VODK REPORTS PRC LEADERS' ANNIVERSARY GREETINGS

BK190939 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Text] On the occasion of the 7th founding anniversary of Democratic Kampuchea, Ye Jianying, chairman of the PRC National People's Congress Standing Committee, and Zhao Ziyang, premier of the PRC State Council, sent a greetings message to Khieu Samphan, chairman of the State Presidium and prime minister of the Democratic Kampuchean Government, and Nuon Chea, chairman of the Kampuchean People's Representative Assembly Standing Committee. The text of this message is as follows:

Respectfully to His Excellency Khieu Samphan, chairman of the State Presidium and prime minister of the Democratic Kampuchean Government, and His Excellency Nuon Chea, chairman of the Kampuchean People's Representative Assembly, Democratic Kampuchea:

On the occasion of the 7th National Day of Democratic Kampuchea, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, we would like to extend our warmest greetings and best wishes to you and, through you, to the Democratic Kampuchean Government and the fraternal Kampuchean people. We would also like to extend our high regards to the Kampuchean people and the valiant, patriotic army.

In the past year, under the leadership of the Democratic Kampuchean Government, the Kampuchean people's struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors progressed another step. With a vigorous combative spirit, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas fought valiantly against the enemy, launched widespread guerrilla activities throughout the country and dealt heavy blows against the Vietnamese aggressors. The situation of this resistance is developing more favorably for the Kampuchean people. The Kampuchean people's just struggle is significant for the defense of their independence, sovereignty and national survival and constitutes a great and important contribution to safeguarding peace and security in the Southeast Asian, Asian and Pacific regions.

By placing national interests above all else, the Democratic Kampuchean Government has held aloft the banner of uniting all patriotic forces to fight against the Vietnamese aggressors, initiated many proposals for talks and discussions with the other Kampuchean patriotic forces and made active efforts to rally all Kampuchean patriotic forces for fighting against the Vietnamese aggressors. The Democratic Kampuchean Government -- which has thoroughly implemented the political program of the Patriotic and Democratic Front of Great National Union of Kampuchea -- has enjoyed greater support and assistance from the Kampuchean people.

As in the past, the Chinese Government and people will resolutely give unswerving support to the Kampuchean people's just struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. We are convinced that the Kampuchean people -- provided they adhere firmly to resistance and unity -- will be able to surmount all obstacles to their advance, finally defeat the Vietnamese aggressors and undoubtedly achieve permanent victory in their war of resistance against the Vietnamese aggressors and for national salvation.

XINHUA SPECIAL ANALYSIS ON FALKLANDS DISPUTE

[News analysis by Ji Mei (special for YANGCHENG WANBAO): "The Malvinas Islands Dispute and U.S. 'Mediation'" -- XINHUA 20 April special article]

[Text] [No dateline given] -- The second round of mediation carried out by U.S. Secretary of State Haig for a solution to the dispute between Argentina and Britian over the Malvinas Islands has entered its 5th day. Despite many long talks between them, U.S. and Argentine officials have so far failed to break the deadlock. War clouds still hang over the South Atlantic, and prospects for a peaceful solution to the Malvinas Islands dispute are unpredictable.

According to disclosures from various sources, the Argentine side cannot accept the new proposal brought by Haig from Washington because the proposal fails to mention the sovereignty of the Malvinas Islands at all. Nor can Argentina accept the forming of a tripartite Argentine-British-U.S. administration in the islands proposed by Haig. The Argentine side reiterated its decision to implement the UN Security Council resolution for both the Argentine and British sides to stop hostile actions and for the Argentine forces to withdraw from the Malvinas Islands, but at the same time repeatedly stressed that its sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands is not negotiable. It is reported that the British Government so far also adheres to the stand that Argentina must withdraw its troops first and then Britain will negotiate.

Britain and Argentina are currently filled with war fever. Since setting sail from Portsmouth, England, on 5 April, the British task force, with the aircraft carrier "Invincible" flagship, has now passed the halfway mark in its voyage, and it is estimated that advanced units will arrive in waters near the Malvinas Islands this week. British submarines, which arrived earlier in the South Atlantic, are still engaged in blockading waters 200 nautical miles around the Malvinas Islands. On the other side, Argentina has mined waters around the Malvinas Islands and continued to airlift troops and supplies to the islands. The country's ground, naval and air forces are on full alert. Argentine artillery units stationed on the Malvinas Islands conducted an exercise with live ammunition the other day. While the two sides continue to face each other with swords drawn and bows bent, they still welcome U.S. "mediation" and have not ruled out the possibility of a peaceful solution to the dispute.

The dispute over the Malvinas Islands continues to be the focus of world attention. Because the Malvinas are key islands on the passage between the South Atlantic and the South Pacific and because the islands are of importance politically, economically and strategically, international public opinion has long held that, considering the close relationship between the security of the South Atlantic and the security of the entire world, the dispute and its development involve not just the interests of Britain and Argentina. Any incident in this region will rattle the nerves of people concerned about security in the South Atlantic. There are indications that, under the circumstances of sharpening global contention between the two superpowers, their antagonistic postures on the Malvinas issue are becoming increasingly obvious: one wants to defend its sphere of security, while the other wants to poke its nose in and take a share. Gen Alfredo Saint Jean, Argentine minister of the interior, said on 14 April that it is necessary to guard against the "danger of internationalization of the conflict" over the Malvinas Islands.

The United States is Britain's ally in NATO; it and Argentina are both signatories to the 1947 Rio de Janeiro treaty, according to which, when one of the signatory states is attacked, the others are obligated to provide assistance. In this dispute between Britain and Argentina, the United States is in an awkward predicament.

It on the one hand hopes to maintain its traditional relations with Britain and safeguard the unity of its NATO allies; on the other hand it does not want to offend Argentina and endanger U.S.-Argentine relations, which have been improving in recent years. As both sides of the dispute are in a highly emotional state, Washington is trying its best to call on the two sides to refrain from resorting to force, and that is understandable. In recent years, the turmoil in Central America and the Caribbean and Soviet and Cuban expansion in this region have already affected vital U.S. interests. Naturally the United States does not want to see confrontation between Britain and Argentina endanger its position and influence in the South Atlantic and provide an opportunity for Soviet infiltration. However, whether or not U.S. "mediation" can be successful depends on whether Washington is really taking an impartial position and putting forward a reasonable and fair solution to the dispute acceptable to both sides.

As far as Moscow is concerned, it will poke its nose in wherever there is trouble. According to reports by Western news agencies, there are now five Soviet ships operating in the South Atlantic. A few days ago, a Soviet "ocean survey ship" was heading toward the Malvinas. In addition, there are about 30 Soviet fishing vessels in Malvinas waters, one of which is suspected of being a spy ship. International public media have noted that the Soviet Union is gathering all kinds of information by satellite, Bear strategic reconnaissance planes and spy ships, tailing and watching the activities of British warships, in an attempt to fish in troubled waters. U.S. President Reagan on 14 April frankly warned the Soviet Union "not to intervene" in the dispute over the Malvinas Islands.

How the situation in the Malvinas Islands will develop remains to be seen. People are waiting to see how Washington actually "mediates" and how Moscow will act. (XINHUA 20 April special article)

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE TO MEET LATE APRIL

OW201330 Hong Kong AFP in English 1314 GMT 20 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 20 Apr (AFP) -- China's parliamentary body, the National People's Congress (NPC), is to hold a Standing Committee meeting -- expected to approve a major government reshuffle -- around the end of the month, NPC Vice Chairman Ulanhu said today. Mr Ulanhu made the statement in a meeting with an Italian parliamentary delegation headed by Oscar Mammi, but Mr Mammi told journalists that the Chinese leader had not specified what would be on the agenda of the meeting. According to divergent reports from several [as received] the two main items for discussion will be a far-reaching government reshuffle in which the number of vice-premiers will be slashed from 13 to two, and the adoption of a draft constitution on which work began in 1980.

The most frequently cited possibles for the two vice-premierships are Wan Li and Yao Yilin, both of whom are considered to be close to strongman Communist Party Vice-Chairman Deng Xiaoping. Both men are currently vice-premiers. Mr Yao, a top economics expert, is also a close associate of China's foremost economic theoretician, Chen Yun.

Diplomats also expect the reshuffle -- the second since the announcement early this year of a massive restructuring of the government -- to affect several ministries including petroleum, currently headed by Kang Shien.

Observers believe the new draft constitution will formally reestablish the post of state president, abolished de facto when its last holder, Liu Shaoqi, was purged in 1969. The restoration of the state presidency is generally held to be behind the major delay in revising the constitution, a task which should have been completed at the last NPC plenary session in December. The delay was probably due to wrangling over who should be the next state president, a post Mr Deng appears to have turned down for personal reasons, observers noted. Mr Deng did say last year, however, that "many people" expected that the post should go to him.

The commission charged with revision of the constitution is currently meeting in Beijing to work out the final draft to be submitted first to the NPC Standing Committee and then, later this year, to an NPC plenary session.

LIAO CHENGZHI ON HEAD OF STATE, SINO-U.S. TIES

OW210028 Tokyo KYODO in English 0012 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 21 (KYODO) -- Chinese strongman party Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping will not assume the post of head of state which will be restored in China's new constitution, a Chinese leader said here Tuesday. In a meeting with Seiichi Katsumata, former chairman of the Japan Socialist Party, Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the Chinese parliament standing committee, confirmed the plan to reinstate the head of state system in the new constitution, whose draft will be submitted to the standing committee shortly. But asked about possible nomination of Deng as head of state, Liao clearly said the party vice chairman will not assume the post. "We also oppose his assumption of the post," Liao was quoted as telling Katsumata. "We cannot ask him to assume such a busy post," Liao said. This remark suggests that there is a tacit agreement in the Chinese leadership that the 77-year-old Deng should be relieved of such an exhausting post as the head of state. Liao, however, did not disclose who would assume the post of the head of state.

Referring to Sino-Soviet relations, Liao said that though Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has made various proposals, China has no trust in his proposals and gives no serious consideration to the proposals.

Liao also accused the United States of trying to promote a "two-China" concept (with continued arms sales to Taiwan). He said the Chinese will never compromise on this problem. Considering the current situation concerned with the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, Liao told the Japanese guest, no optimism can be warranted about the continued smooth relations between Beijing and Washington.

Katsumata arrived in Beijing Tuesday after attending celebrations in Pyongyang marking the 70th birthday of Korean President Kim Il-song.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS PRINCIPLE OF SELECTING CADRES

[Commentator's article: "It Is Imperative To Uphold Principle of Selecting Ethical and Professionally Competent Cadres"]

[Text] In streamlining our bureaucracy, a large number of veteran cadres will retire or retreat to the second line, while a large number of middle-aged and young cadres will be selected and promoted to leadership posts at various levels. The problem of "retreating" involved here is quite an important one. It must be tackled well. The problem of "stepping in" is a still more important one. It especially must be solved well. What kind of persons are to be selected for promotion and what kind of leading group is to be set up -- this has to do with the problem of whether or not the expected results can be achieved in streamlining bureaucracy. It also concerns whether our party's line can be carried out in a sustained manner and whether the socialist cause can thrive.

Veteran cadres are the cherished wealth of our party and state. In the current effort to streamline bureaucracy, we must see to it that new cadres take over from veteran ones in an orderly, systematic and proper manner. For this reason, we must retain a number of experienced veteran cadres among leading groups at various levels. But a point especially worthy of note is that we must select and have a still greater number of middle-aged and young cadres. It should be fully affirmed that after over 30 years of work and struggle since the founding of the PRC, we have cultivated and trained large numbers of elite younger cadres who have both ability and political integrity and who are in the prime of life. They take a firm political stand and are relatively well trained professionally. They combine a capacity for leadership with vim and vigor. They are fully qualified to take over the burden of revolution and can perform various leadership tasks with efficiency.

Our party and state have pinned their hopes on them. They also embody the great vitality of our revolutionary cause. We must not fail to take note of this treasure trove of talent at the disposal of the party. We must also not fail to take note of this new force. In selecting and promoting middle-aged and young cadres, we must not be full of misgivings and so slow to act that we do not even make a start. If we do so, we will do an injustice to the great cause of modernization and make an inexcusable historical mistake.

In selecting and promoting cadres, our party has traditionally adhered to the principle calling for both ability and political integrity. In selecting cadres in line with this principle, we must first take note of the political performance of cadres and see whether they are politically reliable. This requires us to look into the performance of cadres during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and especially their performance since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee.

The "Great Cultural Revolution" was an extremely severe test for every cadre. In judging the political performance and political integrity of a cadre, we cannot fail to take the history of the "Great Cultural Revolution" into consideration and cannot fail to look into his performance at the several crucial moments of that political struggle. The party Central Committee has stressed many times that those people who got started by following Lin Biao and Jiang Qing and company in rebellion, those who were seriously affected with factionalist ideas and those who engaged in smashing and grabbing still occupy leadership posts and must be resolutely removed. Of course, we must especially guard against these three categories of people availing themselves of the streamlining of bureaucracy to find their way into the leading groups. This is what should be made clear. It must not be dismissed lightly. If we lower our guard for that matter, there will be disastrous consequences. There are also some cadres who have made serious mistakes but who do not fall into the above "three categories of people." In our approach to them, we must adopt the guideline of "being lenient rather than strict " We must give them an opportunity to do some good deeds by way of making up for their faults. This is necessary. But we must find out after a relatively long period of careful investigation if they have thoroughly corrected their mistakes, and we must not select them for promotion until we have done so. Some comrades have associated the guideline of being lenient toward errant cadres with the matter of selecting and promoting elite cadres and set less strict requirements for the selection and promotion of trained people. This is not right.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee was a great turning point in our party's history. The attitude a cadre has adopted toward the line, guiding principles and policies adopted since third plenary session is an important criterion for judging whether he is politically reliable. This should be judged by whether he truly keeps in line politically with the CCP Central Committee, whether he acts in accordance with the party's line, guiding principles and policies, whether he faithfully follows the norms of the party's life and whether he plays an exemplary and model role by suiting his actions to his words. While selecting cadres, we should, first of all, consider those who behaved well during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and have continued to do so since the third plenary session. Although some comrades did not make mistakes or even behaved fairly well during the "Great Cultural Revolution," they have strongly disliked the line, guiding principles and policies implemented since the third plenary session and have adopted a resentful attitude toward them. It is obviously inappropriate to select those cadres. Due to the influence of the leftist mistakes, some cadres committed mistakes at a certain time in handling certain problems during the "Great Cultural Revolution," but they conscientiously examined their mistakes and have resolutely implemented the party's line, guiding principles and policies in recent years and have achieved marked success in their work. We should forgive and trust these comrades and be bold in selecting those who should be selected.

As for those people who seriously violated the norms of the party's life in the political field and the law and discipline in the economic field in these few years, we should never select them, not a single one of them. Those who have occupied leading positions should be discharged from their posts. It goes without saying that these people are politically unreliable.

In selecting cadres, we should, first of all, attach importance to ethics. At the same time, we should also pay attention to ability. Some people who are unethical will not serve the people faithfully, although they might possess ability in certain aspects. It would not be in the interests of the people to select these people for leading bodies. It is difficult for those who lack ability to shoulder important tasks, although they are ethical. If we grudgingly select them, they will also do our cause great harm. Therefore, we should carefully select those comrades who are professionally competent from among those cadres who have proved in practice that they are politically reliable and let them carry forward the important historical tasks and forge ahead into the future. We should appoint people on the basis of merit and ability. Merit refers to their ethics, whereas ability refers to their abundant vocational knowledge, their practical experience and leadership competence. One thing which merits our attention is that, with regard to cadres who are relatively young, we should not set excessive demands on them in leadership work. Only by assigning them to do leadership work can they be turned from people with less experience into cadres with profound experience and gradually become mature. In this respect, we should prevent and overcome the ideas of selecting cadres merely on the basis of qualifications and seniority and of demanding perfection.

To select excellent middle-aged and young cadres who are both ethical and professionally competent, we should do well in solving the problem of "promotion" [jin 6651]. One of the most important methods we should adopt is integrating the leaders with the masses and sincerely following the mass line. Our judgment will inevitably be limited if we rely on a small number of people to grasp the situation and judge cadres. If we rely on the strength of a small number of people, it is difficult for us to overcome interference from the old concepts, old habits and the unhealthy tendencies such as sectarianism, appointing people by favoritism and so forth. We believe that under the guidance of the correct party political and ideological line, as long as we truly rely on the party organizations at all levels, the masses inside and outside the party and experienced veteran cadres who know their subordinates well enough to assign them jobs commensurate with their ability, we will select appropriate comrades to be our successors and accomplish this important task effectively.

WEN HUI BAO SEES MIDDLE-AGED INTELLECTUALS' ROLE

[Commentator's article: "Bring Into Full Play the Role of Middle-Aged Intellectuals"]

[Excerpts] Since the party Central Committee announced that intellectuals are a part of the working class and a force to rely on in the cause of socialism, party committees at all levels have implemented the party's policies concerning intellectuals and made great achievements in this connection.

Recently, the party Central Committee instructed all localities to conduct an inspection of their work concerning intellectuals and urged all localities to treat intellectuals equally without political discrimination, boldly employ them and be concerned about their well-being.

With the progress of the socialist modernization program, the important role of middle-aged intellectuals has been shown more and more clearly. More than 60 percent of the nearly 6 million scientific and technological cadres in China are middle-aged persons trained after the founding of the People's Republic. The majority of China's important scientific and technological accomplishments are the result of their diligent work.

Currently, the potential of the middle-aged intellectuals at the forefront of scientific research, education and production is still far from being fully utilized, due to the serious damage done in the 10 years of internal disorder as well as mistakes in our work. This situation is primarily caused by the leading cadres of some units and departments who still tend to belittle the role of intellectuals, fail to trust and rely on them, or even discriminate against them. It is still very common that jobs given to the middle-aged intellectuals do not fit their educational background and speciality, that a large number of talented persons are unemployed and wasted. Emphasis on seniority has stifled many outstanding young and middle-aged talents. While the intellectuals are employed, the leading cadres fail to further train them and develop their talents. It is hard for some intellectuals to work energetically because their working, studying and living conditions are not commensurate with their duty. We should pay greater attention to these phenomena, attach importance to middle-aged intellectuals and understand and treat this issue as a strategic matter.

Facts over many years have proven that the broad masses of middle-aged intellectuals can work for the prosperity of our country and the people, be dedicated heart and soul to the same cause of our party, and work hard to overcome difficulties in the road ahead. While the party's policies concerning intellectuals are being further implemented, middle-aged intellectuals certainly can profoundly understand their historical mission in the economic readjustment and the socialist modernization, continue to work hard and make still greater contributions.

EDITORIAL ON PROTECTION OF STATE RESOURCES

[Editorial: "Resolutely Stop Acts Which Destroy the State's Natural Resources and Property"]

[Text] Our country is a socialist country and the state sector of the economy and the natural resources of the state are the common riches of people of various nationalities in China. Properly protecting the state sector of the economy and the natural resources of the state is the sacred duty of all the people.

Our constitution stipulates: "Socialist public property shall be inviolable." It forbids anybody from using any means to damage the socialist economy and public interests. "Mineral resources, waters and those forests, undeveloped land and land resources owned by the state are the property of the whole people." China's criminal law has stipulated that damaging socialist construction and violating the property owned by the whole people are criminal acts.

However, in some areas, people have not attached enough importance to the stipulations of the constitution and the criminal law. Some phenomena of damaging the natural resources and property of the state and obstructing economic construction have appeared in a handful of enterprises, units, mining areas, forests and communication lines. They are: the scramble for the property of state-run enterprises; the indiscriminate extraction of the mineral resources of the state; the indiscriminate felling of trees and forest resources; the protracted refusal of certain households to move from land requisitioned by the state and obstruction of the smooth progress of economic construction; and the indiscriminate digging of roadbeds and setting up of roadblocks to seriously interfere with the free passage of trains and motor vehicles.

At present, a phenomenon which greatly merits attention is that the leading cadres of certain units, departments and localities have adopted a laissez-faire attitude toward acts which destroy state property. They have adopted an extremely irresponsible attitude of not daring to firmly grasp or to handle these acts. They have procrastinated whenever anything crops up and avoided contradictions. Problems which are actually not difficult to solve have dragged on without any decision being reached. This has resulted in heavy losses to the cause of socialism. The occurrence of this kind of phenomenon results from some of the cadres having no concept of the state or the general situation.

They are seriously affected by departmentalism and decentralism, and individually even overtly or covertly shield, wink at and support these erroneous actions. This is absolutely impermissible according to party discipline and state law.

Everybody has a responsibility to protect the natural resources and property of the state. All party members, state cadres and the broad masses of people should boldly step forward, wage a resolute struggle against acts which destroy natural resources and property of the state and adopt measures to safeguard these natural resources and property so that no harm will come to them. All prefectures, counties, communes, towns and mining areas throughout the country must conscientiously carry out an examination to see whether or not there has been any destruction of the property or natural resources of the state, and upon discovering any, must put an end to and strictly deal with it.

Some people have invented excuses for destroying the natural resources and property of the state by saying that the point of departure for this is to first let some of the people become rich. This is a misinterpretation and distortion of the party's policy of becoming rich by relying on hard work, or at least, it is a kind of muddled concept. When we say letting some of the people become rich first, we are referring to proper ways and not crooked ways. What we advocate is becoming rich by relying on hard work and legitimate operations and allowing the urban and rural people to create riches and increase their income by relying on the sweat of their labor and their wisdom and ability. We absolutely cannot erroneously interpret this to mean that in order to acquire personal wealth, we can scramble for the property of state enterprises, steal the natural resources of the stae, indiscriminately dig the mines of the state or cut down the forests and trees of the state. This method of doing things is in fact undermining the foundation of socialism.

Some people have used the pretext that this is in the interests of the masses. What they meant by being concerned with the "interests of the masses" actually meant pandering to the backward ideas of a small number of people, seizing the opportunity to extort money from the state and obtaining petty advantages at the expense of the state. What they did was absolutely wrong. We all know that the interests of the masses include long-term and immediate interests as well as overall and individual interests. Generally speaking, the state interests represent the long-term and overall interests of the masses. Those who truly represent the interests of the masses should be concerned not only with the immediate and individual interests of the masses, but in particular, should be concerned with their long-term and overall interests. An economy based on ownership by the whole people and socialist public property is where the long-term and overall interests of the masses lie. Once the long-term and overall interests of the masses are harmed, their immediate and individual interests will eventually come to nothing.

Protecting the property and natural resources of the state is an important part of carrying out patriotic and communist education for the masses. In the activities of building spiritual civilization, various localities and units should carry out ideological education for the masses on protecting the property and natural resources of the state and supporting the four modernizations and energetically commend good personalities and good deeds which protect the property and natural resources of the state. We should formulate regulations for villages and rules for the people, attach importance to social morality and foster a good general mood of the society of taking good care of state property and public property. The key to curbing acts of sabotaging state property and obstructing economic construction lies in the efforts of cadres at all levels to strengthen their overall point of view and establish the idea of coordinating all the activities of the nation as in a chess game. We should not place the interests of localities and units in opposition to the interests of the state. We should not wrongly think that since the state-owned economy is solid enough, it does not matter if a little is appropriated or nibbled at. We are not allowed to distort the idea that "those living on a mountain live off the mountain, those living near the water live off the water" and formulate wrong ideas such as "those living in factories live off the factories," "those living in forests live off the forest" and "those living in a mining area live off the mining area."

The protracted existence of the phenomenon of sabotaging the property and natural resources of the state has reflected the laxity of some local leading cadres. Actually, as long as they inspire enthusiasm, go right to the spot to institute investigations and study, seriously and conscientiously deal with problems which have occurred, let those who are responsible bear the responsibility and those relevant units manage the affairs and handle the matter in an appropriate way, they can promptly solve the problems which seemed difficult to tackle. The experience of a number of places has proved this.

The natural resources and property of the state are the material prerequisite for carrying out socialist modernization. They should be protected by state law. All masses in the urban and rural areas, organizations and leading cadres at all levels should have a sense of responsibility toward the state and toward the modernizations, firmly establish a concept of legality, establish a habit of observing law and discipline and carry out stern and unswerving struggle against the acts of sabotaging the natural resources and property of the state. The people's government should further strengthen economic legislative work and truly do a good job in adhering to the law, strictly enforcing the law and punishing those who violate the law. We should advocate the idea of being responsible for the natural resources and property of the state and resolutely overcome the chaotic state of laxness, weakness and irresponsibility.

WEI YUMING SEES NEED FOR MORE FOREIGN INVESTMENT

[Text] Beijing, April 19 (XINHUA) -- China will use more foreign investment in the future to supplement domestic funds in development of energy and other industries, said Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, in an interview with XINHUA here today. The Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade was recently set up in a merger of the former State Administrative Commission for Import and Export Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Trade, Ministry of Economic Relations With Foreign Countries, and State Foreign Investment Commission.

"Some foreign business people have expressed the worry that investment opportunities in China will fall off because of the continuing readjustment of China's national economy. These worries are groundless," he said.

China has decided to exploit coal reserves in Shanxi and Guizhou Provinces on a fairly large scale and build railways and harbours to move the coal, the vice-minister said. Shanxi alone has coal reserves of 200,000 million tons. Guizhou Province has, in addition, large deposits of phosphorus and nonferrous metals which are scheduled for exploitation. "Guizhou alone will need an enormous amount of investment, not just a few hundred million U.S. dollars but several thousand million U.S. dollars," the vice-minister revealed. Large coal projects are also planned on the northeast China plain, he said.

These are all major undertakings requiring comparatively large investment. Acording to the ministry, China has already made contact with foreign governments and financial groups on these projects and they have shown keen interest in joint exploitation of these areas.

Other natural resources in China also have tremendous potential, according to Wei Yuming. For instance, up till now, only less than five percent of the abundant water resources for the development of hydro-electric power has been used. Tens of thousands of enterprises need technical transformation. Light and textile industries, agriculture and forestry and animal husbandry will also be energetically developed.

After discussions at a forum on foreign economic relations and trade convened at the end of last year by the State Council and attended by representatives from nine coastal provinces and municipalities, the Chinese Government decided to vigorously push cooperative production and processing work with imported materials in the coastal areas. Several thousand of these projects will be approved in the future.

"Up to now, the foreign investment China has used constitutes only a small proportion of the amount contracted for, say not more than ten percent," the vice-minister said. "There are reasons for this," he explained, "the main one being inadequate domestic preparations. Besides, the bulk of the loans made by foreign governments belong to the category of buyer's credits and China lacks experience in using foreign capital." But this state of affairs will surely improve, he added.

"So far, our foreign debt is very small," Wei Yuming said. "We have paid off a substantial amount of the commercial loans made a few years ago. In addition, by expanding exports of China's rich resources of coal, petroleum and nonferrous metals our foreign exchange income can be increased. There is no problem about repayment."

BUREAU DIRECTOR COMMENTS ON ENLIVENING ECONOMY

[Text] At present China is launching a struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. Some people are worrying about the struggle hampering our efforts to enliven the economy. Others are wondering whether the policy of enlivening the economy has been changed. At this point, (Ren Zhonglin), director of the state industrial and commercial administrative bureau, said: Such worries and doubts are completely groundless. Carrying out the party's policy of opening up to the world and the various policies of enlivening the economy and resolutely dealing blows at serious criminal activities on the market are not mutually exclusive.

(Ren Zhonglin) said some people often think of enlivening the economy and stimulating the circulation of commodities as conflicting with strengthening management. They think enlivening the economy and stimulating the circulation of commodities mean doing whatever they like and each going his own way. They think they can forget all about the party's policy, the state plan and socialist orientation. Some think strengthening management means placing stringent restrictions on the market, setting all sorts of taboos and commandments and following the beaten path of the old days before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. Obviously, neither of the two views is correct.

(Ren Zhonglin) said that in carrying out the state policy of enlivening the domestic economy, we must first of all spare no efforts to keep our channels for the planned circulation of commodities open. Ours is a socialist state, and these planned channels are the main channels to which other channels are supplementary. The key to enlivening the economy lies in our efforts to keep our planned channels open. If our planned channels are blocked, we cannot possibly enliven our economy even if other channels are unblocked. Worse yet, we may even disrupt our economy. Therefore, while strengthening market management, the industrial and commercial administrative and management departments must also apply the management of economic contracts, of enterprise registration, of trademarks and advertisements and other necessary administrative means so as to safeguard the socialist economic order and guarantee the task of state monopoly of purchase and the rationed purchases of main products as well as the fulfillment of the state plan.

(Ren Zhonglin) said: While dealing blows at profiteering, smuggling, trading in smuggled goods and clamping down upon illegal businesses, we must conscientiously protect legitimate businesses, actively keep other channels of commodity circulation open and bring the supplementary role of the regulation by the market into full play.

It is necessary to safeguard the integration of the socialist market and correct the practice of enforcing economic blockade between regions and shifting one's troubles onto others. It is necessary to strengthen the supervision over commodity prices on the market in coordination with departments concerned and to deal blows at those who illegally raise commodity prices. It is necessary to enliven trade at urban and rural village fairs, manage the fairs well and bring their supplementary role into full play. It is necessary to properly develop the urban and township collective economy and laborers' individual economy in accordance with the needs of the national economy so as to help them solve their practical difficulties in production and administration, bring their characteristics of flexibility in business and convenience to the masses into full play, and urge them to run business within stipulated limits and observe the regulations governing market management.

(Ren Zhonglin) said: It is necessary to combine enlivening the economy with strengthening management. It is necessary to enliven the economy and control the market well wherever possible. It is imperative to enliven the economy without disrupting it and control the the market without suffocating it. Only by doing so can we promote the healthy development of China's socialist economic construction.

STATE COUNCIL OF MARKETING INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS

[Text] Beijing, 20 Apr (XINHUA) -- The State Council has announced a 10-point regulation to prohibit a blockade in purchasing and marketing industrial products.

The State Council issued a circular on 10 April calling on the people's governments in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, the various ministries and commissions, and the various organs under the direct administration of the State Council to conscientiously implement this 10-point regulation.

The circular says: Ours is a socialist economy. We must persistently let the planned economy prevail and regard market regulation as supplementary. Under the guidance of state plans, we must maintain a unified socialist market and ensure the normal circulation of various industrial products manufactured in the country. Only then will it be possible for us to revitalize our economy, promote production and achieve the goal of improving economic results.

The circular points out: Recently, a situation forming a blockade against industrial products manufactured in other localities has prevailed in many areas. Despite the fact that certain machinery, electric products, farm machines and other industrial products in these areas are of low quality, poor in performance and not welcomed by users, efforts are being made in these areas to promote the sales of such products by force. At the same time, rigid regulations are enforced forbidding users to purchase high quality products of the same category from other localities. Some areas have set up organs to screen and approve applications in this regard. They even force local users to cancel contracts which have been signed to procure industrial products from other localities and demand that banks refuse to make payments on the products ordered. A similar situation also incessantly prevails between some departments. This practice of conducting a regional or departmental blockade and protecting the backward with administrative directives is extremely harmful to the overall national economy. This practice will inevitably weaken the unified plans of the state and undermine the unified socialist market. It is detrimental to bringing into full play an area's predominance in production and increasing the production of high quality products, and harmful to exchanging production techniques and organizing socialized mass production. It is even more harmful to readjusting the national economy and improving economic results.

In order to resolutely correct this kind of erroneous practice, the State Council has announced a 10-point regulation as follows:

1. As long as such purchases are permitted by state plans and are economical and reasonable, all enterprises, undertakings and supply and marketing departments are authorized to select and purchase various industrial products on the basis of merit from other localities and departments. No areas, departments or individuals are allowed to impose restrictions or stand in the way.

2. After state quotas have been fulfilled on a priority basis, those industrial products manufactured according to state specifications and those industrial products manufactured with state assignments, as well as other industrial products welcomed by the users, may be marketed and sold throughout the country. Orders may be accepted for such products. No areas or departments are allowed to interfere with the sale and marketing of such products.

3. In selecting equipment (including equipment kept in stock) by the design departments and in providing whole sets of equipment by the supply departments, the principle of selecting the superior should be applied. Equipment of good quality and performance and available at a reasonable price should be selected without any limits on regions or departments.

4. Those regions, departments, and enterprises that are economically and technologically backward should learn from advanced regions, departments, and enterprises with an open mind. Those economically developed regions must carry forward the spirit of socialist cooperation and actively assist those undeveloped regions to promote industry and improve technology for production, product quality and management.

5. In working out production plans for electrical machinery, farm equipment, durable consumer goods, and other industrial products, the departments in charge of various industries under the State Council should take the needs of regions into consideration and arrange the production of these items at local or nearby enterprises if and when the products are of the same quality and price. Encouragement should be made to boost the production of those items of good quality or famous brands and effective measures should be taken to either limit or stop the production of those items that are not readily marketable.

6. In the minority nationality regions and in those economically undeveloped regions, the selection and procurement of electrical machinery, farm machinery and durable consumer goods should also be carried out in accordance with the principle of selecting the superior, and boycotting should not be pursued. In procuring those daily commodities and light industrial products which are produced and sufficiently supplied in the localities, measures should be taken to properly control procurement from other localities within a certain period. However, efforts should be made to improve the quality of such items so that good quality commodities can be procured at a low price.

7. Unhealthy tendencies that exist within the sphere of commodity circulation should be resolutely stopped. The promotion of sales of products through such unjust measures as offering sales commissions, sales fees, or recommendation fees, feasting or buying gifts for customers, arbitrarily forcing prices down or forcing customers to buy unmarketable goods should be strictly forbidden. Those units or individuals that pursue such malpractices will be investigated and their economic as well as administrative responsibilities determined. Those who violate state law will be punished in accordance with the law.

8. Banks at all levels should support customers and supply departments in making reasonable use of funds as well as in selecting and procuring superior commodities. It is necessary to resolutely boycott those practices that hamper the selection and procurement of superior commodities and violate financial regulations.

9. The regulations set forth in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions which limit the procurement of industrial products from other localities and departments, as well as similar regulations, should be abolished. All organs which examine and approve procurement of industrial products from other localities or departments should be abolished.

10. In the special economic zones, the policy and decrees concerning special economic zones issued by the state should continue to be implemented. These regulations should also be implemented in the special economic zones regarding matters not covered by the above decrees.

BEIJING RADIO URGES RURAL FAMILY PLANNING

[Station commentary: "Attention Must Be Paid to Family Planning in Rural Areas"]

[Text] Of our country's 1 billion people, more than 800 million live in rural areas. Family planning should focus on the rural areas. At present, the major problem faced by family planning work in rural areas is that since the implementation of the responsibility system in agricultural production, the old methods of work have become unsuitable, ideological work has become more difficult, leadership in some places has weakened, and there is a tendency to let people do as they please. It is necessary to consider new measures to meet the new situation.

With the implementation of the production responsibility system, many peasants want to have more children, particularly boys. They think that only by having more able-bodied men can they become well-to-do. Their thinking is unrealistic.

In most of our country's rural areas, there are a great number of people but a scarcity of land. As the population grows, the average per-capita share of farmland inevitably will make it difficult to improve the peasants' standard of living.

From the viewpoint of the country's rural areas as a whole, it is impossible to become well-to-do by having more children. As far as a family is concerned, more children mean a heavier burden. A newborn child is primarily a consumer, and the family has to invest a great deal to gradually turn a child into a producer.

Some say, "I can afford to raise children and need no interference by others." This is the wrong thing to say. A person, whoever he or she is, belongs not only to a family but also to society. A family may be able to raise more children, but society cannot take the burden. Growing up into an adult, a child not only must be fed but must be clothed, educated and provided a job. No family can do all this. We cannot look at the problem only from our own small courtyard, but should give some thought to what it will mean to the country and society.

The rural areas are different from the cities. To prepare for old age by having sons is indeed currently an important issue. From a long-range viewpoint, the solution to the old age problem in rural areas should be the institution of social insurance. Now, some prosperous communes and production brigades have already implemented a retirement system for peasants and, to varying degrees, reduced the old people's dependence on their children.

Before social insurance is established, the rural areas in all parts of the country should regard taking good care of old people entitled to the "five guarantees" as an important task and do it well. Where conditions are right, old folks' homes should be established to relieve people of worry about their old folks at home.

The new generation of educated young men and women in the rural areas should courageously discard old customs and establish new practices. Where a new family is to be built should be determined by practical needs. It is not always necessary for girls to be married off; men, too, can be married into their brides' families.

To do a good job in family planning work in rural areas, we must rely mainly on propaganda and education. At the same time, we must also adopt necessary administrative measures and economic rewards and punishments.

The standing committees of people's congresses and people's governments in many places have drawn up family planning regulations and measures, and have produced some results. Attention should now be paid to constantly revising and perfecting these regulations and measures so that they can be adapted to changing situations.

In the past, rewards and punishments for family planning in various places were mainly in terms of work points. Now that many places have implemented the "da bao gan" production responsibility system [meaning production groups assuming full responsibility for the fulfillment of production plans], it is necessary to make the timely change from rewards and punishments in work points to rewards and punishments in money and grain, or to check childbirth by such measures as readjusting the acreage of contracted farmland and so forth.

After the implementation of the responsibility system in agricultural production, another new problem faced by family planning work in rural areas is the laxity and weakness of some grassroots organizations with no one responsible for family planning work. This is a problem the localities must solve while stabilizing and perfecting the production responsibility system.

Making a success of family planning work is one of the major responsibilities of grassroots organizations and cadres in rural areas. In choosing the advanced and rewarding cadres, consideration must be given to performance in family planning work. They should be urged to pay attention to family planning work as they do agricultural production and attach equal importance to both.

BAN YUE TAN DISCUSSES DEVELOPMENT OF NAVY

["PLA Life" column article by Lu Qiming [7120 0366 2494] and Cao Guoqiang [2580 0948 1730]: "New China's Navy"]

[Text] In May 1980, a massive composite fleet of guided missile destroyers, oceangoing supply ships, oceangoing salvage ships, oceangoing survey ships and oceangoing tugs crossed the Equator in mighty array, sailed into the South Pacific, and victoriously fulfilled its carrier rocket test mission. This showed that the modernization of China's navy has reached a new level.

China's navy was born amid the roar of cannon as the million heroes crossed the Chang Jiang. It is now only 33 years old.

In the navy's early days, most of its personnel were cadres and fighters transferred from the army. All of them were onboard ship for the first time, and for some it was the first time they had seen the sea. Most of the vessels were only a few score or a few hundred tons, and all of them had either been captured from the enemy or brought over to us by defecting Kuomintang personnel. At that time U.S. imperialism and the Chiang gang sneered that we would be unable to operate a navy, and they frequently dispatched ships and planes to provoke us. In the face of these provocations, our navy's commanders and fighters resoundingly pointed out: "Follow the road of development of the army and build our navy in combat." The people's navy has precisely grown in combat, and it has also brought in the fine traditions and work style of the army. In the battle to defend our coasts, they displayed the invincible and heroic spirit of daring to fight and to win, fought short-range and night battles with the enemy, created "pincers" around the enemy ships, and fought brilliant battles with small vessels against large ones. The small 25-ton gunboat now displayed in the Beijing Military Museum provides the best example of this. During the 1950's, the gunboat unit to which this vessel belonged sank or damaged enemy vessels several times or even several dozen times larger than its own ships. With the help of fraternal units it won prestige for the Chinese people's navy over a 10-year period.

Following the gunboat units, the naval air force, escort vessel and torpedo boat units also appeared in succession. They actively cooperated with the army and air force in liberating the Wanshan Archipelago and Shengsilie and Yijiangshan Islands, recovering the Xisha Archipelago, bombarding Jusmen, suppressing bandits on the seas, and hitting at the Chiang gang's combat ships and groups of bandit spies, thus gaining undying merit for the people.

The growth of the people's navy is infused with the painstaking labor of the older generation of proletarian revolutionaries such as Chairman Mao, Premier Zhou, and NPC Standing Committee Chairman Zhu. Before the crossing of the Chang Jiang, the Central Committee drew up its great policy decision on establishing the people's navy, and then proceeded to stipulate the navy-building principles of taking the PLA as the basis and workers and peasants as the backbone force, absorbing large numbers of educated young people and uniting, educating and remolding the former Kuomintang naval personnel. After the founding of the state, the older generation of proletarian revolutionaries inspected the naval units on many occasions and issued a series of instructions on how to build a powerful navy. Under the earnest concern of Chairman Mao and the Central Committee, the people's navy has advanced at high speed toward the goal of modernization in the past 30 years. Having passed through the stage of purchasing and imitating foreign equipment, the units have now entered the stage of building equipment themselves. The equipment of the 1950's has vanished from the sea, replaced now by new Chinese-made equipment. With its submarines, guided missile destroyers, guided missile escort vessels, guided missile motorboats, air units, and shore-based guided missiles, as well as its communications and observation equipment and its marine corps, China's navy has now become a combined armed service. To meet the needs of the modernization of the navy, more than 10 military academies and schools have been set up, from which tens of thousands of students graduate and go to work on the coastal defense front every year.

Now most of the cadres and fighters on the naval vessels have been trained in these academies and schools or other training institutions. They have abundant professional and theoretical knowledge as well as sea training experience, and are backbone forces in the modernization of the navy.

Under the guidance of the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, China's navy has taken new steps forward in modernization and regularization and there have been new developments in tactics and technology. China's first generation of shipborne aircraft pilots has already grown up, and the units are now equipped with the first batch of oceangoing supply ships. The units' ability to make long ocean voyages has been greatly enhanced, and many naval vessels undergo long-voyage training every year.

The ships and planes of the people's navy are charged not only with the task of defending the coastal front of the motherland; every year large numbers of ships and aircraft are dispatched to help local scientific research departments carry out marine experiments, to patrol and guard the exploration and exploitation of oil, and to undertake fisheries protection and other escort tasks. China's navy is playing an increasingly important role in the great struggle to build and defend and build a powerful modern China. It can be stated with certainty that the people's navy will grow further in the wake of China's modernization drive and make still greater contributions in preserving the security of the motherland and world peace.

JIANCSU COMBATS ECONOMIC CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 5 April, Fang Zhen, president of the Jiangsu Provincial Higher People's Court, and Wei Yongyi, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, respectively made work reports to the third plenary session of the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress.

In delivering his "report on the work of the Jiangsu Provincial Higher People's Court," Comrade Fang Zhen first reported on the achievements scored by the court over the past year. He said: Since the third session of the fifth provincial people's congress, the people's courts at various levels in the province have handled a large number of criminal, civil and economic cases as well as cases of appeals by the people. He added: In the economic field, smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, speculation, swindling, bribery, embezzlement of state and collective property and funds and other serious criminal activities have been rampant. To severely punish economic criminals and to defend socialist modernization construction, it is essential that all concerned departments cooperate.

At the meeting, Wei Yongyi, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, made a "report on the work of the Jiangsu Provincial People's Procuratorate." Comrade Wei Yongyi said: Over the past year, the various procuratorial organs in Jiangsu Province have, under the leadership of the various party committees, regarded improving social security as their central task. They have promptly dealt blows at the various criminal activities through examining and approving warrants for arrest, examining indictments and instituting proceedings against offenders ot the law. In handling counterrevolutionary and other criminal cases, they have closely cooperated with the public security organs and the people's courts and have adhered to the principle of maintaining close contacts with the people. At the same time, they have seriously waged struggles against violations of the law in the economic field.

Comrade Wei Yongyi concluded: Economic criminals, particularly the tiny number of criminals who have committed grave economic crimes and cadres who have occupied important positions, must be severely punished so that crimes are neither tolerated nor abetted. Moreover, the policy of "leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse" must be adhered to. That is, leniency and severity must be differentiated according to individual cases.

JINAN PLA COMMISSAR ON EDUCATING YOUNG FIGHTERS

HK161101 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 15 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Report: "Jinan PLA United First Political Commissar Xiao Wangdong Talks on How To Lead the Troops in the New Historical Conditions"]

[Text] Editor's note: We hearby publish Comrade Xiao Wangdong's speech at the meeting to exchange experiences of the advanced companies and advanced individuals in building socialist spiritual civilization held by the Jinan PLA units. In his speech, he has made an excellent analysis of the problem of how to educate the younger generation and has put forth appropriate methods for solving this problem. What he said concerning the problem of leading the troops is of great significance for all the professions and circles in various areas as a reference in uniting and educating their youths. [end editor's note]

At the meeting to exchange experiences of the advanced companies and advanced individuals in building socialist spiritual civilization held by the Jinan PLA units, Xiao Wangdong, first commissar of the Jinan PLA units, gave a speech entitled "How To Lead the Troops in the New Historical Conditions." He analyzed the characteristics of the new generation of young fighters and summed up the experience in leading the troops in the new historical conditions.

Comrade Xiao Wangdong first put forth the view that in order to overcome the "difficulties in leading the troops," we must adopt a correct attitude toward our young fighters. He said that our fighters presently have the characteristic features and mood of the new historical period, as well as the traces of the wounds that they suffered during the decade of turmoil. Generally speaking, most of them have received a relatively high degree of cultural education and are quick to learn new things. They usually have sharp intelligence, and acute curiosity concerning new things and a thirst for the four modernizations. They are active thinkers and are usually fond of study. Moreover, they are keen to perform great feats and have a strong sense of self-respect and a strong sense of honor. In short, they possess numerous very valuable and favorable traits. However, we cannot deny the fact that some of them have considerably more shortcomings and defects than in the past. We can say that in the main, they are very good youths, and they indeed deserve our love. In treating them, we should see their principal aspects, their essential nature and the tendencies of their development. If we fail to adopt such a correct attitude, and if we think, without making analyses, that the fighters now are not so easy to lead as the fighters in the past, we will commit the error of one-sidedness, which will hamper our efforts to lead our troops well. In order to have a correct attitude toward the difficulties in leading the troops, what is more important is that we must see the existing problems among our cadres in leading the troops. Some of our comrades have said that in a sense, our difficulties in leading the troops are caused by the change in circumstances, and are due to the fact that we have failed to raise the standards and abilities of our cadres in accordance with the change in circumstances. This is a very reasonable way of putting it. At present, most of our companies are composed of the same kinds of fighters, but in some companies the troops are led relatively well and in others not well enough. One of the important reasons for this lies in the differences in our cadres' sense of political responsibility, their difference in ideological standards and their difference in working abilities. During the new historical period we should develop the revolutionary spirit of daring to forge ahead despite obvious difficulties ahead of us. We should fear no difficulties and be daring in practice. We should strive to find ways to solve the new problems that we may meet in leading our fighters. We should, moreover, sum up our new experience and strive to become good at adapting our army's traditional methods of leading troops to the new historical situation. As long as we do all the above-mentioned things, we will certainly be able to chart a new path, open up new prospects, turn what is difficult into what is easy and finally succeed in solving the problems related to leading the troops under the new situation.

Comrade Xiao Wangdong also put forth the view that the key to leading the troops well lies in raising the political consciousness of our young soldiers. He said that the most important thing in raising our fighters' political consciousness is to help them to fix in their minds the lofty ideal of fighting for communism all their lives and to train them to have lofty morality and integrity. By so doing, we will inbue our young fighters with a tremendous motive force which will continuously urge them to forge ahead and which will play an important role in helping them to make progress all their lives. We should help them in establishing in their minds the lofty ideal of fighting for communism all their lives and the virtue of keeping at heart the interests of the motherland and devoting themselves to the four modernizations. We should inspire them with the lofty morality and integration of giving up their personal interests for the interests of the public and of loving the party, the government, the army, the people and the motherland. Only by so doing can we make them consciously link their personal prospects with the prospects of the state and organically link their personal interests with the interests of the revolution. Only by so doing can we make them put the interests of the revolution first and can we turn them into revolutionary fighters who "are willing to suffer losses by joining the army, willing to suffer losses when they leave the army and take on other jobs and willing to suffer losses in order to serve the people." Thus they will be able to correctly handle the problems related to the revolutionary division of labor, related to party membership and promotion and related to marriage, love and families. Only thus can they consciously resist the corruption of bourgeois ideology. Moreover, only by so doing can we make them consciously obey and resolutely carry out the orders and commands, firmly observe all the regulations and decrees and satisfactorily fulfill all the glorious tasks that the upper levels have assigned to them.

By helping the fighters to raise their political consciousness, we mean that we should be bold and assured in propagating revolutionary theory to them and organize them to study the works of Comrade Mao Zedong in order to arm their minds with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and enable them to have a sound theoretical understanding. When the masses of fighters understand the basic principles of Marxism, they will be able to adopt the correct stand, viewpoints and methods in inquiring into and handling problems, they will have a correct criterion to tell right from wrong and they will be willing to firmly strive to realize socialism and communism and consciously regulate their deeds and words according to the communist moral standards. Furthermore, we should carry out, in close conjunction with practice, education among our fighters in the four basic principles, in patriotism and in revolutionary heroism, and teach them to understand the goals of our army and to carry on the fine traditions of our army. Then our troops will become glorious examples in building spiritual civilization. Only then can we make everybody consciously resist the corrupting influence of all types of erroneous ideology. In order to achieve the above goals, we should make our political work a routine and always pay attention to it. The level of our fighters' consciousness is not abstract or unfathomable; it can be measured by judging from the manner in which our fighters understand and handle various problems. Our leading cadres should be adept at seeing through the fighters' minds by judging from their actions and imbue our fighters with correct ideology in a purposeful manner. Only by getting a good grasp of ideological education in a purposeful manner can we make all our fighters know what a revolutionary fighter should do and what he should not do when he is faced with various kinds of problems. Then our fighters will acquire the ability to correctly handle various kinds of problems.

When he raised the view of combining the methods of "forbidding" and "enlightening" and taking the method of "enlightening" as the core in educating young fighters in his speech, he said that in leading the fighters, we should both put forth strict requirements and exercise strict management. However, in many cases, pure administrative orders will not work, if these orders are not supplemented by intensified work in enlightening our fighters. "Forbidding" and "enlightening" are two aspects of one policy, and each supplements and relies upon the other in order to produce any effect. In order to forbid something, we must first enlighten our fighters and make them understand why we should forbid it. Only when we have succeeded in enlightening our fighters can we make them consciously refrain from doing what is forbidden. Therefore, in leading our fighters, we should be resolute in closely combining the methods of both "forbidding" and "enlightening" and we should adhere to the principle of taking the method of "enlightening" as the core and really do a good job of persuasion. In order to exercise the method of "enlightening" well, we should first guide our fighters and make them reveal their innermost thoughts and feelings. Only by guiding our fighters and making them speak the truth and reveal their innermost thoughts and feelings can we understand how things stand in their minds, understand their feelings and find the crux of the problems. Thus we will be able to promptly carry out ideological education among our fighters in a relatively good manner. This requires our cadres to really link with and merge with the masses and to develop a profound revolutionary friendship between the cadres and the fighters. Our cadres should become the bosom friends of our fighters so that our fighters are willing to and dare to tell the cadres their innermost thoughts and feelings. In order to do a good job of "enlightening," we should persist in carrying out positive education. We should not adopt a laissez-faire attitude toward the ideological problems that we have found among our fighters, nor should we adopt the method of coaxing. The only correct method is to give them positive education. For example, during the past few years, our army has been affected by the unhealthy trend in our society. As a result, an increasing number of our fighters have begun to wear long hair, moustaches and sunglasses, and hum unhealthy tunes. In order to overcome these unhealthy practices, some units have paid attention only to drawing up a number of compulsory regulations and enforcing them on their fighters, but they have neglected positive education, the result being failure to enforce the regulations because they have not explained to their fighters why these regulations should be enforced. Instead, they have aroused the resentment of their fighters. However, in quite a large number of other units, the leading groups have not only raised the requirements for their fighters, but have also vigorously made efforts to enlighten them and explain to them the reasons why these requirements have been raised.

They have helped their fighters to tell right from wrong and made them immune from the unhealthy trend, thus bringing about a radical change in the work style and mood in their companies. In order to do a good job of enlightening our fighters, we must know the different characteristics of different individuals and vary our methods accordingly. We must overcome the malpractices of seeking "uniformity" regardless of the difference in our fighters, treating all our fighters as being identical in every aspect and rigidly raising the same requirements for every one of them. In this respect, many units have worked hard to learn some very valuable experiences. For example, in doing ideological work among those fighters who are very irritable and who have a low political consciousness, we should avoid the method of giving compulsory orders to them and persist in adopting the method of patient persuasion. If a fighter is narrow-minded and apt to suspect and misunderstand our aim in persuading him, we should take the initiative in making friends with him,warmly enlighten him and explain to him our aim in order to eliminate possible misunderstanding and in order to make him attached to us. If a fighter has the weakness of vanity and is fond of putting others down, we should pay attention to guiding his personal vanity onto the path of revolutionary heroism as well as to protecting his self-respect. If a fighter is by nature slow to learn and has lagged behind in military and political training, we should encourage him to work hard to catch up with the others and at the same time personally give him guidance. If a fighter is particular about his clothes, we should pay attention to teaching him to carry forward the fine tradition of hard work and plain living as well as developing his strong points in keeping his clothes clean and tidy. If a fighter has committed some mistakes, we should confirm every small bit of progress he makes in correcting his mistakes and at the same time sincerely point out to him where he should further improve himself in order to help him to make continuous progress. All the above-mentioned methods have been proved effective in practice. Moreover, in order to do a good job of enlightening our fighters, we should encourage heart-to-heart talks throughout our units. Having heart-to-heart talks is indeed an effective method in carrying out ideological enlightening work. Each of our cadres should learn how to have heart-to-heart talks with our fighters and learn to use the above-mentioned methods in their heart-to-heart talks in order to exchange thoughts and feelings with the fighters, understand the fighters' minds and feelings, eliminate misunderstandings and help the fighters to raise their consciousness.

When Comrade Xiao Wangdong raised the view that we should understand the characteristics of our youths, assign tasks to them according to their abilities, develop their strong points and overcome their shortcomings, he said that young people, and especially young intellectuals, usually have much imagination and take an interest in many things. They are eager to learn, eager to do better than others and eager to do everything well. If we know how to make good use of their strong points and if we get the knack of guiding them properly, we will be able to bring their advantages and strong points into full play and turn them into people of ability and into fighters with high combat effectiveness. We should cherish our young fighters' interests and hobbies and teach them to develop their interests and hobbies properly. Our fighters' interests and hobbies show their keen thirst for knowledge. This is a kind of motive force for training them to be people of ability, a motive force that we should by no means neglect. One of the undeniable reasons some fighters become top fighters in military training, activists in recreational and sport activities, pioneers in technical renovation or technical experts lies in their interests and hobbies. Some of our cadres fail to understand this point. They often evaluate the fighters from the perspective of their personal taste and thus entertain prejudices against the fighters because of the fighters' interests and hobbies. For example, some cadres do not like singing and treat the fighters who like singing as frivolous. Some of our cadres who do not like sports regard some fighters' love of playing ball games as "being too fond of play." Others who do not love literature treat those fighters who read novels in their spare time as "ignoring their proper occupation." Still others who do not love study regard those fighters who love the study of mathematics, physics and chemistry as "being infatuated by their ambition for entering institutes of higher education." With such a wrong understanding and wrong attitude, these cadres find it hard to deal with their fighters. They will certainly harm the initiative of their fighters because they do not know that the fighters demands resulting from their interests and hobbies are reasonable and must be satisfied.

Of course, we should make an objective analysis of our fighters' interests and hobbies and correctly guide our soldiers in engaging in their interests and hobbies. If these interests and hobbies are decent and healthy, we should pay attention to fostering them. If, on the contrary, they are low and vulgar, we should help our fighters to distinguish right from wrong and lead them onto a correct path. Giving play to the strong points of our fighters is an important channel for opening up "energy resources' among our soldiers. It is also an effective method in training our fighters to have special skills and competence. We should teach our fighters to put the needs of the revolution first and to be willing to do what they are assigned to do. On the other hand, we should not turn down the reasonable demands of our fighters and treat all these reasonable demands as individualism without making analyses. If a fighter has a certain professional skill when he is recruited into a unit, we should do our best to give play to his skill as long as there is a need for this skill in our units.

Furthermore, Comrade Xiao Wangdong stressed that we should pay attention to solving the practical problems among our young fighters. He said that problems of diversified kinds are a common occurrence during our fighters' term of service. This is especially true in peacetime. In fact, more practical problems have cropped up than in the past. To be concerned about and to help our soldiers to solve their practical problems is one of the important tasks of our cadres. It constitutes one of the important aspects of their political and ideological work. Therefore, this is an issue that we should attach importance to in leading our troops in the new historical conditions. The more our cadres are concerned about their fighters' practical problems, the greater will be the fighters' confidence in our cadres and the closer will be the relations between our cadres and fighters. Therefore, in handling the fighters' practical problems, we should do political and ideological work well as well as help them to solve these problems in the manner of seeking truth from facts. Regarding those problems that should reasonably be solved and have already been solved, we should do political and ideological work to make the fighters feel the concern of the organizations, and by so doing, encourage them to be more diligent in their work and study. Regarding those problems that are difficult to solve immediately, we should clearly explain the reasons to them, teach them to make allowances for the difficulties on the part of the leadership and help them to adopt a correct attitude toward these problems. If some fighters have raised some unreasonable demands, we should not indulgently give them preferential treatment, but should educate them. If we do not handle such problems in this manner, there will be endless problems to solve and it will be impossible to raise our fighters' consciousness.

Comrade Xiao Wangdong concluded by stressing that at present most of our basic-level cadres are new cadres and lack experience. Raising their managerial and educational standards and raising their ability to lead troops has already become an urgent task. It will be impossible for a cadre to teach the fighters if the cadre is ignorant himself. As some comrades have said, if a teacher wants to give others a "cup" of knowledge, he must have a "pail" of knowledge himself. These words are well said. All our cadres should strive to learn more. They should learn the art of war, they should learn politics and they should also learn scientific and cultural knowledge. Moreover, they should continuously expand the field of their knowledge by learning a little history, sociology and psychology. Thus they will become more competent for their posts and become good cadres who enjoy the confidence and respect of our fighters. Only through vigorously raising the standard of our cadres can we thoroughly solve the problems related to leading troops in the new historical conditions.

GUANGDONG MEETING ON BUILDING SPECIAL ZONE

HK200839 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 19 Apr 82

[Text] The Zhuhai Municipal CCP Committee recently held an enlarged standing committee meeting to convey and implement the spirit of the three-level cadres' meeting of the provincial CCP committee. In the light of the actual local situation, the meeting summed up the experiences and lessons in building a special zone, unified ideology, overcame obstacles and was resolved to carry an anticorruption and antidegeneration struggle through to the end to ensure the healthy development of the building of the special zone.

Since the beginning of this year, urban and rural areas in Zhuhai municipality have gradually waged an anticorruption and antidegeneration struggle and struck blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. Some cadres and people have not clearly understood this struggle and the relations between the open-door policy and the policy on enlivening the economy at home, and have therefore worried that the open-door policy might be changed and abolished. The municipal CCP committee holds that this is a one-sided understanding of the spirit of the instruction of the central authorities. At this enlarged standing committee meeting, it organized the comrades present at the meeting to seriously study the instruction of the central authorities and the spirit of the three-level cadres' meeting of the provincial CCP committee and to sum up the experiences and lessons in building the special zone over the past few years. They all held that since Zhuhai was run as a special economic zone on a trial basis, due to the correct implementation of special policies and flexible measures, its economic construction has developed quickly and people's living standards have been raised greatly. The main current of the work style of the party is also good. The great majority of party and cadres have withstood the test.

However, we must see that while we are implementing the open-door policy and the policy on enlivening the economy at home, some unsteady elements will surely corrupt and degenerate and some lawless elements will surely take the opportunity to carry out activities of sabotaging the socialist economy. Therefore, we must by no means think that while we are implementing the open-door policy and the policy on enlivening the economy at home, we can ignore and relax this struggle and dare not to wage it. We must also not think that when we wage this struggle, the policies which have been proved correct by practice begin to waver.

At the meeting, the municipal CCP committee explicitly proclaimed that the open-door policy and the policy on building the special zone will remain unchanged. All of them have unified their ideology, eliminated their worries and inspired their enthusiasm.

HUBEI ISSUES CIRCULAR ON SPRING FARMING

[Excerpts] The Hubei provincial agricultural committee recently issued a circular by telephone to prefectures and municipalities whose main crops are grain and cotton, demanding that they take further measures to solve a number of problems in current production and ensure the smooth progress of spring farming. The following problems are to be solved:

1. Although the majority of areas have sufficient early rice seedlings and have tended them well, it is still necessary to step up the tending and cultivate sturdy seedlings. It is necessary to pay attention to planned and thrifty use of seedlings when transplanting them. Due to the fact that the grass seed has grown poorly everywhere, and there is thus not enough base manure for the early rice, it is necessary to rapidly transport domestic manure to the fields.

2. Sow sufficient cotton according to the plan.

3. Some areas have retained insufficient seeds of green manure crops, or else do not intend to retain any. This will affect next year's agricultural production. It is necessary to act immediately to reserve sufficient seed.

4. Strengthen leadership over households in difficulty and households that lack manpower, technical skills and capital, and help them to solve difficulties and do a good job in spring farming.

HUNAN MEETING ON PREVENTING NATURAL DISASTERS

HK201327 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Apr 82

[Text] The Hunan provincial meeting on preventing flood and combating drought reminded leading people at various levels and the masses of commune members in rural areas to maintain sharp vigilance against natural disasters which could possibly occur this year, and shift the orientation of various work to combating serious disasters.

At present, the administration of water conservancy projects must be strengthened; engineering quality standards should be raised; some water conservancy projects must be rebuilt, while some conveyance systems should be completed; and those half-finished projects which may cause danger must be completed within a specified time. On the other hand, some measures such as closing of hillsides to livestock grazing and fuel gathering to facilitate afforestation, planting trees, growing grass and other measures must be continued so as to do a good job in water and soil conservation.

This meeting was held recently in Xiangtan. During the meeting, the responsible cadres and technical personnel of water conservancy departments at prefectural, municipal and county levels discussed the strengthening of the administration of water conservancy projects. They realized that no matter what types of responsibility systems were implemented in rural areas, collective power should always play an important part. Therefore, we must uphold the unified administration of water conservancy work and unified action in combating disasters. Serious disasters can never be overcome with individual efforts.

Comrades from Anxiang County and (Longdong) water reservoir in Xiangxiang County discussed with the participants in the meeting their own experiences of relying on collective power in combating disasters.

SICHUAN ISSUES URGENT CIRCULAR ON SPRING FARMING

[Text] On 17 April, the Sichuan Provincial People's Government issued an urgent circular on further doing well in grasping spring farming. The circular points out that the situation of spring farming and preparations for farming in our province is good. However, work in all places has not progressed evenly. To further do well in grasping spring farming, leaders at all levels must concentrate forces, go deep into communes and brigades to conduct a general inspection and carry out spring farming. The circular demands that all places and departments adhere to the principle of reducing the number of meetings to a minimum and ensure that leaders at all levels can concentrate their energy and go deep into the spring farming frontline. It is necessary to conduct a general examination of the problems of control over and use of water and draft cattle and implement responsibility systems as quickly as possible.

In the period when water is used for spring farming, grassroots cadres in rural areas and cadres of water conservation departments must personally go to the frontline and resolve contradictions and disputes arising in using water to ensure that water is available for farming and that transplanting is successful. All places must send forces to inspect the situation of draft cattle, brigade by brigade and household by household. Where the draft cattle responsibility system has not been implemented, it is essential to implement it within a specified period and make good use of idle cattle. It is imperative to do well in allocating and supplying chemical fertilizers and arranging for oil and electricity. The quotas for the allocation of chemical fertilizers for all places by the province must be fulfilled without fail in the light of different forms of production responsibility system. No one is allowed to slip in by the back door and no one is allowed to resell fertilizer. Regarding the supply of agricultural machinery and tools, we must also conduct an all-round inspection and promptly solve problems when discovered.

XIZANG RIBAO DISCUSSES TASKS OF RURAL CADRES

[Report on 16 April XIZANG RIBAO commentator's article: "The Glorious Mission of Commune and Production Team Cadres"]

[Excerpts] The article says: In the new situation whereby profound changes are occurring in the rural and pastoral areas following the establishment of production responsibility systems, the question of how to strengthen commune and team leadership, bring into play the role of the grassroots organizations and enable the peasant and herdsman masses to advance along the road of discarding poverty for riches constitutes the glorious mission of the grassroots leadership groups.

The previous management methods of calculating workpoints on the basis of work done and having everyone eat out of a big pot no longer work. We need new methods in order to succeed in leadership work. At present, the leadership groups of many communes and teams in the rural and pastoral areas are strong and effective in this new situation. They are probing and summing up experiences in strengthening leadership work, constantly summing up, perfecting and stabilizing the production responsibility systems, and stimulating the development of production. However, as the minutes of the national rural work conference circulated by the Central Committee point out, for various reasons, the grassroots organizations of some rural communes and brigades are lax and even paralyzed or semiparalyzed. As a result, there are many things for which no one is responsible, while unhealthy phenomena grow and spread. This situation also exists throughout Xizang.

The article says: The grassroots cadres of the communes and teams are the bridge between the party and the masses and the organizers of the masses' political life, agricultural and animal husbandry production, and material and cultural life. The role of the cadres is extremely important in determining whether a commune or production team can develop and become rich. Strengthening the building of the grassroots organizations and bringing into full play the role of the commune and production team cadres is an important problem in current urgent need of solution in the rural and pastoral areas.

The article says: Since the region instituted production responsibility systems, some peasants and herdsmen think that practicing such systems means freedom in everything. Certain commune and team cadres lack ideological preparations for these new changes. They can only see the aspect of individual contracting in decentralized management, and neglect the fact that there should also be an aspect of centralized control in this decentralized management, which is based on the collective ownership system.

They set individual contracting against centralized management and abandon leadership. Certain cadres apply the methods of the past to run things, and when they encounter difficulties they develop negative feelings of being unwilling and unable to run things. Practice has proved that the tasks of commune and team cadres have become heavier, not lighter, as a result of instituting production responsibility systems. For instance, there are the questions of how to correctly implement the party's principles and policies and ensure that the peasants and herdsmen can advance along the socialist road; how to sum up, perfect and stabilize the responsibility systems, lead the peasants and herdsmen in production, consolidate the collective ownership system and speed up the pace of advancing from poverty to riches; how to strengthen ideological and political work in the agricultural and pastoral areas; how to organize and popularize scientific cultivation and animal husbandry; and so on.

Of course, the party and government leading organs must care for and support the grassroots cadres and help and educate them to enhance ideological awareness and work ability. We believe that the commune and team cadres will not disappoint the hopes of the party and masses. They will certainly be able to carry out their glorious mission and lead the peasants and herdsmen to make their proper contributions to achieving a small change in 3 years and building a united, rich and civilized new Xizang.

XIZANG HOLDS INDUSTRY MOBILIZATION RALLY

[Summary] According to XIZANG RIBAO, the regional people's government held a mobilization rally of industry and communications cadres on 16 April, which demanded that the region's industrial and communications front seriously correct the guiding ideology for industrial production, attain a realistic and sound growth rate and focus all work on improving economic returns. Comrade Jiang Cuo, vice chairman of the regional people's government, spoke at the rally. He said: Xizang overfulfilled its quotas for industrial production and transport in the first quarter. The industry and transport quotas for the year were fulfilled by 17.1 and 21.1 percent respectively. Total value of light industry production was 10.3 percent higher than in the same period last year. Output value of nationalities' handicrafts amounted to 22 percent of the year's plan. In the second quarter it is necessary to organize production by focusing efforts on improving economic returns. Comrade Jiang Cuo stressed: "It is very important to take improving economic returns as the guiding ideology for our industrial and communications production. From now on we must seriously correct the guiding ideology for industrial production, stress economic returns and attain a sound and realistic growth rate. This means that we must shift the focus of attention from output value and quantity to economic returns."

The region should concentrate on improving economic returns in the following aspects: 1) Firmly establish the idea of putting quality first; 2) avoid waste in input consumption; 3) carry out technical innovations and encourage people to make rationalization suggestions; 4) improve economic accounting and financial management, and change the passive situation of high production costs and input consumption and serious losses and waste; 5) promote the economic responsibility systems and improve enterprise management. Jiang Cuo said: "Xizang has now launched the work of straightening out the enterprises. We must now continue to further study and appreciate the spirit of the relevant documents of the central authorities and the regional CCP committee and further enhance the understanding of the leaders at all levels regarding the work of straightening out the enterprises." Jiang Cuo stressed in conclusion: "We must strengthen control and command in industry and communications and establish effective rules and regulations. We must overcome the unhealthy trends of failure to take charge of things or report problems, failure to shoulder responsibility, disobedience to controls and commands, the practice of everyone going his own way and delays and haggling in work. Thus we can strengthen leadership, controls and commands in economic work."

XINHUA DISCUSSES ROLE OF LAWYERS IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, April 14 (XINHUA) -- Beijing's 300 lawyers have given legal advice to 23,000 people and defended 2,600 criminal cases in courts in the past three years, according to the first congress of the Beijing Municipal Lawyers Association which closed here today.

During the same period, they wrote indictments and other legal documents for 2,500 people, answered 8,000 letters, participated in settling 30 economic cases and went to courts for civil cases representing 140 litigants.

Since the resumption of the system of advocates in 1979, 153 full-time and 150 part-time lawyers have been working in the city, which has a population of nearly nine million. Legal advisory offices have been set up in the city's 19 districts and counties.

The municipal legal advisory office attracts some 100 visitors every day. They pay a service charge of 50 fen to 2 yuan, except for old people asking about mean of support. They are helped free of charge.

Zhou Naxin, a woman lawyer in the office, recalled an 81-year-old woman she had advised not long ago. The old woman told the lawyer one of her daughters refused to contribute to her support, although her other daughters and her son did so. Zhou Naxin wrote out an indictment for the woman to take to the local court. The court decided that the daughter was required to support her mother in accordance with China's marriage law.

Measures have been taken to train more lawyers and raise the professional level of lawyers in Beijing. These include the establishment of a night law school and regular lectures on civil and criminal law and economic contracts, credit loans, patents, insurance and cases concerning foreign countries. At the municipal people's congress last month, Beijing's government increased the 1982 appropriations for judicial departments.

Most of the lawyers defending cases in courts are appointed by legal advisory offices upon the request of the defendants. Some, who have become known because of successfully defending cases in court, are asked for by name.

China's lawyers follow the practice of mediating disputes where possible to avoid lawsuits. For example, a man quarreled so violently with his wife that she returned to her mother's home and sued for divorce in the local court. She asked a lawyer for advice. The lawyer looked into the situation, persuaded the man to apologize to his wife and advised her to try again. She withdrew the request for divorce and the couple are back together again.

Coal mines overfulfilled the targets of the state plan and increased their total output for the first quarter by 7.5 percent over the same quarter last year. The province produced 25.2 percent of the output target of the year, which meant an increase of 5.4 percent over the same quarter last year. The output value of the province's machine building industry was 23.5 percent more in the first quarter than in the same quarter last year. Among these products, output of farm machines and tools increased by a bigger percentage. The total output value of farm machines and farm tools rose by 42.3 percent. The province produced 7.68 times more small diesel engines for agriculture, 1.8 times more farming pumps and 3.7 times more small tractors in the first quarter than in the same period last year. TIANJIN FLOOD-RELIEF PROJECT -- A project to clear away silt at the outlet of the Duliu Jianhe in Tianjin was begun on 3 April. The Duliu Jianhe was a major flood-relief channel of the Hai He. However, since a tidewater-resisting gate was built at the mouth of the river, the outlet became clogged, and its flood-relief capacity was lowered. Thanks to several years' efforts by the Tianjin channel project department, the silt is being removed. The river's flood-relief capacity is being restored. In 1982, 500,000 cubic meters of silt have been cleared away. [Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 1430 GMT 5 Apr 82 SK]

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN VISITS AGROTECHNICIANS

[Excerpts] Harbin, 21 Apr (XINHUA) -- Recently, Yang Yichen, first secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CCP Committee, visited the scientific research office under the administrative bureau of the Hongxinglong state farm on the northern border and witnessed agricultural scientists and technicians building the great northern wilderness. Yang Yichen warmly praised their fearless and determined spirit in settling down in the border areas and stressed that the party committees at all levels should do their best to provide the necessary working and living conditions for intellectuals. The scientific research office under the administrative bureau of the Hongxinglong state farm is an advanced unit in the Heilongjiang state farm network. It employs 114 scientific and technical workers who volunteered to work in the great northern wilderness after graduating from institutes of higher learning in the 1950's and 1960's.

On the afternoon of 16 April, Yang Yichen together with Secretary of the provincial CCP committee Chen Junsheng [7115 0193 3932], chatted with the scientific and technical workers of this scientific research office. Yang Yichen said: "You have firmly settled down in the border areas in the great northern wilderness. Your spirit of working in this wilderness persistently for decades is truly admirable and worthy of our study and praise. We need your kind of spirit to realize agricultural modernization as quickly as possible." Yang Yichen also asked the scientific and technical workers about their working and living conditions.

HEILONGJIANG ISSUES CIRCULAR ON SPRING FARMING

[Excerpt] According to our sources, on 14 April the provincial people's government issued a circular urging localities to seize the opportunity, overcome difficulties and successfully carry out spring farming.

The circular points out: Waterlogging in the east and the emerging signs of drought in the west have made this year's spring farming even more difficult. There is a danger of poor spring sowing work, even failure to properly sow all the fields, if we underestimate the difficulties and fail to take effective measures to counter them. We must successfully execute spring farming if we are to implement the goal put forth by the provincial CCP committee of developing commercial agriculture on a grand scale and realizing the goal of 30 billion jin of grain and soybeans set for this year.

The circular urges localities to execute spring sowing in accordance with plans, stabilize the grain area and prevent and overcome the tendency of doing as one likes in farming. Efforts should be made to fulfill the wheat sowing plan, expand the paddy area and stabilize the areas for these two crops. Sugarbeet sowing tasks must be successfully implemented in accordance with the plan. The areas for flue-cured tobacco and flax should be strictly controlled in line with the plan and specific local conditions. Areas for these two crops must not exceed the limits. Localities should concentrate [word indistinct] to rush sowing in a timely manner and cut short the sowing period. Efforts should be made to cultivate all the crops in high-yield fields. Waterlogged areas in the east should earnestly and successfully cultivate the waterlogged lowlands; drought-ridden areas in the west must take steps to preserve and increase soil moisture. State farms, communes and brigades should tap soil potential and [words indistinct]. Localities should adopt comprehensive technological measures to ensure a full stand of crop shoots after one sowing. Efforts should be made to publicize the experience of Hailun and Dangyuan Counties and some disaster-ridden state farms in increasing per-unit output by applying comprehensive technological measures. Efforts should be made to lay down standards on the sowing quality of crops and to amplify the procedure for checking sowing tasks already done.

JILIN COMMENTARY URGES SUCCESSFUL SPRING FARMING

[Text] The busiest season for spring farming will soon arrive in our province. Success in spring farming is the foundation for the year's good harvest. Because of continuous increases in agricultural production in the past 4 years, some cadres and people have become blindly optimistic, lowered their guard and slackened their efforts to prepare for natural adversities and carry out spring farming in a timely manner. A tendency to plant large areas of late-maturing crops has emerged. According to weather forecasts, low temperatures may appear during spring sowing and periods in July and August. We should clearly understand this, be mentally and materially prepared for natural adversities throughout the year and improve our ability to combat them. We should make arrangements for crop distribution according to varying weather conditions, plant early, medium and late-maturing crops in proper proportions and strictly guard against planting crops in unsuitable areas or blindly planting late-maturing crops so as to avoid damage. We should designate different planting times for different crops according to the laws of nature and their different requirements as to air temperature, soil temperature and soil moisture content so as not to miss the proper farming season.

To successfully carry out spring farming, we should also readjust crop planting to suit local conditions and conscientiously fulfill state-assigned planting quotas. A tendency of free planting in deviation from state planning guidance has appeared in some localities. To counter this problem, leadership at all levels in rural areas should urge cadres and the masses to give equal consideration to the interests of the state, the collective and and individual and make them understand that, whatever the responsibility systems may be, state planting quotas should be fulfilled so that crops are planted on reasonable amounts of land in suitable locales. In the meantime, the relationship between grain and cash crop production should be properly handled. We should vigorously develop cash crops on the premise that grain output increases steadily. We should also plant different grain crops in proper proportions. We should gradually reduce corn areas, develop paddy rice and sorghum, ensure sufficient millet areas, vigorously restore soybean areas and stabilize cash crop and oil-bearing crop areas.

We should also popularize agroscience and implement measures for increasing production to make spring farming a success. We should apply to spring farming the specific measures and plans we formulated in accordance with the measures for increasing production and the programs for agricultural science and techniques which the provincial agricultural work conference set forth, and in accordance with the specific conditions in each area. The key to spring farming lies in our efforts to upgrade planting quality and ensure quality sowing and full stands of seedlings. Therefore, all localities, in addition to do sowing work, should do a good job in early spring leveling of land, seed selection, popularizing the corn bud forcing treatment [yu mi cui ya zhong], seed dressing and preventing insect pests and seize the opportune time to plant while there is still moisture in the soil to create favorable conditions for full stands of seedlings.

Areas where drought is serious should mobilize the masses to level and to preserve moisture and plow and ridge when soil moisture is at the highest point. In plots where moisture loss is serious, we should tap and make the best use of water sources to accelerate budding. Communes whose paddy fields are short of water should use water in a planned and economic manner to ensure successful transplanting.

ZIMBABWE OFFICIAL ON WITHDRAWING FROM TAIWAN GAMES

[Text] Salisbury, April 14 (XINHUA) -- Zimbabwe has decided to withdraw from the fifth world women's softball championship scheduled to be held in Taiwan this July, Malcoln Burne, president of the Zimbabwe Softball Association, told XINHUA today.

"It may be a trick by the organizing committee of Taiwan" when it said that no "national flag" will be hoisted and no "national anthem" played during the competition, he said. [Beijing XINHUA in English at 0159 GMT on 15 April repeats this item, but omits preceding paragraph]

He added: "Application has been made by the Japan Softball Association for the relocation of the game. We, the Zimbabwe Softball Association, support China for this stand together with Japan. The game should be relocated, and then we will attend."

Burne stressed: "However, if it was still held in Taiwan against the Chinese wishes regarding the flag and anthem question, we will support China as we have done by withdrawing from this game."

BEIJING VIEWS ASPECTS OF NEW TAIWAN BUDGET

OW191352 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Article by (Shi Ping) of station's editorial department: "On Taiwan's New Budget"]

[Text] Compatriots: Recently, Sun Yun-hsuan submitted to Taiwan's Legislative Yuan a budget with a large increase in military expenditures. The budget for the next fiscal year cut investment in communications and economic construction by 20 percent, while the so-called national defense and foreign affairs expenditures, allegedly a top-priority item, increased by 39.5 billion New Taiwan dollars, bringing the total to 144.236 billion yuan, or 42.5 percent of the total budget. Sun Yun-hsuan also stressed that Taiwan would not hesitate to incur a greater debt for additional military purchases. This cannot but invite people's attention.

Everyone knows that an obvious detente has prevailed in the Taiwan Strait since our country's NPC advanced the proposal for a peaceful solution to the Taiwan problem. The people on both sides of the strait, as well as Overseas Chinese, all feel relieved. It is singularly the Taiwan authorities who presently choose to greatly increase their military expenditures and pronounce their willingness to even incur debt to purchase weapons. What do they want to do, after all?

Certain people among the Taiwan authorities brag about what they term the so-called threat of the Chinese communists, thereby cuasing the already-eased Taiwan Strait situation to become tense again. They are doing so because, internally, they find it easier to frustrate the people's desire for peaceful unification of the motherland and, externally, to rely on imperialists to perpetuate the division so as to regard the process of peaceful unification of the motherland.

If this is their way of thinking, they could not be more wrong, because in so doing, they are simply trying to embolden themselves for an adventure that disregards the supreme national interest. This goes against the people's will and the tide and is not favorable for the survival and development of Taiwan's economy. It is detrimental to the well-being of the people on Taiwan. It will do no good for the Taiwan authorities, either.

Everyone knows that Taiwan is facing a severe economic recession. In the words of Taiwan's Minister of Economic Affairs Chao Yao-tung, Taiwan's industry and commerce are facing difficulties unprecedented in several decades and are struggling at the subsistence level. Then why do certain Taiwanese authorities choose to make things worse by greatly slashing the investment in communications and economic construction in favor of arms expansion? In so doing, many construction projects will be abandoned or postponed, including such major ones as the Taipei subways, the southern curve railway and harbor expansion. Can Taiwan's economy be rejuvenated in this way, and freed from a subsistence-level struggle? The economy affects the society at large, and society determines the political situation. Once the economy on which Taiwan's survival depends undergoes an upheaval, Taiwan will find the going still tougher. Besides, such huge military expenditures are bound to lead to a worsening of the people's life. As the old saying goes, the wool will come from the sheep's back -- in the long run, the military expenses will be imposed on the masses of people. At present, more funds are badly needed in the cultural, educational, environmental and many other fields on Taiwan. What the people need is by no means military airplanes and artillery, nor military confrontation over the Taiwan Strait. What they need is conciliation. A budget with increased military expenditures is never popular, and will surely invoke the people's increasing discontent.

Needless to say, the Taiwan authorities adopt this bad policy on the strength of the recently surging international small waves of the two-China plot. However, an adverse current is an adverse current, and will never get anywhere. We would like to advise certain people among the Taiwan authorities not to pin their hopes on foreign imperialist forces. The Chinese proverb says relying on oneself is better than relying on others. After all, China's problems have to be solved by the Chinese ourselves. The CCP has made fair and reasonable proposals. We hope that the atmosphere of detente over the Taiwan Strait continues to prevail. Let us bury the hatchet and work for peace. For the prosperity and unification of the motherland, we can sit down to consult and discuss all of our problems.

CHINA POST ON REAGAN'S WARNING AGAINST COMMUNISM

[Editorial: "Reagan's Timely Warning Against Communism"]

[Text] President Ronald Reagan's warning against the virus of communism on April 9 at Bridgetown, Barbados should be carefully heeded. The U.S. President, on a working vacation in the Caribbean region, warned the Caribbean leaders against the virus of communism and urged them to work with America and make a better life "for all our people in all our countries."

Reagan told Barbados Prime Minister Tom Adams and leaders of four Caribbean nations Thursday: "I think it is important that we work together to find ways in which we can better the life for all our people in all our countries and this is the purpose of the Caribbean initiative."

The U.S. Caribbean initiative was announced by Mr Reagan on February 24 in a speech to the Organization of American States outlining an integrated program of trade, aid and investment for the Caribbean Central American region, coupling it with a warning that the United States is prepared to do whatever is prudent and necessary to protect its security interests in the area. He said that if the United States does not act promptly in defense of freedom, "new Cubas will arise from the ruins of today's conflicts." He added: "We will face more totalitarian regimes -- regimes tied militarily to the Soviet Union, more regimes exporting subversion, more regimes so incompetent yet so totalitarian that their citizens' only hope becomes that of one day migrating to other nations as in recent years they have come to the United States."

Mr Reagan's indictment of Soviet-backed, Cuban-managed support for violent revolution in Central America is most heartening and his recent warning on the virus of communism serves to remind the Caribbean nations' leaders of U.S. determination to help them combat communism. Referring to the El Salvadoran situation, President Reagan told the Central American nations leaders that "rebels supplied by the Soviet Union through Cuba and Nicaragua are attempting to shut the door on democracy for the people of El Salvador." He also expressed his keen concern over Marxist-led Grenada, 150 miles southwest of Barbados, a nation of 100,000 people now ruled by Prime Minister Maurice Bishop who seized power in a 1979 coup.

While the El Salvadoran situation deteriorates with the uncertainty of who will organize the next government, the communists are certainly expected to exploit the uncertain situation to their advantage. The latter are quite determined to wage an all-out war against the democratic government of El Salvador. Even the Chinese communists have expressed their support for the rebels against U.S. interests. Thus once again, we see the spectacle of a united front on the part of the communists in a situation of opposing the free nations despite their superficial conflicts of views on many issues. It proves that the virus of communism is universal, threatening the peace and security of the free world as a whole. All free nations should rally together to support the victims of communist aggression wherever they may be found. The best way to deal with any virus is not only to give the patients the right kind of antibiotic to kill the virus but also to quarantine it from spreading to other areas. Once again, the United States should provide the leadership to quarantining communist aggression all over the world. It is a task for the United States to undertake immediately if it does not wish to lose the fight of preserving world peace and safeguarding security.

In this epic struggle the people of the Republic of China are willing to play their part in supporting President Reagan's anti-communist campaign in the Caribbean region. The Republic of China maintains close relations with many Central American nations including El Salvador, with sizable influential Overseas Chinese residents scattered over that region. They are all anti-communists ready and willing to contribute their part in anti-communist struggle to safeguard their business interests. Those people could be a great asset on the side of democracy and freedom and serve as a useful ally of the American people. Their aid to the present anti-communist campaign would go a long way in countering the local communist threats in the Caribbean region.

PRC UN ENVOY CONDEMNS ISRAELI ATTACK ON MOSQUE

[Excerpt] United Nations, April 16 (XINHUA) -- Israel was under heavy fire for the fourth consecutive day as the United Nations Security Council met this afternoon to consider an Islamic complaint against a recent Israeli armed attack on the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem.

Chinese permanent representative to the United Nations Ling Qing stated that the Chinese Government strongly condemned the Israeli attack and resolutely supported the Palestinian and Arab peoples in their just struggle to recover the lost territories and recover their national rights.

He said "the sanguinary act of violence that took place on April 11 in Jerusalem has further revealed the designs of the Israeli authorities to deliberately alter the legal status, physical features and demographic composition of the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in disregard of the norms of international law and the Geneva Convention.

ECONOMIC TIES WITH UN ORGANIZATIONS EXPANDED

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- China has undertaken over 70 projects to share its experience and expertise with other developing countries, according to a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

The spokesman said the funds, China's contributions to the various U.N. organizations, total 20 million yuan (renminbi). The projects include facilities in China for courses, seminars, conferences and study tours for training in acupuncture, training centers demonstrating fresh water fish-breeding, methane gas generation, small hydro-electric power stations construction, primary cooperative medical service and economic development in the rural areas and sericulture. Also under the U.N. development program, China has provided other developing countries with experts and equipment.

The spokesman said China has accepted development funds offered by the various U.N. organizations amounting to 127 million U.S. dollars. The funds are being used for 200 development projects in China involving various economic sectors as well as education, culture, public health, population census and scientific research.

The biggest project is the purchase for China of 21 large computers for tallying the results of the forthcoming population censes on July 1, 1982. The computers, which cost 15 million U.S. dollars, have been shipped to different locations in China to form a network for the census.

Another U.N. project, the Beijing center for international economic information, consists of a B6810 computer system, five HP3000 series III computer systems and a X140 data entry system. The United Nations Development Program (UNDP) allocated 6.7 million U.S. dollars for building the computer project, which is already in operation.

The spokesman said that China, as a developing country, is entitled to a share of the U.N. development funds.

XINHUA COMMENTARY VIEWS PEACE MOVEMENT IN WEST

OW211620 Beijing XINHUA in English 1540 GMT 21 Apr 82

["Western Peace Movement Against Nuclear Arms Gains New Momentum -- Commentary by Correspondent Chen Weibin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 21 (XINHUA) -- The turbulent international situation and the nuclear arms race between the Soviet Union and the United States have enhanced Westerner's mood for preserving peace and preventing war. The peace movement against nuclear arms, which had became less vocal in Western Europe the last several months, is now gaining new momentum and beginning to grow in the United States and Japan.

Europeans are deeply concerned about a nuclear confrontation between the two superpowers. Japanese who experienced the effects of nuclear radiation during World War II are concerned about the buildup of Soviet and U.S. nuclear arms. Despite numerous disarmament talks in recent years, the Soviet Union has deployed many up-to-date missiles in Europe while the United States is trying to encourage the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to deploy new American missiles in Western Europe.

The peace movement is growing vigorously in the West partly because the economic situation in the United States and Western Europe has deteriorated since the end of last year. These countries are suffering from growing financial deficits, worsening inflation and rising unemployment, but the governments of these Western countries keep increasing military spending. This has led the people in these countries to demand budget cuts for military expenditures, a cessation of the nuclear arms race, more social welfare and an increase in job opportunities.

Last year, the peace movement in Western Europe was generally referred to as a pacifist movement. This is incorrect. It is true that some pacifists participated in the movement who believe that "life in whatever state is better than in war," but many of the participants in the peace movement oppose the deployment of new nuclear weapons by the United States. Other participants oppose the buildup of nuclear arms by the United States and the Soviet Union, and still others oppose the U.S. and Soviet aggression, expansion and deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe. People in Scandinavian countries want a nuclear-free zone in the region.

In the United States, the peace movement is urging the United States and the Soviet Union to freeze the deployment of nuclear weapons. In Japan, the anti-nuclear movement is urging the United States, the Soviet Union and other nuclear countries not to use nuclear weapons. Because of the various objectives by the participants in the peace movement, it not suitable to summarize the nature of the movement as "pacifism."

Although the objectives of the peace movement are different, most of the participants cherish the common desire to prevent war and safeguard peace. In this respect the movement has checked the arms race between the superpowers. The United States and the Soviet Union have tried to influence the peace movement so that it will support their own purposes. U.S. leaders have negative attitudes about the movement, belittle its political meaning and simply attribute the cause of the movement to Soviet propaganda. Soviet leaders are trying to direct the movement against Washington and are trying to use it to curb a U.S. buildup of arms in order to develop the Soviets' own military superiority. In the meantime, the two superpowers are increasing production of nuclear missiles.

Based on their own wartime experiences, Westerners clearly see the threats to peace in the world and to peace and security in Europe that the two superpowers are creating by their nuclear arms race. These Westerners have the potential to unify the objectives of the movement to make it stronger. Only by doing so will they contribute more to the defense of world peace.

AFP: ZHAO COMMENTS ON TAIWAN ARMS QUESTION

BK221224 Hong Kong AFP in English 1123 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 22 Apr (AFP) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that any future deterioration in Sino-American relations would have no consequences on friendly Sino-Japanese relations, according to Japanese sources.

Mr Zhao made the statement in response to Japan's concern over the consequences of deterioration in Sino-American relations while meeting Shigeko Ohira, widow of former Japanese Premier Masayoshi Ohira, who is currently visiting China, the source said.

Premier Zhao dwelled at length on the question of American arms sales to Tawian, saying there was "little space" on the Chinese side for a compromise, the source added. China has so far formally rejected any compromise on the issue. But it has nevertheless agreed to hold talks with Washington on the problem. The talks, started when U.S. Deputy Secretary of State for East Asia and the Pacific John Holdridge visited China, are currently underway here, Mr Zhao said.

However, the premier (?appeared) pessimistic on the outcome of the negotiations. He recalled that at the time of the 1979 Sino-American normalisation, the United States had asked for a time lapse to resolve the problem of arms sales to Taiwan.

"Three years have passed and we are still waiting," Mr Zhao said, adding that the United States had not shown the slightest willingness to resolve the Taiwan problem. "We cannot allow such a situation to go on for any longer," Mr Zhao told Mrs Ohira.

China reacted very moderately recently to the news that the U.S. Congress was studying a plan to supply military spare parts to Taipei. Most diplomats here had expected a sharper reaction from Beijing such as the recall of the Chinese ambassador to the United States for consultation.

Meanwhile, Mr Zhao reaffirmed that the United States should respect China's sovereignty over Taiwan, a principle which forbids Washington from selling weapons to Taipei. Beijing considers that such sales constitute an "intervention" in its internal affairs, and has consistently maintained that China would not compromise on the principle.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. DEBATE ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS

[Article by Zhang Dezhen [1728 1795 4176]: "The Dispute Over the Freeze of Nuclear Weapons"]

[Text] Since this spring, a debate on freezing the nuclear weapons of the United States and the Soviet Union has been carried on in the United States and has become a focal point in the political life in the country.

The prelude of this debate was the mass antinuclear movement which sprung up vigorously in the United States. Since March, several million people in hundreds of cities and towns distributed over an area from Vermont in the northeast to California in the west have been engaged in the movement calling for freezing production of, experimentation with and deployment of nuclear weapons.

This movement has been carried out in the form of voting, demonstrations and marches, petitions and propaganda campaigns on the nuclear terror. In the wake of this movement, the U.S. Government, Congress and the mass media have also become involved in this debate on freezing nuclear weapons. The debate has been revealed in a concentrated form in two opposing motions put before the U.S. Senate. The first motion was put forth by Senators Kennedy and Hatfield, advocating a freeze on the nuclear weapons of the United States and the Soviet Union at the present level, and then realization of reductions through negotiations. The other was put forth by Senators Jackson and Warner, suggesting to first reduce the nuclear weapons of the two countries to an equal level through negotiations, and then to realize a freeze. Both motions have quite a few supporters in the Senate and House. President Reagan and Secretary of State Haig made statements, respectively on 31 March and 6 April, to support the proposal of Jackson and Warner, and to object to that of Kennedy. Reagan said that the government's stand on this issue was "to enable a long-term, mutual and verifiable freeze based on an equilibrium reached after a large reduction of the two countries' nuclear strength."

The dispute between the two sides over the freeze of nuclear weapons, which can be summed up as freezing followed by negotiations or vice versa, is concentrated on the following problems:

1. How does one appraise the relative nuclear strength of the United States and the Soviet Union? Will it be favorable to the United States if the nuclear strength is frozen at the present level? Those who advocate freezing nuclear weapons realize that the United States and the Soviet Union have gone "far enough" in the arms race, both sides possess thousands of nuclear warheads which are sufficient to destroy each other, and the nuclear strength of both sides is "generally equal." Under such circumstances, a freeze will have no harmful effect on the United States. On the other hand, it is only when both sides "are on an equal footing" that "the conditions are suitable for the Soviet Union to conscientiously consider the freeze." However, those who oppose an immediate freeze think that since the Soviet Union has an "obvious predominance" over the United States in terms of land-based intercontinental missiles and long- and medium-range missiles deployed in Europe, freezing the present level of nuclear weapons will mean "to fix the Soviet military predominance in a legal form." This is not only "unfavorable" but even "dangerous" to the United States. Haig said that an immediate freeze "will turn the unstable and unequal disparity in military power into something permanent"; such a proposal is "not only a bad principle for national defense and safety but also a bad principle for arms control."

2. Can such a freeze force the Soviet Union to hold disarmament talks in accordance with the terms of the United States? Those who favor a freeze before talks hold that this will help check the Soviet Union's momentum of arms expansion, "constitute a great pressure" and force both sides to hold talks in the face of this freeze. But those who hold an opposite view reckon that an immediate freeze means precisely that they have been taken in by the Soviet Union and "abandoned" the means of bargaining with the Soviet Union by forcing it to sit down and hold talks. At a press conference, Ronald Reagan stressed that a freeze will "obstruct any talks to achieve a reduction," because if the Soviet Union is leading and the United States is lagging behind, the United States will not be able to urge the Soviet Union to hold talks or make reductions.

3. What really can control the nuclear expansion of both sides? Those who favor an immediate freeze hold that only by first "stopping" the nuclear race can this race be "gradually de-escalated." Besides, it will also be possible for the United States to reduce its military expenditure and improve its economic situation. On the other hand, those who hold an opposite view stress that this is a mere illusion. They hold that the key to controlling armaments is to "maintain a position of strength" and "a reliable military parity." They think that as long as the Soviet Union has gained an upper hand in nuclear arms, a freezing of nuclear arms will not help the United States "restore strategic parity with the Soviet Union." Nor will it help attain the goal of controlling armaments.

Although people may be puzzled by the conflict between the two views on nuclear arms which are diametrically opposed to each other, this conflict is still essentially the continuation of the protracted heated debate between the two groups in the United States on the strategy toward the Soviet Union. The major point at issue is still this: Under the situation in which the Soviet Union is constantly promoting arms expansion and seeking military superiority, what policies, after all, should be adopted by the United States to check Soviet expansion and improve the United States position of strength? Should the United States pin hopes on "detente," "disarmament," "talks" and "freeze," or should it focus its attention on strengthening and perfecting the U.S. nuclear forces and "seek peace through actual strength?" With regard to this question, there has been a struggle between two groups in the United States since the 1960's. Over the past 2 years, due to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the Poland incident, the hardliners who advocate the strengthening of nuclear forces get the upper hand, thus suspending the debate. Now, this debate has broken out once again. This has much to do with the international and domestic conditions the United States faces. First of all, the Reagan administration's tough policy on strengthening military confrontation against the Soviet Union and particularly the recently delivered public speeches by Reagan and other U.S. officials on fighting a limited nuclear war not only have struck terror into Western Europe but have also touched the American public's sensitive nerves of being afraid of nuclear disasters. They are afraid that under the current situation of turbulence and restlessness, troubles will be stirred up if the Reagan administration's tough line fails. At the same time, more and more people are disturbed by and also worry about the Reagan administration's massive arms expansion plan and the continuous intensification of the U.S.-Soviet arms race. The American public's nuclear arms freeze movement reached its high tide against just this kind of background. Second, although the United States has economic difficulties, faces a sharp increase in the unemployment rate and has huge financial deficits, the Reagan administration has put forward a huge military budget and has even greatly reduced social welfare expenditures. All these things have aroused strong public resentment. Many Americans have called for cutting down military expenditures and increasing social welfare expenditures.

Third, the antinuclear movement in Western Europe has produced certain effects on the United States. In particular, the recent canvassing and touring activities in over 50 cities of the United States carried out by some antinuclear activists from Western Europe have also produced certain effects. Finally, the unceasing efforts made by the Soviet Union to launch peace offensives and the Soviet suggestions for freezing nuclear arms deployment have apparently tempted some people to a certain extent. This series of incidents have revived the debate on the U.S. strategy against the Soviet Union.

To prevent a further expansion of the antinuclear movement and to prevent the debate on nuclear arms freeze from interfering with the administration's efforts to strengthen defense, the Reagan administration has on various occasions criticized the viewpoint that advocates immediately bringing about a nuclear arms freeze and has also stated that it is ready to meet with Brezhnev in June this year to discuss issues concerning U.S.-Soviet disarmament. Judging from the current situation, we can see that the viewpoint of Reagan and his supporters still gets the upper hand in Congress. However, trends in the development of this debate are really worth noticing.

RENMIN RIBAO ON LOW MORALE OF KARMAL TROOPS

["International Jottings" by Yun Fei [0061 7378]: "A Vain Struggle"]

[Text] It was reported that Babrak Karmal and his ilk called out the armed forces last week to surround some residential areas in Kabul. They went from door to door in an attempt to press-gang able-bodied men. In utter disregard of the original legal restriction on minimum conscription age and of the stipulation on exemption from performing military service by some people engaging in certain professions, they carried out unbridled search operations and immediately dispatched the men they had press-ganged to the barracks. Thus we can see the desperation they were in.

As a result of insurrections, casualties and desertion, the number of troops of the Kabul regime has drastically dropped from 90,000 at the time of the Soviet invasion to about 30,000 at present. Of these, one-third are new recruits who have recently been press-ganged. They generally underwent a training period of less than a week during which they fired a few rounds of live ammunition before they were sent to the front. Quite a few of them did not want to aim their guns at their compatriots and, by using various means to coordinate with the guerillas, caused total disarray among the government troops. It was precisely under these circumstances that the Karmal regime had to resort to indiscriminate press-ganging to replenish its troops. The morale of these mercenary troops serving as lackeys of the Soviet occupation army was low at the start, but now they are trying to make up the numbers by knocking together the remnants of a routed army. Will it be possible to avert the doom of the Kabul regime in this way? Of course not. This is only a vain struggle.

RENMIN RIBAO NEWSLETTER ON FALKLANDS DISPUTE

["Newsletter From Britain" by correspondent Xu Qingmei [6079 1987 5019]: "Peace Is Precious"]

[Text] The dispute between Argentina and Britain over the Malvinas has now been going on all of 3 weeks. U.S. Secretary of State Haig visited Argentina again on 15 April for 4 days of continuous talks with Argentine leaders. On 19 April he submitted to Britain a plan for peacefully solving the Malvinas dispute. After repeated British Cabinet discussions, the new foreign secretary, Pym, will fly to Washington on 22 April to put forth a counterproposal and continue the talks.

British officials have not announced the specific contents of the plan submitted by Haig on 19 April, but according to the British press, the main points of the plan are: Britain and Argentina can retain for the time being their different stands on the question of sovereignty over the Malvinas and negotiate a solution by diplomatic channels during a transition period; during this period, Britain and Argentina will set up a joint local administration and police force to administer the Malvinas; a "free zone" will be set up 400 miles around the islands, and Argentine troops will withdraw from the Malvinas, while the British task force will withdraw from the "free zone." British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher announced in Parliament on 20 April that this plan did not satisfy the right of self-determination by the people of the Falklands and said that further negotiations were needed. According to other reports, the British Government is reserving its attitude regarding the establishment of a joint British-Argentine police force on the Malvinas. Judging by the atmosphere of the parliamentary debate, the majority of members of Parliament advocate solving the dispute by negotiation. On the other hand, however, today when negotiations are still going on and the deadlock has not been broken, the British task force has already passed Ascension Island and is getting closer and closer to the Malvinas sea area. The question of whether the Malvinas dispute will be solved peacefully or by war remains a topic of discussion in London.

Many political and military observers who have analyzed the conditions for warfare in the South Atlantic and the military postures of Britain and Argentina hold that while Britain has definite naval superiority, there are many unfavorable conditions to Britain for fighting a sea battle.

The British task force set sail on 5 April on its long voyage to the Malvinas, 7,000 nautical miles away. According to reports, the fleet is made up of 15 combat vessels including 2 aircraft carriers, carrying 20 Sea King and Harrier aircraft; 1 landing assault ship, equipped with 4 tanks and 4 amphibious landing craft; 5 destroyers, equipped with Sea Dart antiair missiles; and 7 frigates, equipped with antiship missiles. The 16 support and supply vessels include 5 tank landing ships, 1 repair vessel, 4 tugs, 3 oil tankers and 3 supply ships. There are 27 merchant ships pressed into temporary service for transport, hospital, logistics, supply and other purposes. There are also a number of nuclear-powered attack submarines. A further 20 or so aircraft have recently been dispatched to strengthen air cover over the fleet.

People here say that the fact that Britain has sent a fleet to sea in quite a short time, armed with advanced conventional weapons and highly-efficient VTOL planes, illustrates Britain's standard of combat readiness and training. However, there are many difficulties in fighting a distant war. The ships are far from home, and the troops cannot stand sea life for too long, nor is such a situation favorable for prolonged combat, in particular there are the factors of the long supply line and the almost inevitable casualties the British troops will suffer in a battle to land on the islands. People say that these unfavorable conditions are all factors that the British policymakers must consider when deciding to take military action. Observers point out the impetus for achieving a peaceful solution of the Malvinas dispute is growing at present, and more and more people in Britain realize that "war benefits nobody, peace is precious." As far as both Britain and Argentina are concerned, solving the dispute by peaceful means is better than going to war.

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE 23D SESSION OPENS

[Text] Beijing, April 22 (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the National People's Congress opened its 23d Session this afternoon with consideration of the nation's new constitution at the head of its agenda. The meeting was presided over by Ye Jianying, chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee.

The constitution, a revised draft of which was adopted by the national constitutional revision committee, with Ye Jianying at its head, consists of a preamble and four chapters -- general principles; rights and obligations of citizens; state structure; and the national flag, emblem and capital. It contains 140 articles.

The greatest change the constitution proposes is the reinstatement of a chairman of the People's Republic, and the establishment of the Central Military Council of the People's Republic to lead the armed forces of the country.

On behalf of the revision committee, Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the committee, explained the principal points of the revised draft.

Peng Zhen said some provisions of the draft concerning state structure embody important reforms and new developments in China's state system.

He said since the 1949 founding of the People's Republic, China has had three constitutions. The 1954 document, he said, was comprehensive in content, while the 1975 and 1978 documents, restricted by the historical conditions at that time, were undesirable. He said, since the third plenary session of the Central Committee of the Communist Party at the end of 1978, the nation's situation has greatly changed. The 1978 constitution no longer suits the needs of the current situation. This calls for the changes in the constitution.

The draft of the revised constitution has been worked out by the national constitutional revision committee through solicitation of opinions from various localities, departments and quarters in the past one and a half years.

Peng Zhen listed some of the contents of the revised draft:

-- Adherence to the four fundamental principles -- socialism, the people's democratic dictatorship, Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, and leadership of the Communist Party of China.

-- China is a socialist state under the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants.

-- The socialist system is fundamental and the fundamental task of the Chinese people is to concentrate their efforts on socialist modernization.

-- Socialist moral build-up and culture is indispensable to socialist material development. Ideological and ethical education will be conducted among the people for the development of education, science and culture.

-- The basic rights of citizen are provided in accordance with socialist democracy and the socialist legal system.

-- The system of people's congress will be strengthened and the functions and powers of the N.P.C. Standing Committee expanded. The State Council will follow the system of responsibility of the premier. The Standing Committee of the State Council consists of the premier, vice-premiers, state councillors and secretary-general.

-- Regional national autonomy will be upheld and the national autonomous areas will have more autonomy.

-- The political power at the grassroots level will be strengthened.

The draft will be considered and approved by the N.P.C. Standing Committee before being made public for nationwide discussion.

In accordance with views gathered from the nationwide discussion, the constitutional revision committee will further revise the draft, and then submit it to the National People's Congress to be convened later this year.

Attending today's session were also Vice-Chairmen of the N.P.C. Standing Committee Ulanhu, Wei Guoging, Liao Chengzhi, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Xu Deheng, Xiao Jingguang, Shi Liang, Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun and Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan.

Also present were Jiang Hua, president of the Supreme People's Court; Huang Huoqing, chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate; and Standing Committee members of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference now in Beijing.

The session will discuss the draft tomorrow.

BAN YUE TAN ON PROBLEM OF REVISING CONSTITUTION

HK220738 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0930 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 21 Apr (XINHUA) -- The latest issue of BAN YUE TAN which is about to be published, carries an article which says: Owing to the constraints imposed by historical conditions in the past and the momentous changes that have taken place since then, many aspects of the current Chinese Constitution are unsuited to current political and economic life and to the needs of the people in regard to constructing a modernized nation. For this reason there is a need for a relatively systematic revision of the constitution.

The Chinese Constitution currently in effect was first approved by the First Session of the Fifth NPC held in March 1978.

In discussing the faults and deficiencies of the current constitution, the article entitled "On the Problem of Revising the Constitution" points out that this constitution was adopted soon after the smashing of the "gang of four," and there was not enough time to either comprehensively sum up the experiences and lessons of socialist revolution and reconstruction since the founding of the PRC or to thoroughly sort out and eliminate from the clauses of the constitution the "leftist" thinking left over from the 10 years of disorder. The result of this is that some of the constitution's clauses reflect outdated views of political theory and do not suit objective conditions.

The article also says that it should be pointed out that the currect constitution does not and could not take into account the shift in the focus of the country's work to socialist modernization, the new scientific analysis of class conditions within the country that has been made by the Central Committee, the great steps that have been taken towards democratization and the demands for further progress in this area, the great reform that is being carried out and must continue to be carried out of the country's leadership and economic systems, and the need to clearly stipulate the autonomous rights of each national minority area.

The article says that insofar as the current constitution is the basic law of the country, there are many clauses which are incomplete, unclear and insufficiently well-grounded and concrete.

The article also says that the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China," which was adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and sums up the basic experiences of socialist revolution and socialist reconstruction, should serve as the guiding ideology for the constitutional revision.

The article believes that the revised constitution should both reflect and aid efforts to reform and perfect our country's socialist political, economic and cultural systems. It needs to fully embody the interests and aspirations of the people of all nationalities during this new period of historical development.

The article says that this constitutional revision will firmly uphold the correct principle of unity between leaders and the masses. Conscientiously summing up the historical experience of the constitutions formulated and revised since the founding of the PRC, we should take our own experience as the basic foundation, but should, at the same time, study the constitutions of contemporary foreign countries, especially those of socialist countries, and absorb their good points.

The article says that the draft for the revised constitution is now being discussed by the constitutional revision committee. The Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, which is expected to be held in the latter half of this year, will deliberate on the draft outline for the constitution of the People's Republic of China. The sixth NPC will be formed and will carry out its work in accordance with the revised constitution.

ARTICLE CITES CORRUPTION IMPORTED FROM WEST

[Article by Lai Haiyan [6351 3189 2518]: "Thoughts on Lin Zexu"]

[Text] Whenever people mention the patriots who performed good deeds and got rid of evils for the people, they cannot help but recall Lin Zexu.

At the time when opium had become a serious social problem, Lin Zexu courageously came out to uphold the banning of opium amid a great clamor of opposition. His foresight and sagacity evoked people's respect. However, he merely opposed the importation of opium, which poisoned our people, from the West. He did not oppose all Western things. Moreover, in the history of modern China, he was one of China's forerunners in learning from the West.

His advocacy of "learning from" the West, in the same way as his advocacy of "banning opium," was based upon benefiting our country and our people. In both these advocacies, we see his enthusiastic patriotism.

In speaking on adopting a "take-over policy" in learning from abroad, Lu Xun made a clearer and pithier explanation. He upheld that we had to learn from all foreign things so long as they were good. He raised the example of a young man who got an old house and criticized three foolish ways the young man might react. First, the young man might fear to enter the house. Lu Xun called such a young man a "fool." Second the young man might "burn the house to ashes." This showed that the young man was "muddle-headed." Third, he might "stealthily and happily enter the bedroom and, with a vengeance, take the opium that had been left there by the former owner of the house." This showed that he was "good-for-nothing." Lu Xun then pointed out what the young man did was entirely different from those who upheld a "take-over policy." These words of Lu Xun's have remained of significance in giving warning to our people.

Today, we have already put an end to the practice of blind exclusion of everything foreign and the practice of closing our eyes and stopping our ears to what is happening abroad. We have widened our field of vision and begun to really carry out the "take-over policy." For example, we have introduced advanced science and technology from abroad in order to facilitate our catching up with the developed countries in the world. We have referred to some aspects of the educational and cultural undertakings abroad in order to make foreign things serve China. We have introduced advanced equipment and management from abroad to promote our economic development. All the above measures have won the support of our people throughout the country. These measures in carrying out the "take-over policy" are beneficial and advantageous to us and we should be courageous in continuously carrying them out and should not be apprehensive in so doing.

However, we should also pay attention to opposing another kind of "take-over policy." For, although Lin Zexu's heroic deeds in banning opium continue to win the praise of our people even today and although those who "stealthily and happily enter the bedroom and take, with a vengeance, the opium that had been left there by the former owner of the house" were deridingly called by Lu Xun good-for-nothings, there are still quite a large number of people who even now are keen on introducing "opium" from abroad and spreading "opium" in our country. The only difference is that the opium that they are introducing into our country is "spiritual opium." This is by no means an exaggeration. It is a fact that everybody can see that a large number of pornographic and reactionary audio and video tapes have been smuggled into our country through various channels. Many units and individuals are so imprudent as to have copied and sold these tapes. Quite a large number of nude pictures, calendars with nude pictures and other pornographic publications have been smuggled into our country.... The penetration of this "spiritual opium" has already seriously corrupted the minds of a large number of our cadres and especially the minds of our youngsters and youths, and brought about many evils. However, some of our cadres have such a low consciousness as to turn a blind eye and a deaf ear to this startling malpractice of poisoning our people with "spiritual opium." Some of them have even gone so far as to be blinded by the lust for gain, to treat corrupt things as being mystical and wonderful or to regard rubbish as treasure and have indulged, shielded and helped the evildoers in spreading these poisons. By giving the green light to the introduction and propagating of "spiritual opium" these people are, in fact, allowing poison traders to imperceptibly kill our people.

Since Lin Zexu, a man who lived in the 1930's, knew that in learning from abroad we should "take over" the new knowledge and new technology useful to our country and reject the extremely poisonous opium, we, who are living in socialist new China in the 1980's, must certainly be more sober-minded and more far-sighted in distinguishing poison from sugar and must hate spritual opium more bitterly than Lin hated opium in the past. It is precisely for this reason that I think that Lin's foresight and sagacity remain to be something we can refer to even today.

COMMENTATOR ON IMPORTANCE OF CHEMICAL PRODUCTS

[Commentator's article: "Actively Develop the Production of Chemical Products for Daily Use"]

[Text] In developing the production of consumer goods, we should put chemical products of everyday use in an important position. Like the industries for articles of everyday use, the textile industry, the food industry, the construction materials industry, and the communications and transportation industries, the industry of chemical products for everyday use is closely related to the people's life. In the past, we did not pay adequate attention to this matter. In the future, we must take this industry as a top priority and direct proper efforts to it.

Chemical products for everyday use are of great variety and have extremely extensive uses. Products like spices, flavoring essence, ornaments, photosensitive materials, detergents, and so forth leave much room for development. Shanghai Municipality has summed up the experiences in developing the production of ornaments as a case of "three less and three more." "Three less" means less money invested, less energy consumed and less waste involved. "Three more" means more employment opportunities offered, more taxes and profits realized and more money that can be withdrawn from circulation. The case of "three less and three more" shows that this line allows quick economic returns. It provides us with a good way to create and accumulate wealth.

There are relatively favorable conditions for our development of chemical products for everyday use. A foundation has been laid for our chemical industry. Large supplies of raw materials are available. The climate is ideal and industrial crops abound.

But according to statistics for 1979, the total value of principal chemical products for everyday use produced by our light industrial system was less than 10 percent of the total output value of chemical products. Despite an increase in the past 2 years, the former still accounts for a very small percentage in the national economy. By the standards of developed countries, it is especially backward. Now, the supply of many chemical products for everyday use has fallen short of market needs. Output is inadequate and the variety is too limited. There is much room for development.

Chemical products for everyday use involve a relatively great number of departments and trades. Overall plans must be worked out and developments must be sought in a planned manner with an eye to what should be given priority. Now things are such that those products in short supply are taken up with great enthusiasm. Everyone scrambles to produce them so that certain products once in short supply are now in excessive supply, causing accumulated stocks and losses. We must overcome this situation of blindly seeking development and getting things done in a rush without regard to the overall situation. All departments and areas must be guided by the state's unified plans and market needs and must organize production in light of their own features and their own strong points. For example, the light industrial department can give full play to its own superior features by making the fullest use of natural resources. The chemical industry department must not shirk its responsibility to provide raw materials for the development of chemical products for everyday use. Apart from energetically developing raw materials and intermediates required for chemical products, the chemical industry department can also directly produce chemical products for everyday use urgently needed on the market. To coordinate production, some trades can establish national companies devoted to special fields and exercise control over such aspects as raw materials, production, sales and export. Thus, we can prevent overlapping production and avoid waste.

To develop the production of chemical products for everyday use, we must promote comprehensive utilization. Production of chemical products for everyday use calls for large supplies of raw materials. Some of these materials come from petrochemical enterprises and some from production units in such fields as dyes, medicine, auxiliaries, and so forth. The intermediates for certain chemical products of everyday use are sometimes also the intermediates for other chemical industries. Those undertakings devoted to the production of chemical products for everyday use abroad are generally large-sized comprehensive enterprises which produce not only dyes, medicines, auxiliaries and insecticides but also chemical products for everyday use. To develop our chemical products for everyday use in a planned manner, we should break through boundaries between trades and areas and follow the road of integration and cooperation.

Now science and technology in the world are developing in an ever changing manner. In the area of chemical products for everyday use, we still have many skills to learn. In developing chemical products for everyday use, we must strengthen scientific research, train relevant technical personnel and pay attention to acquiring technical knowledge from foreign countries. In light of market needs, we must continuously improve on old products and create new ones and satisfy better the varied needs of consumers. We must properly handle the business of promoting scientific and technical results. The results of scientific research units must be passed on to enterprises as quickly as possible and applied in production without delay. If a new product successfully trial-produced by one unit is needed by another, we should adopt the method of effecting a transfer with compensation. We should avoid starting a job all over again and repeating the same kind of work. In a word, we must make overall plans and cooperate in sharing work. By so doing, there will surely be a great future for the development of our industry of chemical products for everyday use.

RENMIN RIBAO CARRIES HYDROPOWER EXPERT'S ARTICLE

[Article by Zhang Guangdou [1728 0342 2435]: "Several Views on the Development of Hydropower"]

[Text] The editorial published by RENMIN RIBAO on 8 March 1982 "Pay More Attention to Developing Hydroelectric Power" is of prime importance. As a worker in hydropower construction, I would like to express my feelings on this.

The editorial pointed out: "Hydroelectric stations are projects that can simultaneously bring to fruition primary and secondary energy sources. Building a hydroelectric station is alone equivalent to building a thermal powerplant and doing all the necessary work of coal extraction and transport construction required by the latter." This is very obvious. However, some people hold that with the same amount of investment, the kilowatt generation of a thermal powerplant is greater than that of a hydropower station, and building a thermal powerplant is much more fruitful, cheaper and quicker than building a hydroelectric station. Obviously, this view is lopsided, and is of no help in developing hydroelectric power. As a matter of fact, the total investment in building a thermal powerplant and doing all the necessary work of coal extraction and transport construction is not less than in building a hydropower station. Neither is the construction period of the former shorter than the latter.

The editorial also pointed out: "In developing and utilizing waterpower resources, we have gained some experiences and set up a contingent of tens of thousands of technicians who are specialized in survey, design, construction, operations and scientific research. We also have a large number of qulified personnel who are trained in the work of building small hydropower stations in rural areas. We are therefore in a good position to exploit more waterpower resources." This is a very good idea! The advanced technology of foreign countries must be studied, but why should we not do what we are able to do? Only practice can make us more skillful. The quality of a project and its construction speed depend mainly on management, not just on technology. Therefore, we must improve our managerial system. It is feasible to make use of foreign investment to build hydropower stations, but these projects, on their completion, must be helpful in producing export goods so as to earn foreign exchange to repay debts and interest. We must take all-round considerations into account when using foreign investement. We can make use of it as occasion demands, but we should not rely on it. The editorial suggested that in building hydropower stations, joint investment can be organized between the central and local authorities. This is a correct way; but of course, we will not refuse to make use of some foreign investment for this purpose.

The editorial said: "There are rich water resources in the southwest, the northwest and the central-south regions of our country. In these areas, we must build more large and medium-sized hydroelectric stations, and correspondingly we must develop in these areas those industries with fairly high power consumption and strive to 'transmit electricity from the west to the east, of our country. In comparatively energy-deficient areas in northeastern, eastern and northern China, we must step up the development of medium-sized power stations." "Transmitting electricity from the west to the east" required technology for transmitting high-voltage electricity over a long distance. We must go all-out to develop technology in this field and learn from foreign countries that which we do not know, and digest what has been learned to raise our own ability. It is also important to develop medium-sized hydropower stations. In the preceding stage, we attached less importance to this problem, but now that we are paying close attention to it, things will go well. In developing this aspect, we can also make use of investment by the local authorities.

As for those large and medium-sized hydropower stations which have come into operation, we must exercise good control over them by making full use of natural water, wasting no water and generating more electricity.

At present, some hydropower stations are operated to excess to generate electricity even when the water source is almost drying up. This often makes the water level of reservoirs quickly fall, and thus the water flow is not strong enough to be able to generate more electricity. On the other hand, some hydropower stations fail to make full use of water, and let it flow away. Things vary from place to place. Anyhow, the wasting of water is not encouraged, and we must solve this problem by some positive methods.

The editorial demanded: "It is necessary to seriously carry out early the work of consolidating and reinforcing the ranks in charge of hydropower construction." This is also quite right. We must make good arrangements for expenditure in this field of work.

However, what is not mentioned in the editorial is the problem of how to share the investments among the departments concerned in building a hydropower project. As we know, many hydropower projects have comprehensive uses, such as flood control, irrigation, navigation, generating electricity and fishery. At present, all the investments are made only by the departments in charge of hydropower work. The other departments are not responsible for investment and do not take into account the economic rationality of the plans. They give too much thought to long-term interests and often put forth excessive demands which are unrealistic in the short term. As a result, the investment in building a hydropower station become too large. Therefore, investments should be shared among all the departments concerned, which must shoulder the economic burdens in this respect. If it is impossible to do so, the projects can be postponed until conditions are ripe.

DENG LIQUN ATTENDS FILM AWARD CEREMONY

[Text] Beijing, April 21 (XINHUA) -- The annual Ministry of Culture awards were presented this morning to 28 films produced in 1981. "Happiness Knocks at the Door," a story set in the countryside, took first prize for a feature film.

The prize winners include nine feature films, a children's film, the film of a stage play, a cartoon, six documentaries, eight science and education films and dubbings for two foreign films. The film makers were presented with a bronze statuette of a young woman holding a flower for feature films and bronze statuettes of two Young Pioneers holding a big hoop for a children feature film and a cartoon film. They also got monetary awards which ranged from 800 to 3,000 yuan each.

Speaking at the ceremony, Chen Huangmei, vice-minister of culture, said 1981 had seen a marked progress in film production with 105 feature films produced, 29 more than the year's plan. Fifty percent of the films were on contemporary themes and quite a proportion of them were directed by young directors. Chen Huangmei expressed his satisfaction that themes and styles were more diversified. He said, eight films had rural settings as against two the previous year. The vice-minister urged film makers to make a plan for the next three years. Films, he said, should reflect the colorful life of the people with more diversified themes and styles. Emphasis should be placed on contemporary themes, particularly life and struggles of the people, Chen Huangmei said. The vice-minister called on film makers to penetratingly study the life of the people, raise their ideological level and learn from society.

Attending today's ceremony were Deng Liqun, head of the Propaganda Department of the Communist Party Central Committee; He Jingzhi, deputy head of the Propaganda Department; Zhou Weizhi, acting minister of culture, and an audience of one thousand.

Top 1981 Films Selected

[Text] Beijing, April 22 (XINHUA) -- "Happiness Knocks at the Door," a feature film depicting rural family life and the Chinese custom of respecting their elders, received top honors from the Ministry of Culture. It was announced at a meeting here yesterday. The comedy produced by the Shanghai film studio set a record with 4,212 prints.

Among the nine other feature films named are three historical films praised for promoting patriotism. "Xian Incident" documents the 1936 event in which Chiang Kai-shek was arrested by Zhang Xueliang and Yang Hucheng, two Kuomintang generals, and with the help of the Communist Party made to agree to nation-wide resistance against the Japanese aggression. "Nanchang Uprising" presents the first act of the communist-led armed forces in 1927. "Long Tortuous Road" is based on the true story of a peasant turned general in the Red Army. Among films with contemporary theme honored are "Neighbors" and "Sha Ou." The former portrays a veteran cadre who refused privileges and the latter is a story about Chinese women volleyball players. Another feature film "Regret for the Past" based on a short story by Lu Xun manages to catch the melancholy tinge that appears in the original writing by this great man of letters.

The ministry cited a total of ten features, one opera film, one cartoon, six documentaries, eight science educational films and two dubbings of foreign films. The films were chosen by a 16-member appraisal board composed of the acting minister of culture, noted film critics and artists.

HU QIAOMU DISCUSSES BOURGEOIS LIBERALIZATION

HK161328 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0920 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 16 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In an article entitled "On Bourgeois Liberalization and Others" in HONGQI No 8 published today [as received], Hu Qiaomu, secretary of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee, called for preventing the abuse [lan yong 3348 3838] of the concept of bourgeois liberalization and paying attention to clearly drawing some important distinctions.

After that, the article said, for example, it is a justified democratic right for a communist or a citizen to express his critical views on a certain decision, a certain aspect of work, or a certain responsible person of a certain party organ. This should neigher be regarded as rejecting and opposing the CCP's leadership, nor as an act of bourgeois liberalization. For another example, the freedom of academic research and that of literary and artistic creation are necessary for the development of science and arts. Both of them have nothing to do with bourgeois liberalization.

The article said,if anyone wants to firmly reject, oppose and undermine the socialist cause of China; deny, oppose and undermine the CCP's leadership over the Chinese socialist cause; and demand and try to replace socialist democracy and the whole socialist system with the liberal system of the bourgeoisie; we must wage a resolute struggle against him no matter how he defends himself.

The article said, at present, some newspapers, magazines, publishing houses, and culture and arts units have shown to different degrees a wrong tendency of being in pursuit of the commercialization of the spiritual products. They "have taken money as the end-all," and have thus enabled some things, which obviously have negative influence and corrosive effect on people's thinking, to become prevalent. Some people even publicly claim that our publishing work and cultural cause should not be monopolized by the state and the society, but be open to private individuals to run independently. We must pay serious attention to and thus conscientiously take actions to redress these tendencies of bourgeois liberalization emerging in the cultural field.

In discussing the problem of the appraisal criteria for literary and artistic works, the article said, we must appraise a piece of work in view of its ideological content as well as its artistic form. We should not simply sum up the ideological content of literary and artistic works into political viewpoint and political tendency; and should not separately make the political criterion the first criterion for appraising literary and artistic works. If we insist on doing so, it will surely lead to an oversimplified and crude work style and thus hinder literary and art criticism from developing healthily.

Analyzes 'Unrequited Love'

HK161524 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0903 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, 16 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In an article in HONGQI No 8 published today [as received] Hu Qiaomu, secretary of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee, analyzed the film script "Unrequited Love" and the film "Sun and Man."

The article said, the reason we waged criticism against the film script "Unrequited Love" and the film "Sun and Man," which was based on the above film script, was that, in effect, both of them negated socialist China and the CCP's leadership, by reflecting the historical development of the real life in our society in a distored way; and thus propagated the "liberty" that the capitalist world flaunts.

As pointed out in the article, the writer and the director used the technique of contrast, both in "Unrequited Love" and "Sun and Man," to give a strong publicity to a view which equated the "gang of four" to the CCP and the 10 years of turmoil to socialism.

In their eyes, it seems that the people in the socialist China have enjoyed neither liberation nor happiness, but suffered from ignorance and superstition; that the party and the people have never waged struggle against the "gang of four" and have never won historical victory; that there is therefore not a single streak of light nor a little bit of freedom in China, but only persecution and humiliation in the fate of the intelligentsia; and that light and freedom only exist in the United States and the capitalist world, where only there the intelligentsia enjoy admirable freedom. This view is exactly an important and typical expression of the thinking of bourgeois liberalization.

Obviously, the article realized, it will be hard to guarantee that the literary and art cause and other causes of ours will be developed in the socialist direction, if we did not criticize "Unrequited Love" and "Sun and Man," give education to our literary and art circles, intellectual circles and the whole party through this criticism, and thus intensify our strength to struggle against the tendency of bourgeois liberalization.

The title of this article by Hu Qiaomu is "On Bourgeois Liberalization and Others."

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES GOOD PROSPECTS FOR PETROLEUM

[Text] Beijing, April 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese geological experts estimate that China has 30 billion to 60 billion tons of oil reserves, according to a PEOPLE'S DAILY article today. Reserves so far verified total only several billion tons. China, now a major world oil producer, started to export oil in 1973 and increased its oil output to more than 100 million tons in 1978, thus ranking the ninth among oil producing nations in terms of output. While China increased its crude oil output by a big margin, it has discovered only a few large oil fields in recent years, causing some people to doubt the petroleum reserves prospects.

The article notes that the distribution area and volume of sedimentary rocks, the amount of organic matters accumulated and the geological conditions for the movement and deposition of oil determine the prospects for a country's oil reserves. Comprehensive geological surveys have discovered over a 9.6-million-square-kilometer area in China more than 300 sedimetary basins with some 4.5 million square kilometers of sedimentary rocks space and 1.2 million square kilometers of continental shelves that are appropriate for petroleum prospecting. These basins constitute the rich material bases for China's oil reserves, the article says.

The oil and gas fields or oil and gas shows, which originated from the remote Silurian period to the Quaternary period, are extensively distributed in 20 of China provinces municipalities and autonomous regions, the article says.

In areas with rich petroleum deposits, only a small amount of oil reserves have been verified in shallow strata. The North China Basin has an estimated reserve of 8 billion tons and the basin between the Songhua and Liaohe Rivers has an estimated reserve of 4.5 billion tons, but the proven geological oil reserves in the two basins are much smaller than the estimates, the article reports.

Six oil-gas bearing basins found on China's continental shelves are not only large in size but some of them are linked with major oil bearing zones on the continent. The Bohai Basin in the sea, with an area of 80,000 square kilometers, is an extended part of the Shengli, Dakang and Liaohe oil fields; a number of high output oil or gas wells have been sunk there. The East China Sea Basin, with an area of 460,000 square kilometers, also has abundant oil and gas bearing structures.

More plentiful petroleum reserves in the South China Sea and the area around the Pearl River mouth alone cover 15,000 square kilometers, and seven prospecting wells drilled by the Ministry of Geology have already yielded oil flows of industrial value, according to the article.

China is now bidding for offshore petroleum and gas exploitation through cooperation with foreign firms in its South China and the South Yellow Sea, the article says.

AERIAL RESOURCES SURVEYS, PROSPECTING PLANNED

[Text] Beijing, April 20 (XINHUA) -- The General Administration of Civil Aviation of China [CAAC] plans to aerially survey and prospect 300,000 square kilometers in 1982 in search of mineral and oil resources and topographical information, according to an administration spokesman. The administration will log more than 8,700 hours of flight time, he said.

To accelerate oil prospecting in the Qaidam Basin in Qinghai Province, a C.A.A.C. helicopter for the first time airlifted 1,000 kilograms of prospecting equipment to a 3,500-meter mountaintop earlier this year, he said.

Aerial surveys of hydrogeology and air pollution are under way in Shanghai Municipality, Qinghai, Sichuan and Zhejiang Provinces, and the Inner Mongolia and Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regions, he said. The surveys will provide data for construction of railways, highways, water conservancy projects, oil, coal, iron and steel centers and municipal construction.

By the end of 1981, he said, C.A.A.C. had photographed 8.1 million square kilometers and completed the nation's first topographical maps, on a scale of 1:25,000, 1:50,000 and 1:100,000.

The techniques used for the remote sensing, the spokesman said, including color infrared and multi-spectral photography and scanning, are widely used in geological prospecting of China's rich natural resources, forestry surveys, environmental monitoring and mapping.

C.A.A.C. began aerial surveys in 1951, the spokesman said. The country now has nearly 600 aviation centers serving industry, agriculture and science. Aerial photography has also provided data for construction of iron and steel complexes, municipal construction and earthquake analysis, he said. During the past 30 years, he said, C.A.A.C. has logged 140,000 hours of aerial prospecting, and found deposits of uranium, copper, iron, tin, chromium, aluminum, zinc, oil and natural gas.

ANHUI HOLDS UNITED FRONT WORK CONFERENCE

OW211451 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The Anhui provincial conference on united front work was held in Hefei 10-17 April. Attending the conference were more than 270 people, including secretaries of party committees of various colleges and institutions of higher learning, directors of united front work departments under the party committees of various prefectures and counties and responsible persons of party committees of various departments, commissions, offices and large enterprises. The conference participants earnestly discussed the guidelines laid down by the national conference on united front work and the important speeches made by Comrade Hu Yaobang and other leading comrades of the central authorities. Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee Zhou Zijian, Yan Youmin, (Yuan Zhen), Lan Ganting and Hu Kaiming attended the conference. Comrade Zhou Zijian delivered an important speech. Zhang Kaifan, adviser of the provincial CCP committee, provided guidance at the conference, personally held discussion meetings and heard briefings. He also delivered a speech. (Zhu Nong), director of the united front work department of the provincial CCP committee, delivered a speech entitled, "Raise Our Awareness, Work With a Tremendous Drive and Open Up New Vistas in Doing United Front Work." In his speech, Comrade Zhou Zijian said: Ours is an important conference in which speeches of leading comrades of the central authorities have been relayed. The conference has pointed out that doing united front work is our party's long-term task. For a long time to come, united front work will be of vital importance; it will continue to be a magic wand for our party.

The conference called for efforts to carry out the following tasks:

1. Since some comrades in our party have neglected united front work, it is necessary to conduct reeducation on the theory and policies regarding united front work.

2. Earnest efforts must be made to implement the policy of long-term coexistence and mutual supervision between the CCP and other democratic parties, and to bring into full play the role of all democratic parties and mass organizations.

3. It is essential to put into practice the various united front work policies.

4. It is necessary to make proper arrangements for those people who are not affiliated with the CCP, and to give full play to all positive factors.

5. Efforts must be made to organizationally strengthen all united front departments and to help all comrades improve their work style and overcome the influence of leftist ideas.

FUJIAN INDUSTRY, COMMUNICATIONS MEETING ENDS

Ma Xingyuan Address

OW150635 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 14 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Speaking at the Fujian provincial industrial and communications work conference on 12 April, Governor Ma Xingyuan pointed out: The vast number of staff members and workers on the industrial and communications front must be ready to shoulder heavy tasks and make more contributions to the development of Fujian's favorable geographical position. The industrial departments must become a backbone force to expand external economic activities.

Governor Ma Xingyuan pointed out: The question of poor economic results in Fujian's industrial production still remains to be solved. The main problems include the deterioration of the quality of some products and a disguised rise in prices. The increase of profits is slower than the growth of industrial production. The costs of production are rising, while more enterprises are suffering deficits. The utilization ratio of equipment and funds is low, and the number of accidents in plants and stores has increased.

Touching on the question of the industrial departments using Overseas Chinese and foreign businessmen's capital to expand external economic activities, Comrade Ma Xingyuan emphatically pointed out: While we are dealing blows at criminal activities in the economic sphere, we must seriously sum up experience, assume a correct guiding ideology for external economic work and promote the healthy development of external economic activities.

Governor Ma Xingyuan said: It is necessary to shift the focus of external economic work onto the path of using Overseas Chinese and foreign businessmen's capital to promote industrial development. It is necessary to bring the favorable factor of a large labor force into full play and boldly attract Overseas Chinese businessmen's and foreign businessmen's direct investments.

Wang Yan Summation

[Excerpts] A 10-day work conference on industry and communications held by the provincial people's government opened on 3 April and concluded today. Leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government Xiang Nan and Ma Xingyuan delivered important speeches at the conference, and Wang Yan gave a summing-up address.

This conference relayed for implementation the guidelines set at the national work conference on industry and communications, the national forum on education for staff members and workers and the national forum on democratic management of enterprises. Focusing on the theme of achieving greater economic results, the conference discussed the questions of further adjusting the product mix and the lineup of enterprises and making a success of the work of technical innovation, quality control, material supply, energy production, communications and transportation. It urged efforts to ensure at least a 7 percent growth in this year's industrial output value, while trying to achive an 8 percent growth rate. In addition, the conference urged that major efforts be made to achieve the goals of harmonious development of production, greater economic results and better product quality.

In his summing-up address, Comrade Wang Yan stressed the need to straighten out guiding ideology for economic work. He asked the leaders at all levels on the province's industrial and communications front to change their guiding ideology from merely striving for high output value and speed to paying attention to economic results. He urged them to attach equal importance to both speed and economic results, production quantity and product quality. In striving for speed, he said, it is imperative to do basic work and, at the same time, aim for greater economic results. With the aim of achieving greater economic results in mind, he added, efforts should be made to ensure balanced development of the work of production, supply and marketing and to pay attention to energy production, communications and transportation.

FUJIAN URGES EDUCATION TO COMBAT ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Excerpts] The Fujian Provincial CCP Committee and government recently organized work teams composed of 1,200 members to conduct education on socialist patriotism in 22 communes and 84 production brigades in the 5 coastal counties where smuggling and the trading of smuggled goods have been rampant.

At a mobilization meeting of the work team of the organs directly under the provincial CCP committee, a leading comrade of the provincial CCP committee urged the team members to follow the leadership of prefectural and county CCP committees and begin with production work in conducting extensive propaganda and education with the "four adherences, three considerations and two oppositions" as the main content. In this way they can resolutely clamp down on smuggling, the trading of smuggled goods, bribery and other illegal economic activities and consolidate some grassroots organizations which have been seriously influenced by the corrosion of capitalist ideology.

Zhang Yun, deputy secretary of the CCP Central Committee's Discipline Inspection Commission, who was inspecting discipline in Fujian, met with and spoke to the members of the work team. She said the work team must pay keen attention to the work in the following four fields:

First is the building of extensive contacts with the masses. While carrying out broad, penetrating and meticulous mass work, it is necessary to bring into full play the party's fine tradition of trusting, relying on and mobilizing the masses in striving to win victory in the revolution. In this way the workers, peasants and other masses in the coastal region can form a great wall of steel to keep close watch over all criminal activities, giving the criminals no place to hide.

Second is the building of a fighting bastion. It is necessary to consolidate the party branch and the party's grassroots organization and to educate it to play the role of a fighting bastion as required by the party constitution.

Third is the conducting of anticorrosion education among the masses of people, party members and cadres.

Fourth is the clamping down on criminal activities in the economic field and the meting out of harsh punishment for serious economic crimes.

In conclusion, Comrade Zhang Yun said: The party Central Committee has decided that opposing and striking at serious economic crimes will be one of the central tasks in rectifying the style and discipline of the whole party for some time to come. In view of Fujian's special economic policy and flexible measures, the province should exert greater efforts than other inland provinces to rectify the party's style and enforce discipline. Party organizations throughout the province must give top priority to the work in this field.

JIANGXI'S BAI DONGCAI ON FIGHTING ECONOMIC CRIME

[Text] To deepen the struggle against criminal activities in the economic sphere, the Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee this morning called a meeting of responsible cadres of provincial organs. The meeting called on party organs at all levels throughout the province to set their minds, strengthen leadership and carry this struggle through to the end.

Comrade Bai Dongcai, permanent secretary of the provincial CCP committee, addressed the meeting. He said: Since the struggle against criminal activities in the economic sphere, party organs in most areas and units in our province have gone into action and made tremendous progress in exposing and handling major cases of economic crimes in our province. Some new major problems have concurrently cropped up. While the struggle is just unfolding and developing in a thorough way, it is nevertheless not progressing fast enough, judging from the present situation, nor is it developing evenly. Because a considerable number of leading cadres still do not sufficiently understand the seriousness, harmfulness and danger of economic crimes, they lack the high sense of urgency and responsibility to advance this struggle. Some areas and a small number of units have not demonstrated strong leadership over the struggle. In other cases, strength and impetus are lacking as some principal leaders failed to get involved directly enough, thus causing confusion in handling cases. It should be pointed out that the struggle against economic crimes being carried out by provincial organs actually fell behind some other areas. This is not right. Party organs at all levels in the province must act, playing a leading and model role in this struggle.

Comrade Bai Dongcai then elaborated on the significance of the struggle against corruption. He pointed out seriously: All party members and cadres must cherish the party's stand and wage a resolute struggle against decadent capitalist ideology and corruption in the party. He said: A glaring characteristic of criminal cases coming to light is that those lawbreakers drew certain cadres, even responsible cadres, to their side and made things convenient for them by taking advantage of their decadent mentality in going after money and profit sharing. Decadent capitalist ideology is seriously corrupting our party and the rank and file of our cadres. Failing to withstand the onslaught of sugar-coated bullets, some cadres, who are party members, have become corrupt and degenerate. This should serve us as a serious warning. Some cases of economic crimes also involved the sons and daughters of leading cadres. This shows that decadent capitalist ideology is trying to make an inroad into our future generations in order to attain its goal of peaceful evolution [heping yanbian]. Although the number of sons and daughters of leading cadres involved in economic crimes is small, this state of affairs has given us a warning signal. We must guard against the class enemy at home and abroad in seeking out their agents from among our future generations. To rectify party style, it is necessary to grasp this principal contradiction against corruption and, through this anticorruption struggle, to clean up ideologically, politically and organizationally the corrupt elements within the party to make each and every party member a firm, sober-minded and worthy Marxist.

Comrade Bai Dongcai stressed: To make the struggle against corruption a success, we must carry it out thoroughly and determinedly. Serious crimes such as smuggling, speculation, swindling, corruption, accepting bribes and misappropriation of state and collective property in large quantities for personal gain must be dealt with firmly and vigorously. Cadres, especially cadres holding key positions, who have committed serious crimes must be prosecuted according to law. No one should ignore or conceal what he knows about serious financial problems facing certain cadres, especially responsible cadres; no one should remain indecisive and cover up their crimes. Serious economic crimes involving intermediate-level and high-ranking cadres must be thoroughly investigated and dealt with. Sustained efforts should be made to pursue cases of economic crimes that have been dragging on without solution; every step must be taken to ward off intervention and resistance in order to get to the bottom of the cases. Policies must be implemented with strong determination.

Comrade Bai Dongcai said: It is necessary to strictly adhere to policies and to draw a line between concrete matters and principles relating to work and criminal activities; a line between smuggling, offering and accepting bribes, speculation and swindling and normal economic activities; and a line between corruption for personal gain and normal practice.

In conclusion, Comrade Bai Dongcai called on provincial units to rate this struggle as an important item on the agenda, to strengthen leadership, to make meticulous arrangements, to carry out inspection and supervision expeditiously, to solve problems in a timely manner and to carry this struggle through to the end with party spirit.

SHANGHAI RADAR NAVIGATION DEVICE -- The blueprints for radar-operated anticollision devices for ships designed by the Shanghai No 4 radio plant, a special factory for manufacturing radar navigation equipment, have been approved by 50 shipbuilding experts and engineers from locations throughout China. Sample devices will be ready for testing by Chinese vessels early next year. The devices were designed in accordance with the International Navigation Association's regulations requiring all tankers and other ships of a 10,000-dun capacity and above sailing in international waters to install radar-operated anticollision devices from January 1984 to January 1989. NANFANG RIBAO ON ECONOMIC POLICY, ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Report on 21 April NANFANG RIBAO commentator's article: "A Sharp Weapon for Maintaining the Policy of Opening Up to the Outside World and Enlivening the Domestic Economy"]

[Text] The article says: The decision on striking at serious criminal activities in the economic field, recently issued by the CCP Central Committee and State Council, is an extremely important document. Apart from being a sharp ideological weapon for striking at economic crimes, it is also a sharp ideological weapon for urging the cadres and masses to maintain the economic policies laid down since the third plenary session and uphold the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy.

The article dwells on the question of how Guangdong should promote its economic construction in accordance with the spirit of the decision. It stresses: We must resolutely launch the struggle to strike at economic criminal activities on the one hand and do well in solving the problem of continuity and stability of policies on the other, and resolutely bring into play the power of the party's economic policies. We must spontaneously keep unchanged the policies of opening up to the outside world and trial-operation of special economic zones. The CCP Central Committee has demanded that Guangdong practice a policy of opening up still more to the outside world. This is a major policy decision based on the overall situation of the country's modernization drive. Under the premise of upholding the four basic principles, we should sum up experiences, overcome shortcomings and act still more unswervingly in implementing this important central policy decision.

Certain comrades think that the policy of opening up to the outside world will be changed and that there will be "drawing back." This does not accord with the facts and must be clarified.

The article says: The policy of enlivening the domestic economy is also unswerving. Under the fundamental principles of regarding the planned economy as the primary factor and viewing the whole country as one chessboard, we must continue to hand down some powers to the prefectures, municipalities and counties, and expand enterprise decision-making powers. The province has summed up the effective experiences of Qingyuan County in the field of reforming enterprise management. We should continue to actively popularize these experiences.

In agriculture, there will be no change in the public ownership of the main means of production, in practicing various types of responsibility systems, and in the policy of comprehensive management of agriculture, industry and sideline occupations, development of domestic sideline production and opening up of rural trade fairs.

In a word, there will be no change in the strategic guiding policy of enlivening the economy and allowing the peasants to get rich as quickly as possible under the guidance of the state plan.

The article says in conclusion: Maintaining the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy is parallel with striking at serious criminal activities in the economic field. We hope the leading party and government organs at all levels will act according to the central and provincial CCP committee instructions, strengthen leadership over economic work and ensure still greater economic returns and growth rate in the province's national economic construction this year while scoring victory in the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field.

YANGCHENG WANBAO VIEWS HAINAN RURAL DEVELOPMENT

["Economic Research" column: "Well-Known Scientist Professor Hou Xueyu Proposes Six Major Relationships To Be Handled Well in Developing Hainan Agriculture" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] At the end of last year, the well-known scientist and Professor Hou Xueyu took part in a comprehensive study of "agricultural construction and the ecological balance in Hainan." The study was conducted under the auspices of the national scientific committee, the agricultural committee and the scientific association. Traveling more than 1,600 km he went deep into the frontline and developed a keen understanding of the situation by visiting Li, Miao and Han peasant families. After this on-the-spot investigation, he pointed out that six major relationships must be handled well if agriculture is to be developed in Hainan.

1. IN DEVELOPING BIOLOGICAL RESOURCES, IT IS IMPORTANT TO HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN EXPLOITATION AND PROTECTION. Located in the tropics, Hainan enjoys particularly favorable climactic conditions and a rich stock of biological resources. The coral reefs and mangrove forests that are found along the coast and Hainan's tropical rain forest should be protected. The eucheuma plant, which is used to make agar, grows and propagates itself on coral. Agar is an important raw material that is used in the making of capsules, sweets and various medicines. It is effective against high blood pressure and can be taken as a tonic. It costs about 20 yuan per jin. Many different types of algae and plankton, which act as a natural bait for sea cucumber, fish and shrimp, can also be found in coral. To burn coral in order to produce lime for building is a serious waste. By burning coral we are burning sea cucumber and eucheuma plants. The same holds true for mangrove forests as well. Before 1956 mangrove forests in Hainan Island covered an area of between 120,000 and 150,000 mu. Today only 20,000 or 30,000 mu remain. This is the result of efforts to increase grain production through the reclamation of land from the sea. The preservation of mangrove forests is of important significance for the ecological balance and also for the development of acquatic production. Valuable wood such as teak, zijing [1311 0079], lychee, valuable birds such as parrots and peacocks, animals such as slope deer and monkeys and southern medicinal plants such as A. Longiligulare, Evphorbia and Alpinia Oxyphylla can all be found in the island's rain forest. Preservation of the rain forest is of great significance. The total area of tropical rain forest in our country is very small, as there are only two such forests -- one in Hainan Island, the other in Xishuangbanna. By preserving the rain forest we will have a ready supply of timber and other important plant and animal resources. As far as the fishing industry is concerned, it is dangerous to adopt predatory methods of fishing such as the use of very fine nets or explosives, as they threaten the future of the fish stock. We must have a correct understanding of the relationship between exploitation and preservation of resources.

2. AS FAR AS METHODS OF PRODUCTION ARE CONCERNED, WE MUST HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN INTENSIVE FARMING AND THE EXPANSION OF LAND UNDER CULTIVATION. For a considerable period of time people were content to practice low-yield intensive farming, and this at times led to a one-sided emphasis on "taking grain as the key link." Production of sugarcane was relegated to mountain areas and there was relatively little planting of peanuts, beans, green manure and other crops. The use of slash-and-burn cultivation techniques in certain mountainous areas made it impossible to combine the use of land with a program of land conservation. This reduced the fertility of the land and led to a severe shortage of water for agriculture. According to our studies and investigation, the soil in Hainan is for the most part acidic. The key to grain production, therefore, lies in the use of limestone powder to neutralize the soil's acidity.

The combination of intensive cultivation with an adjustment of crop layout, a preliminary improvement of soil composition and the use of either meticulous farming techniques or the rotation of dry and paddy rice would bring about obvious economic results. In the case of rubber planting, we should concentrate on increasing per-unit area yield, improving administration and management and lowering production cost, and should avoid expanding the area under cultivation. As far as the island as a whole is concerned, we should proceed from the actual conditions in the area and revive production of betal palms, coconuts, cashew nuts, coffee beans, pepper, oil palms and other tropical crops. As for tropical fruit, there should be a planned development of litchi, pineapple, mango and longan and other fruit. This relationship also needs to be handled well in other areas, such as fishing, forestry and stock raising.

3. IN THE AREA OF WATER CONSERVANCY, WE MUST HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN ENGINEERING AND BIOLOGICAL MEASURES. The building of water conservancy projects is of critical importance to the development of Hainan Island. Emphasis on key projects rather than on the system as a whole is a problem that still plagues our water conservancy efforts. As long as we focus solely on engineering measures and ignore biological measures, it will be difficult to bring the beneficial role of water conservancy into full play. In certain areas people have destroyed the forests near water conservancy reservoirs, creating "man-made plains" and building terraced fields. The damage caused to forest vegetation can bring about serious soil erosion and also shorten the life span of the reservoir itself. Therefore, the building of water conservancy projects, including reservoirs, must be combined with measures to protect forest areas.

4. IN DEVELOPING STOCK RAISING, WE MUST HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CENTRALIZED AND DECENTRALIZED STOCK RAISING. Hainan Island's mountain area, with its vast expanse of hilly land, is well suited to the development of stock raising. By making full use of scattered natural pasture areas, the straw left from crops and the sideline products of sugarcane, we can develop the raising of herbivorous animals. Animal raising has the advantage of not competing with agriculture for land; moreover, it will allow us both to save grain and to bring into full play the supplementary labor force of the old and relatively young. As far as raising methods are concerned, however, most of the animal raising should be carried out on a decentralized basis and we should avoid overemphasizing the building of centralized livestock raising areas. Most of the grass in Hainan's grassland areas grows in small patches and is unsuitable for intensive livestock grazing because of its relatively poor quality. Therefore, aside from milk cows and fine breeds which require a greater degree of centralization, most livestock should be raised in a decentralized manner. This will bring about truly beneficial results.

5. WITH REGARD TO THE PROBLEM OF BRINGING NATURAL ADVANTAGES INTO FULL PLAY, WE MUST HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CATCHING AND BREEDING FISH. With one-tenth of the nation's total coastline, Hainan Island has many fishing ports and broad fishing areas. There are 380,000 mu of shallow-water sea area suitable for breeding, as well as 540,000 mu of lakes and rivers. In addition to this, the island has many different types of rare fish and important shell resources. All this makes the island rich in potential as far as the development of the aquatic products industry is concerned. Up until now, however, the catching of fish has been the only aspect of water utilization that has gained any attention, and there has been little effort to combine catching and breeding in a more rational manner. There is still relatively little fish breeding and 90 percent of fish produced in the island are caught. There are only 10,000 mu devoted to fresh-water fish breeding. In fish tanks the average yield per mu is only 100 to 200 jin and the average per mu yield in reservoirs is around 10 jin.

In other words, potential has not been brought into full play. Units doing research into aquatic production are very weak, and it is important that we increase their manpower and material resources. We should also set up, on a planned basis, several breeding areas to combine research with production. This is a question that deserves serious attention. With regard to fish breeding in the South China Sea, we must stress the agricultural and pastoral functions of the sea.

In addition to the five relationships mentioned above, Professor Hou Xueyu also pointed out: IN IMPLEMENTING POLICY WE MUST HANDLE WELL THE RELATIONS OF PRODUCTION AND THE RELATIONS OF THE FORCES OF PRODUCTION. He believes that if these six relationships are handled well, agriculture in Hainan will enjoy considerable development in the near future, making it a truly precious island.

GUANGDONG CULTURAL RELICS MANAGEMENT -- Over the past 1 or 2 years, many problems have emerged in the cultural relics market in Guangdong Province. Cultural relics have been frequently stolen and sold and units which do not deal in cultural relics have purchased, sold and exported cultural relics without authorization. This has encouraged the unhealthy trends of stealing cultural relics and digging tombs to steal valuables. To strengthen management and protect state cultural relics, the Guangdon Provincial People's Government recently approved and transmitted the provincial cultural bureau's views on further strengthening control over the cultural relics market and formulated explicit regulations. All unearthed cultural relics are owned by the state and all commodities of cultural relics must be managed in a unified way by the provincial cultural relics shops. Unlawful purchase, theft, sale and smuggling of cultural relics are strictly prohibited. [Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 8 Apr 82 HK]

HUBEI EDUCATION CIRCULAR -- The Hubei Provincial People's Government recently issued a circular, deciding to reform the structure of secondary education and to vigorously develop vocational and technical education. The circular points out that the reform of the structure of secondary education must correspond to the readjustment and reform of the structure of the national economy. At present, it is particularly necessary to attach importance to the development of vocational and technical education in agriculture, production of consumer goods, commerce and service trade. Education departments must run vocational courses in ordinary middle schools or include vocational and technical subjects in the curricula of ordinary middle schools. Meanwhile, it is essential to change some ordinary middle schools to middle vocational schools or middle agricultural schools. Where necessary, all department, factories, mines, enterprises and rural communes and brigades must run various kinds of vocational and technical schools. Labor departments must also run vocational and technical training courses and, where conditions are favorable, set up labor training centers in urban areas. Collectives and individuals can also run these schools or training courses. [Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 Apr 82 HK]

XIZANG EXTENDS DEADLINE FOR ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

[Summary] On the afternoon of 20 April, the Standing Committee of the 3d People's Congress of the Xizang Autonomous Region held its 12th meeting. The meeting unanimously approved the report submitted by the regional people's procuratorate, suggesting an extension of the deadline set by the NPC Standing Committee from 1 May to 1 June 1982 for the economic criminals to surrender to the police.

The extension is made, the report said, because the Xizang Autonomous Region is located in a border area, the land is vast and transport facilities are poor; therefore, the NPC decision can hardly be made known to every household in a short time. The report of the regional people's procuratorate suggested: "All those who committed crimes and give themselves up before 1 June 1982 or those who have been arrested and have frankly admitted all their crimes and factually reported the criminal offenses of other people before that date will be dealt with according to the stipulations of the relevant laws applicable before the NPC decision comes into effect. All those who continue to conceal their criminal offenses and refuse to give themselves up to the police before 1 June 1982 or those who refuse to frankly admit all their crimes and report the criminal offenses of other people before that date will be viewed as having continued to commit crimes and will be dealt with according to regulations stipulated in the NPC decision.

The meeting was presided over by Dege Gaisan Wangdui, vice chairman of the standing committee of the regional people's congress.

YUNNAN CIRCULAR ON HOLDING PEASANT CONGRESS

HK210151 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Apr 82

[Text] The general office of the Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee has issued a circular on convening a provincial peasant association congress. The circular said: In accordance with the provicial CCP committee's notice, the province has been preparing in the past 2 months the establishment of peasant associations at all levels on the basis of the former poor and lower-middle peasant associations. The progress of this work has been relatively smooth. The conditions for convening the provincial peasant association congress are now basically ready.

In order to effectively stimulate the building of material and spiritual civilization in the rural areas and further mobilize the peasants of all nationalities to strive for an all-round bumper harvest this year, the provincial CCP committee has decided to convene the provincial peasant association congress on 10 May. The congress will examine and approve the provincial peasant association work report, discuss and determine the work of the peasant associations, examine and adopt the provincial peasant association charter and elect the association committee.

The circular said: Convening this congress is a major event in the political life of the province's 28 million peasants of all nationalities. The party committees at all levels must grasp the current favorable opportunity to carry out propaganda and mobilization work among the rural cadres and masses. The province should realize an all-round bumper harvest as practical action to greet the provincial peasant association congress and the establishment of peasant associations at all levels. The peasant association preparatory work leadership groups at all levels must get a good grasp of reviewing and implementing the various preparatory tasks for the congress, and also make arrangements for setting up and developing the peasant associations in light of local realities.

CHEN WEIDA AT TIANJIN EXPERIENCE-EXCHANGE MEETING

SK220908 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 1430 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Excerpts] According to our sources, this morning the Tianjin Municipal CCP Committee and the municipal people's government sponsored a meeting at the No 1 workers' palace on exchanging advanced experiences gained in building socialist material and spiritual civilizations. Attending the meeting were leading comrades of the municipal CCP committee, the municipal people's congress standing committee, the municipal people's government and the municipal CPPCC committee, including Chen Weida, Huang Zhigang, Hu Qili, Yan Dakai, Chen Bing, Bai Hua, Zhao Jun, Lu Da, Wang Peiren, Yang Jianbai, Fan Quan, Xu Ming, Li Shouzhen and Kang Tiejun. Also attending the meeting were responsible comrades from the municipal garrison and the PLA units stationed in the city, including Cao Xikang, Pang Xiuting and (Huang Ke), and responsible persons from the municipal trade union council, the municipal CYL committee and the municipal women's federation.

Comrade Huang Zhigang, second secretary of the municipal CCP committee, presided over the meeting, and Comrade Hu Qili, secretary of the municipal CCP committee and mayor of the municipality, delivered a speech in which he noted: The achievements scored in the decorum and courtesy month campaign this March were remarkable; they have exerted a deep influence on the entire society, and have accelerated improvement of social morale, the appearance of the environment and relationships among people. As a result, the people throughout the city have greatly enhanced their spirit and, as a result of the campaign, have found everything fresh and new. They have also reinforced their confidence that the CCP Central Committee is absolutely able to build our country into a strong and rich state with a highly-developed civilization.

Comrade Hu Qili stated: We are facing arduous tasks in industrial production. Viewed from the standpoint of production speed, the first quarter achievements are fine. Industrial enterprises scored a 7.9 percent increase over the figure of the corresponding 1981 period and scored an 8.1 percent increase in March. However, economic results scored by these enterprises have not reached the set target. In looking to the second quarter production, there still exist relatively great subjective and objective problems. If we fail to exert all-out efforts, it is very possible economic results will further decline, but also production speed will slow down. To improve this situation, the municipal CCP committee and the municipal people's government have adopted a decision stating that leading personnel of party and government organs at all levels, including enterprise party committees at grassroots levels, are authorized to make unified arrangements on the basis of increasing production, according to their actual situation and the order of importance and urgency of all work assigned by their higher authorities. Industries and trades should serve to increase production and give it the green light. In conclusion, Comrade Hu Qili urged leading personnel of party and government organs at all levels throughout the city to take back the advanced experiences which were introduced at the meeting and vigorously popularize them so as to further enhance the revolutionary spirit of the broad masses, make progress in building material and spiritual civilization and work with one heart and one mind to win a new victory this year.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ON ILLEGAL FUEL SALES

[Text] According to our reporter, Mishan County is investigating cases concerning the illegal sale of state petroleum. As of 19 April, some of those who resold state petroleum at a profit have been discovered. The petroleum illegally marketed by them totaled 35,000 jin.

Having listened to a report in this regard, Yang Yichen and Chen Junsheng, leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee who came to Mudanjiang Prefecture recently to conduct investigations, affirmed the achievements scored by the county and then pointed out that the resale for profit of state gasoline by some individuals is widespread throughout the province, and therefore should be checked. In recent years, the state has allocated more than 3,000 tons of petroleum to Mishan County each year, basically meeting the county's needs. However, the shortage of petroleum has become more acute, with the result that normal transportation and agricultural production have been affected. Yet, some individuals have still more fuel for their cars.

The county discovered that (Qian Jingcai), a refueler at a petroleum company's filling station, had engaged in the resale of state petroleum for profit and the quantity of each sale had increased from 2,500 jin to over 10,000 jin. Having arrested (Qian Jingcai), the county public security department made an initial investigation in (Yaomu) and (Liumao) communes. It found that the activities of illegal petroleum sales are very serious and common in the county. In accord with the decision of the county CCP committee, leading groups for investigating illegal sales of state petroleum have been established in the county's 18 rural communes and 2 towns. (Yang Yicao), secretary of the county CCP committee, personally serves as the leader of one of these groups to emphatically investigate the (Qian Jingcai) case. To date, the county has already discovered some persons who illegally marketed 35,000 jin of state petroleum. Investigations on such cases are ongoing in the county.

JILIN BUREAU DIRECTOR DISCUSSES USE OF PROFITS

[Article contributed by (Han Jingchai), director of provincial commune- and brigade-run enterprise administration, for this station: "Handle and Employ Profits of Commune- and Brigade-Run Enterprises in a Correct Manner"]

[Text] The article states: The fundamental objective of commune- and brigade-run enterprises is to change the rural economic structure, strengthen the collective economy, increase commune members' income and bring prosperity to rural areas as quickly as possible. One of the important ways to achieve this lies in correct handling and employment of the profits of commune- and brigade-run enterprises.

Over the past years commune- and brigade-run enterprises in the province have set aside a certain percentage of profits to support agricultural production and aid poor teams, offering a great deal of beneficial services to both the collective and the commune member. This is the primary aspect. However, the problem meriting attention at the moment is that many localities wantonly draw enterprise profits and spend them indiscreetly. Some brigades have drawn more profits than the enterprises have made, thus erecting manmade obstacles to enterprise production. Some enterprises have found it impossible to maintain production. Worse still, some localities, in violation of the party's economic policy, spend enterprise profits indiscreetly and extravagantly, dampening workers' and enterprises' enthusiasm for production and shaking the popular base of enterprises.

The article points out: Many localities have failed to utilize the profits of commune- and brigade-run enterprises in a correct manner. This is, after all, a problem of ideology, understanding and party work style.

Quite a number of cadres have only a hazy understanding of the objective of commune- and brigade-run enterprises, namely, to strengthen the collective economy and increase commune members' income. In their eyes, running enterprises only provides them easy access to cash. They even argue that they are in charge of the enterprises and whatever they say goes. They feel justified in spending at will all the money available so long as they do not have to dig into their own pockets. Such an understanding is, in fact, wrong. Neither an affiliated business nor a non-staple foodstuffs base of communes and brigades, the commune- and brigade-run enterprise constitutes an important component of the collective economy.

The article stresses: To ensure that the profits of enterprises are used to support agricultural production and aid poor teams, and that an appropriate percentage of the profits is distributed annually among commune members, we must earnestly implement the stipulations laid down in the documents issued by the Ministries of Finance and Agriculture. Party organizations of all communes and brigades running enterprises must include the drawing and utilization of profits on their agenda, make it a rule that the drawing and spending of the profits must be decided through collective discussions and put an end to the practice of one man making all the decisions. Competent departments of commune- and brigade-run enterprises must amplify financial management and conduct supervision and investigation on the drawing and spending of profits. Efforts should be made to uphold democratic financial management and place management under the supervision of the masses. We must implement the various state financial and economic policies, conduct criticism and education on erroneous deeds violating financial and economic policies and affix personal responsibility in case of serious offenses. In short, we can properly utilize profits if we enhance our understanding of the importance of correctly utilizing them, step up leadership and enforce strict management.

LIAONING: FARMLAND USED FOR UNAUTHORIZED HOUSING

[Text] On 14 April, Zhang Qingtai, permanent vice chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, went to rural areas of Jinxi County to inspect housing construction together with leading comrades of the people's congresses and governments of Jinzhou municipality and Jinxi County. They found that planned housing construction did not exist in the rural areas. Incidents of arbitrary approval and construction and appropriation of farmland are fairly serious.

(Hongluoxian) commune approved the construction of 1,620 rooms for 529 households in October last year in violation of the relevant regulations of the State Council and of the province, municipality and county. Because the commune abandoned its leadership over and restrictions on housing construction, a brigade broke the rule and, without authorization, approved the construction of housing for 108 households and the enlargement of 29 rooms. A total of 185 mu of crop fields and 48 mu of vegetable fields were appropriated for this housing. Thus far in the commune 83 percent of the households that planned to build houses have procured materials to build houses on about 300 mu of farmland. This has seriously hampered spring farming. The provincial, municipal and county leaders pointed out that attention should be paid to this situation, which also exists in other places. The Jinxi County CCP Committee and government attached great importance to the mistake committed by the (Hongluoxian) commune and is investigating the case. It will handle it in all seriousness in accord with the actual situation.

QINGHAI CIRCULAR ON COMBATING ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Excerpts] According to QINGHAI RIBAO, on 16 April the Qinghai Provincial CCP Committee and People's Government issued a circular on earnestly implementing and publicizing the CCP Central Committee and State Council decision and circular on cracking down on unlawful activities in the economic field. It urges party committees and government at all levels to take immediate action to organize party members, cadres, workers, the masses and their families to earnestly study, vigorously publicize and resolutely implement the decision. The circular notes: The CCP Central Committee and State Council decision is a programmatic document which solemnly points out that a crackdown on serious unlawful activities in the economic field is an important manifestation of class struggle in our country under new historical conditions. A successful implementation of this struggle, which is aimed at preserving communist purity and opposing decadence and degeneration among party members and state functionaries, is a matter affecting the success of our socialist modernization and the destiny of our party and country. The circular sets forth detailed and explicit stipulations on the focal point, steps, principles and methods of the crackdown, providing answers to many fundamental questions in theory and practice. The circular is of great historical and immediate significance in guiding this struggle. The circular urges:

1. Localities and departments must immediately convene standing committee meetings of party committees or meetings of leading party groups to study the circular item by item, earnestly discuss it, fully understand its guidelines, arm themselves ideologically, enhance their understanding, clearly define the policy limits, devise measures in line with their specific conditions to implement it and deepen the struggle against unlawful activities in the economic field.

2. Successfully organize party members, cadres, workers and their families to study the circular and see to it that they have a correct understanding of the circular and that the guidelines and policy principles of the circular take root in the hearts of the people.

3. Propaganda organs and mass media such as newspapers, radio and television stations should concentrate their attention on publicizing the circular guidelines in the near future to shape public opinion and create momentum against economic crimes.

4. Conduct an earnest investigation of the previous work in cracking down on economic crimes in various localities and departments on the basis of an enhanced understanding of the circular guidelines. Efforts should be made to solve problems affecting leadership, ideology and work. The top two leaders of party committees must join in.

5. Assign special personnel to attend to the investigations of grave and important cases.

WANG ENMAO AT XINJIANG RALLY ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Summary] On 16 April, Xinjiang regional CCP Committee First Secretary Wang Enmao spoke at a mass rally, demanding that "CCP committees at all levels seriously implement the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on striking blows at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. They must resolutely struggle against the criminal activities, including smuggling, peddling smuggled goods, offering and receiving bribes, graft, theft, speculation and profiteering. They must help the cadres of our party and state withstand the corruption of capitalism and guarantee the smooth progress of socialist modernization."

Wang Enmao said that since the smashing of the gang of four, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the situation of the entire country and the entire region has been excellent. In such an excellent situation, when we are implementing the open-door policy and the policy on enlivening the economy at home, some people are liable to smuggle, peddle smuggled goods, offer and receive bribes, commit graft, steal, speculate and profiteer. Capitalism will corrupt us. We must, therefore, heighten our understanding of the great significance of this struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. We must struggle to the end against criminals in the economic sphere. Wang Enmao said: "We must organize forces to investigate criminals. In accordance with the state law, public security departments, procuratorates and courts must punish them. Since the proclamation of the decision, some criminals have surrendered themselves to procuratorial organs and relevant units, returned their ill-gotten gains to the state and confessed their crimes. We must deal leninetly with them." Wang Enmao said thataall Communist Party members must wholeheartedly serve the people, wage a struggle against corruption by capitalist ideology and carry this struggle through to the end.

XINJIANG ON EDUCATING, HELPING YOUNG DELINQUFNTS

[Station commentary: "Do a Good Job of Educating and Helping Youths Who Have Been Led Astray"]

[Summary] During the all-people decorum and courtesy month, some areas launched activities of educating and helping youths who had been led astray. This was a good deed. We should show enthusiastic concern for youths who have been led astray and help them to reform so that they can become useful persons in the building of the four modernizations. At present, there are two different attitudes and practices in dealing with youths who have been led astray. One is to resolutely implement the party's relevant principles and policies and enthusiastically help them reform through education. The other is to despise and hate them and not give them a chance to reform. We should see that the first attitude and practice is correct, and the second is wrong. We should also see that although these youths have made mistakes, they are still useful persons, and can be reformed through education. As long as we correctly implement the party's principles and policies and do a good job of helping the youths who have been led astray to reform through education, we will obtain good results.

In the past few years, certain areas in Xinjiang region have been doing well in educating and helping the youths who have been led astray. Some of the county leaders have educated these youths by telling stories of the revolution and giving lectures on the tradition of the revolution, and organized them to pay attention and work for their ideals and prosperity. Thus, many youths who had been led astray have turned back onto the right path. In order to do a good job of educating and helping the youths who have been led astray, we must uphold the principle of commending good people and good deeds and punishing bad elements and their deeds. As an old saying goes, 3-foot-thick ice sheets take more than one cold day to form. The youths who have been led astray must have been corrupted by ideas of the exploiting class over a long period of time, and it is impossible for us to educate them and reform them within a day. We must be patient and persevere in educating and helping those who have been led astray. We must carry out specific and meticulous analysis of the mistakes of these youths and should not treat all kinds of mistakes as manifestations of class struggle. Only by so doing can we turn all the youths who have been led astray into useful persons who will strive for the realization of the four modernizations.

XINJIANG HOLDS AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION CONFERENCE

HK011028 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Summary] On the afternoon of 29 March, the Xinjiang regional CCP Committee and the regional people's government held a conference to analyze the situation of agricultural and livestock production in spring. The conference held: "The situation of agricultural, forestry and livestock production in our region this spring is good as a whole. However, we must see that there are many problems and difficulties. All localities must use their main forces to grasp spring farming well and lay stress on fighting drought and natural disasters to reap a bumper harvest." The conference pointed out that the larger part of our region has made relatively good preparations for spring sowing and done spring farming relatively smoothly. According to the statistics, by 24 March, the entire region had sown winter and early spring crops on 1.36 million mu.

The responsible persons of agricultural and economic departments and some agricultural experts who attended held: "In such an excellent situation, we must clearly see the unfavorable factors." The conference pointed out: "At present, all localitites must lay stress on grasping the following work well:

"First, it is essential to strengthen leadership and eliminate the idea of there being no need to strive to engage in agricultural production after the production responsibility system has been implemented. In the busy season, we must reduce the number of conferences and other activities and concentrate our forces on production. We must go deep into the grassroots to help them solve some specific problems. Second, we must stabilize the grain-sown areas and adhere to the principle of using the planned economy as the main method and the market regulation as an auxiliary method. We must teach cadres to take the overall situation into consideration and to correct the trend of one-sidely reducing the grain-sown areas. In places where the proportion of rotten winter wheat is high, we must cultivate spring wheat instead. In places where summer grain has not been sufficiently cultivated, we must make it up with autumn grain. We must vigorously raise per-mu yield. Third, we must strengthen winter wheat field management to strive for a bumper summer grain harvest. We must strengthen control over irrigation and use water sparingly. We must make good preparations for fighting drought and natural disasters. As the supply of chemical fertilizers this year is insufficient, all localities must attach importance to the collection and production of farm manure, cultivate green manure and cover and bury green manure by plowing. Fourth, it is necessary to give full play to the role of agricultural technicians and constantly enhance the peasants' scientific farming level. Fifth, we must stabilize the production responsibility system."

Leading comrades, including Tomur Dawamat, Li Jiayu and Janabil, spoke at the conclusion of the conference.

U.S., JAPAN REMAIN TAIWAN'S MAJOR TRADE PARTNERS

OW211401 Taipei CNA in English 0243 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Taipei, 21 Apr (CNA) -- The United States, Japan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and Hong Kong were the five largest trade partners of this country in 1981, with two-way trade reaching a total of U.S. $28,357 million, or 65 percent of the total trade volume of this country, according to statistics compiled by the Customs Office.

The office also revealed that the next five trade partners of the Republic of China [ROC] last year were West Germany, Australia, Indonesia, Britain and Canada. It said the U.S. was still the greatest export market for this country, with about U.S. $8.1 billion worth of ROC products going to the U.S. in 1981. That came to 26 percent of this country's total export.

ROC exports to Japan last year amounted to U.S. $2.4 billion; and Hong Kong, U.S. $2 billion; West Germany U.S. $900 million; all of which accounted for 28.5 percent of the ROC's export total.

In terms of imports here, the office said Japan remained the largest exporter to the ROC, selling a total of U.S. $5.9 billion products [as received] to this country. That amount accounted for 28 percent of the total imports by the ROC in 1981, while the U.S. took a 22.5-percent share. Imports from these two countries, together with those from Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and West Germany, accounted for 72.6 percent of the import total of this country.

COMMENTARY ON BAN OF JAPANESE CONSUMER GOODS

[Text] They laughed when the Republic of China banned some 1,500 items of Japanese consumer goods. At least the Japanese did. And they threatened to retaliate by eliminating some of Taiwan's so-called preferential duties. But according to reports from Tokyo, the Japanese have stopped laughing. They are afraid that others might do likewise. Some of the Europeans applauded. They said in effect that it is about time someone set the Japanese back on their heels.

The Republic of China is Japan's fifth biggest customer. And this is an Asian country speaking, a country which knows a great deal about how to sell goods to Japan and is still unable to do it. As one European remarked, the Japanese are unwilling to open their market to anyone. Americans are saying about the same thing. So the Republic of China's retaliatory move is catching a lot of attention, although it affects only a small fraction of trade between Taiwan and Japan. If everyone did the same, however, the Japanese would quickly feel the pinch.

Others must wonder too why the Japanese are so generous with the Chinese communists and so harsh with others. A lot of Chinese communist orders for Japanese goods had to be canceled because Peking [as heard] could not pay. But Japan came to the rescue. A big credit has been extended, while another one is in store for South Korea. Maybe there is no handwriting on the wall. Nevertheless, Japan once tried to occupy and control China and held Korea for roughly 40 years. Taiwan was occupied too, but the Republic of China was the most generous of victors against the Japanese, and then saw Japan leap into the arms of the communists.

Politics aside, those who trade with Japan are impressed by the Republic of China's determination to seek economic justice, even at some cost to itself. Although the Japanese denied it, they have been getting away with economic murder for years. Japan's market is closed to outsiders, and it does not matter how much experience the others have.

Traders of Taiwan know Japan very well. They speak the language. They are prepared to seek out goods that the Japanese like and want. But the Japanese do not want to buy. They only want to sell. This is protectionism run rampant. Japan's prosperity is built on export. At the same time, the Japanese have retained many of their small and inefficient industries. These have been protected by duties, classifications and red tape and what have you. No matter what you make or how well or how cheaply, these barriers cannot be penetrated. Go into the Japanese market, and you will quickly discern the result -- high prices. It is the Japanese consumer who is punished, unlike the American consumer who can buy low priced goods from Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore and other countries. Ask the Americans, Australians and New Zealanders about selling beef in Japan. Ask the Japanese people who must pay 25 American dollars a pound for prime steak. But the Japanese people do not protest. They are accustomed to discipline. They also have been told that if they do not protect their small and inefficient industries, they would lose their jobs. As the Taiwan action is beginning to suggest, they may be more likely to lose their jobs if they do not begin to share their home market.

Japan has won a lot of markets with reasonably priced quality goods. These goods can be purchased elsewhere, however. And it will be, if trade imbalances with Japan rise too high. The Republic of China had trade about 45 billion American dollars last year, and the deficit with Japan amounted to 3.5 billion of that. It is too much. That is why some Japanese imports were banned, and that is also why a large part of the rest of the world is applauding and thinking of doing the same.

SUN SAYS TAIWAN NEEDS NUCLEAR POWER STATIONS

[Text] The most widely circulated French-language weekly news magazine, LE POINT, or THE POINT, has quoted Premier Sun Yun-hsuan of the Republic of China as saying that the Republic of China is in need of a good-enough nuclear power station in every 2 years and there are many good opportunities for France to build the next one in the near future as a result of strengthening of substantial relations between France and the Republic of China through scientific and technical cooperation.

The French weekly news magazine contributed a two-page exclusive interview-story with Premier Sun by its special envoy (George Defferre), senior adviser and one of the founders of LE POINT, who is the first French journalist to interview Premier Sun in Taipei in 1982. Premier Sun told more than half a million French readers of LE POINT that the Republic of China in Taiwan serves as a lighthouse and hope of millions of people in mainland China who are under the yoke of Chinese communists and who know our condition of living. The full text of the exclusive interview granted by Premier Sun to (Defferre) is as follows:

Question: You are almost isolated diplomatically. Why don't you declare yourself as independent?

Premier Sun answered: By remaining China, we are the hope of millions of people in mainland China who know our condition of living, and we will not let Overseas Chinese who support the [words indistinct] cause of Taiwan to be disappointed.

Another question is whether the Peiping regime is changing?

Premier Sun answered: Indeed, it authorizes small private property and is willing to promote exchanges. But the rigidity of communism will block up the application of those reforms.

Why France didn't obtain the contract of your fourth nuclear power station, (Defferre) continued to ask.

Premier Sun answered: Your country was in a good position, and your technology is one of the best in the world. But Americans proposed a long-term credit, and that was more favorable. And (?could) electric power consumption would be doubled within 10 years. [sentence as heard] We will be in need of a new nuclear power station in every 2 years. There are many good opportunities for your country to build the next one. We have decided to establish durable relations with you.

And how is the plan of the underground subway in Taipei?

Answer: You are also in a good position in that aspect. In addition to France, there are Americans and Japanese who will soon ask for offers.

(Defferre), the journalist from the French newspaper, also asked: Why do you want to manufacture automobiles?

Premier Sun answered: Because we will be competitive. For the time being, a contract with the Renault. [sentence as heard] Thirty percent of spare parts will be imported from France, and we will produce the rest of it. Afterwards, we will sign a contract either with Toyota or Nissan. Forty percent of the capital will be Japanese and 60 percent will be ours. Do you think the Japanese will put so much money to the game if they don't believe in our success? The robot didn't scare us away because we don't have enough of manpower.

Do you still believe in an attack from Communist China, was the question.

And the answer: Actually it is not likely for the time being. Peking [as heard] is keeping its troops on the Russian and Vietnamese frontiers, and then they are short of landing material. However, the international situation is changing. For the purpose of defending ourselves, we need only aircraft and ships. The sea will take care of the rest. At present, we have American weapons. However, there are other manufacturers.

The French mass-circulation weekly news magazine also carried a blow-up, black-and-white picture showing (Defferre) as taking notes while interviewing Premier Sun in Taipei.

WEN WEI PO DISCUSSES SINO-U.S. RELATIONS

20 Apr Column

["Causerie After Editorial Work" column by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311]: "The Sino-U.S. Dispute Is Also a Good Thing"]

[Text] Yesterday's article in this column was entitled "There Is News [xiao xi 3194 1873] on Both Sino-U.S. and Sino-Soviet Relations." Some people asked me about the meaning of the words "there is news on both," saying that the meaning is not clear. In fact, my decision to use this title after completing the causerie was made with discretion. I thought that the implicit title I adopted was safe because no other words can fully express the idea.

However, the two characters xiao xi I used have other implications. The words "there is news on both" mean that "there is news within." The implication is that the bilateral relations are subtle. On the other hand, according to the explanatory remarks found in the "Xici" [0190 6588] chapter of the Book of Changes, xiao xi [3194 1873] in this context means "growth and decline," "empty and full" and the "process of replacing each other." Zhuang Zi also said: "Judging from the alternations of blessing and disaster [xiao xi 3194 1873] and the process of being empty and full, we can see that the end gives rise to the beginning. (The character "xi" [1873] refers to "growth," "one's children" and "interest.") I think that the two characters "xiao xi" [3194 1873] in ancient Chinese philosophy show a sense of dialectics. They are the unity of contradictions. They show that everything has two aspects, namely, growth and decline. Struggles waged in these two aspects promote changes in things and bring about progress.

The use of the words "there is news on both" implies that within both Sino-U.S. and Sino-Soviet relations, there are struggles waged in two aspects, namely, "growth" and "decline." Therefore, these struggles will inevitably give rise to changes in relations.

As regards changes in the future, we cannot act as fortune tellers or physiognamists in predicting changes.

This is my purpose in using the words "there is news on both."

However, judging from the duality in things, I am also of the opinion that the present stagnation or deterioration in Sino-U.S. relations is not at all a bad thing. At the same time, it may also be a good thing.

Looking back on the 10 years since the Sino-U.S. "Shanghai communique" and the 3 years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, after the United States has recognized one China -- the People's Republic of China, and that Taiwan is a part of the sacred territory of the People's Republic of China -- the image of the U.S. ruling class improved considerably among the Chinese people in general. The Chinese people believed that they would presumably give up their territorial ambition toward China and that they would be prepared to "treat us on a basis of equality" and become our friend.

However, this is not the case. It turned out that, at the same time, they passed the so-called "Taiwan Relations Act" and also set up a so-called "American Society in Taiwan." The former, under the name of a "domestic law," actually regards Taiwan as the domestic soil of the United States. The latter, under a "civilian" name, is actually included in the list of "diplomatic missions abroad" of the State Department. From this we can see that they have engaged in doubledealing from the very start to deceive the Chinese people.

Now they are again using the sales of arms to Taiwan to actively carry out a "two Chinas" policy, and some Americans are even taking advantage of the international women's softball championships to carry out a "two Chinas" policy.

By doing this, the Reagan administration has again given the Chinese people a lesson in politics, international relations and the essence of imperialism by negative example. This has informed us that imperialism is imperialism, and that imperialism is hegemonism and hegemonism will never give up its territorial ambition. It may on the one hand keep on professing that it wants to be your friend and recognize your sovereignty, but on the other hand, it is always either covertly or overtly cutting the ground from under your feet and breaking through your back door. Even such a big country as China with its immense population will also be bullied by imperialism just the same. Is it not a good thing that this point has again been cleared up?

Therefore, yesterday, in his talks with Joao Bernardo Vieira, head of state of Guinea-Bissau, Zhao Ziyang particularly emphasized China's foreign policy as: strengthening unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, opposing hegemonism and upholding world peace. Could this be accidental?

Only in this way can we survive, can we stand among the nations of the world and can we go forward.

Some Americans have bragged that because the United States can give effective help to China's four modernizations, therefore China will accept the sale of U.S. arms to Taiwan. So, giving effective help to China's four modernizations is for the sake of getting "two Chinas" in return and occupying China's Taiwan.

This makes people call to mind these words in the Christian scripture: "Good words from the mouth of bad people is like roses in the mouth of an asp."

This is indeed a good analogy. Will some of the American believers in Jesus Christ please think over whether or not there is a need for them to confess their sins to God?

22 Apr Article

[Article by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311]: "To Get Out of the Minefield, Follow the Signposts"]

[Text] There is a good simile to describe the impasse that Sino-U.S. relations are in. Where did this simile come from? It was found in the words of an American official.

Recently a meeting of American diplomats in Asia was convened in Honolulu by U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Holdridge who is a high-ranking official responsible for Far East and Pacific affairs and who flew to Beijing to hold talks (or to give an explanation according to some people) on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan in mid-January this year.

No hue or cry has been made about this meeting in the United States, because it is said to be a routine meeting. However since the meeting is being held at a time when Sino-U.S. relations are taking a turn for the worse, it is of course a meeting that differs from an ordinary routine meeting. Under the present situation, we can imagine that the meeting will listen to the reports on the response of the various Asian countries and areas to the cooling of and to the possible deterioration of Sino-U.S. relations. The meeting will also make a forecast of the problems that may possibly crop up when Sino-U.S. relations are downgraded and will discuss measures to solve these problems. If this guess is true, the American officials attending the meeting are there to contribute information and suggestions.

It was at this meeting that Holdridge used the simile of a "minefield" to describe the impasse Sino-U.S. relations are in at present. He said that the United States' proposal to sell $60 million of military spare parts to Taiwan had already put Sino-U.S. relations in a "minefield," and that delicate negotiations had to be carried out to take Sino-U.S. relations out of the danger zone.

This "minefield" simile is really profound as well as vivid. But this "minefield" has been built with American weapons, and the builder is precisely the Reagan administration itself.

In building the minefield, the Reagan administration aims to blow China into two. Unfortunately, China has seen through its trick and would rather let the Reagan administration blow up Sino-U.S. relations than stop China's fight against the trick of "two Chinas." This has put the Reagan administration into the "minefield" that it built by itself. As a man sows, so shall he reap. Is that not true? Now, the Reagan administration has to think of a way to get itself out of the danger zone. How funny!

Holdridge said that delicate negotiations have to be carried out to take Sino-U.S. relations out of the danger zone. These words are to some extent exaggerated. In fact, there are conspicuous signposts leading out of the danger zone. These signposts are the Shanghai communique which laid down the principle on the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States. The tenet of this principle is, in short, really recognizing only one China and really carrying out the promises of severing diplomatic relations with the Kuomintang authorities, scrapping the treaties between the United States and the Kuomintang authorities and withdrawing the U.S. Army from Taiwan.

If the United States sincerely acts in this manner instead of saying one thing but doing another, there will be no "minefield" at all. Even if the United States has built a "minefield" through carelessness, it can quickly leave the danger zone by following a proper path. The necessity of carrying out delicate negotiations to solve the problem mentioned by Holdridge has given us the impression that the United States does not want to follow the proper path, but is still striving to think up some tricks in order to carry on its arms sales to Taiwan as well as prevent the deterioration of Sino-U.S. relations. What a pity that the United States has not been wakened from its dream of "two Chinas" even today.

At the mentioning of the "Shanghai communique" our Kuomintang friends in Hong Kong will again feel grim and act in the manner of an evil spirit who sees some powerful incantations. Yesterday they once more assailed people by name and called people "literary slaves of communism," as if these words had the magic power to protect them. Sorry, the "Shanghai communique" and the principle on the establishment of diplomatic relations are of the nature of international agreements that have to be observed. Even the Reagan administration dares not deny this. If the Reagan administration violates these agreements, we will not easily let if off. These agreements do have some magic force on some evil spirits and we will repeatedly mention them to make these evil spirits ill at ease.

As for the name of "literary slaves" with which our Kuomintang friends have branded us, we have heard it for a long time and have never retorted. What is the good in hurting our Kuomintang friends' feelings? However, judging from the United States' arms sales to Taiwan, we think that our Kuomintang friends look fairly like the "military servants" of the United States. According to the United States, Taiwan is an "unsinkable aircraft carrier," while according to the Kuomintang, Taiwan is the United States' strategic protective screen in the western Pacific blocking the expansion of communism to the eastern Pacific region and which the Kuomintang requests the United States not to destroy. From these words, we see that the Kuomintang is voluntarily and actively proposing to "act as a pawn" for the United States. Are they not treating themselves as the "military servants" of the United States?

Such being the case, why does the United States not send U.S. arms to its "military servants" on the "unsinkable aircraft carrier" or "the strategic protective screen of the United States" free of charge? We do not mean that the grapes of the United States are sour. Whether the grapes are sour or sweet, you have to eat them free of charge! In short, you can refuse the payment or delay it. Why do you aggravate your burden of military expenditures and bring about an evil impact on the economic lives of the Taiwan compatriots?

HSIN WAN PAO ON ISSUES FOR NPC STANDING COMMITTEE

["New Talk" column: "Chairman, State Councillors, Five Sorts of People"]

[Text] An important meeting has just concluded in Beijing. The draft of the constitution was examined and approved yesterday by the constitution revision committee. It will soon be submitted to the NPC Standing Committee for discussiion. The NPC Standing Committee meeting, which was said to be originally scheduled for 12 April, the first [as published] Monday in April, will probably be held on 26 April, the third [as published] Monday in April.

Sources in Beijing said that some juristic experts are in favor of restoring the position of state chairman and having the state chairman serve concurrently as supreme commander of the three armed forces. This is probably reflected in the draft constitution. We have always been in favor of restoring the position of state chairman and solving, at the same time, the problem of whether the army should belong to the state or belong to the party. It is logically correct that the chairman of the state, rather than the chairman of the CCP Military Commission, should be the commander of the three armed forces.

As to who is the most appropriate candidate for the position of state chairman, I think most people have a common idea. But since it is still a long time before the election, they need not speak out right away.

Before the draft is passed at the NPC plenary session and becomes a formal new constitution, it should be first discussed and approved in the NPC Standing Committee meeting and then be publicized and discussed by the people throughout the country. This is a great event.

The other important item on the agenda of this NPC Standing Committee meeting is to discuss and approve the streamlining of the second batch of State Council organizations and some personnel matters.

It is said that this time, not only will the problem of over 10 ministries or commissions be resolved, but also the problem of over 10 vice premiers. It is also said that only Yao Yilin and Wan Li will continue to be vice premiers. Wan Li is now executive vice premier and Yao Yilin is director of the State Planning Commission. Both of them have good reputations.

It is expected that some of the other vice premiers will be appointed state councillors, which is the same rank as vice premier. Some people say that all of them will be appointed state councillors. However, we hold that this is not realistic because some of them are old and weak and can only act as advisers or simply retire, while some others, although they are not so old, are not capable at all. They did not do their jobs well and they do not have good reputations. They should not even be appointed ministers, much less state councillors. It is not right to think that since they have been high-ranking officials, they should only be promoted and not be demoted. This is not a principle that should be adhered to but a principle that should be abandoned.

Beijing has time and again stressed that in the streamlining of organizations and the transfer of personnel, three sorts of people must not be used: first, those who followed Lin Biao and Jiang Qing and made their fortune through "rebellion"; second, those who are seriously influenced by factionalism; and third, those who were engaged in beating, smashing and looting. They must be discharged without hesitation. Now two other sorts of people are added: those who have seriously violated the CCP's guiding principles for inner-party political life, and those who have seriously violated state laws and party discipline. Under no circumstances should they be promoted. All this must be done without leniency. Strict precautions should be taken so that no loopholes will be left.

LEADERS MEET WITH PAKISTAN FOREIGN MINISTER

Zhao Ziyang Meeting

OW221538 Beijing XINHUA in English 1520 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, Apr 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Sahabzada Yaqub Khan, Pakistan minister of foreign affairs, and his party here this afternoon. Premier Zhao extended a welcome to Yaqub Khan on his first visit to China, immediately after becoming foreign minister of Pakistan.

The Chinese premier said: "Sino-Pakistani relations are relations of mutual trust, mutual support and friendly cooperation. Our friendship has taken deep root in the hearts of the two peoples." "At present the world situation is very turbulent. Friendly Sino-Pakistani relations of cooperation will continue to grow no matter what happens in the world. China will firmly support Pakistan in its struggle to defend national independence and state sovereignty, and this principle of ours will never change."

Yaqub Khan said that Pakistan attaches great importance to its relations with China. "In the present situation, friendship between the two countries is more important than ever before," he said.

Present at the meeting were Fu Hao, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs, and M. Afzal Qadir, charge d'affaires and interim of the Pakistan Embassy in Beijing.

Earlier today, Chinese Vice-Premier and Foreign Minsiter Huang Hua and Pakistan Foreign Minister Yaqub Khan held talks on international and regional situations and on bilateral relations between China and Pakistan.

Huang Hua Fetes Minister

[Text] Beijing, Apr 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister Huang Hua today said that no matter how stormy and unstable the international situation may be, "the Chinese Government and people will always side with the government and people of Pakistan in their struggle to safeguard national independence and state sovereignty and oppose threats and interference from outside." He was speaking at a banquet in honor of Pakistan Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan and his party.

Vice-Premier Huang said deeply-rooted in the hearts of the people, Sino-Pakistan friendship has a solid foundation. "We have always supported and assisted each other in the cause of building up our respective countries and safeguarding world peace," he said. "This has characterized our bilateral relations."

He said the two countries share identical views on major international issues. "In international affairs we have always worked in close coordination and have had fruitful cooperation," he said.

Vice-Premier Huang said history has proved and will continue to prove in the years to come that the peoples of China and Pakistan are friends who can fully trust each other.

Referring to the international situation, the vice-premier said the people of the world are concerned over the developments in Afghanistan. "In the past two years or more," he said, "the Soviet authorities, in disregard of the many resolutions adopted by the U.N. General Assembly and the strong condemnation by the just world opinion, have been obstinately hanging on in Afghanistan and have thus far refused to withdraw their troops, their purpose being to realize their ambition of a southward drive. Peace in southwest Asia and the world is under grave menace." However, he said, things have developed contrary to the original wishful thinking of the aggressor. The Afghan people, far from yielding, have grown stronger in their struggle.

"With its large numbers of troops and sophisticated weapons," he said, "the aggressor has failed to consolidate its control over the entire Afghanistan, but has instead bogged down in a passive position. In order to extricate itself from its predicament, this superpower, while stepping up its repression of the Afghan people, is resorting to all sorts of tricks in an attempt to divert the attention of the world's people from the Afghan issue and compel the international community to accept the fait accompli created by its invasion of Afghanistan and to undertake not to support the Afghan people's struggle against aggression. In so doing, it hopes to consolidate its occupation of Afghanistan in order to serve its strategy of continued southward drive."

The vice-premier said he was convinced that the Afghan people's struggle to safeguard their independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity is a just struggle. "A just cause enjoys abundant support, while an unjust cause finds little support," he said. "The aggressor will not succeed in its attempt, and final victory certainly belongs to the people of Afghanistan and all their justice-upholding peoples."

He said the Chinese people admire Pakistan for upholding the four principles regarding a just settlement of the Afghan issue and for providing generous humanitarian assistance to the 2 million and more Afghan refugees. "The just action on the part of the Pakistan Government and people has won universal commendation and support," he said.

Yaqub Khan, in his speech, said: "The great Chinese people share our perceptions and goals on major regional and international issues." "This identity of views exists because our two countries base their policies on the universally respected principles of inter-state relations," he added.

He said: "Given the nature of our relations, it is only natural that my first visit abroad as foreign minister should be to the People's Republic of China. This, in itself, is a testimony to the enduring and time-tested relationship that exists between our two countries. It also forms part of the regular close consultations that are held between our two governments."

Yaqub Khan reiterated the Pakistan Government's position on some international issues. He said: "New hot-beds of tension are emerging and the old tensions are assuming new and added dimensions. One such point of tension has emerged across our borders in Afghanistan where the sovereignty of an Islamic and non-aligned country has been violated owing to military intervention by a superpower. As the military repression has been stepped up, the influx of Afghan refugees into Pakistan continues unabated."

Yaqub Khan said: "Pakistan is committed to finding a political solution to the crisis in Afghanistan in accordance with the principles of respect for independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all states and non-interference in their internal affairs as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. It is imperative that the foreign forces leave Afghanistan so that conditions are created that would facilitate the return of the Afghan refugees to their homeland in safety and honor. In our efforts to promote a peaceful political solution, we are cooperating with the United Nations secretary general."

Referring to the Kampuchean issue, he said: "The stand of Pakistan and that of the international community as expressed in the U.N. General Assembly resolutions is unambiguously for the termination of foreign military occupation, so that the people of Kampuchea can determine their own future in accordance with their own wishes."

On the situation in South Asia, Yaqub Khan said: "In our endeavors to promote peace and stability in the South Asian region, Pakistan has pursued the policy of normalization of relations with India in accordance with the Simla Agreement. Motivated by our desire to forge a relationship of mutual trust and confidence, we have proposed the conclusion of a no-war pact between the two countries. We hope that the interruption in our negotiations would be temporary and talks would again be resumed so that a modus vivendi can be reached. Pakistan is also participating actively in efforts to promote mutually beneficial cooperation among the countries of South Asia. In its resolve to follow an independent foreign policy that steers clear of the rivalries of competing great powers, Pakistan attaches great importance to its membership of the Non-aligned Movement. We deeply cherish our close link with the Islamic countries, who also comprise a vital component of the Third World. We seek to forge friendly ties with all countries consistent with the principles of peaceful co-existence, and we remain committed to the struggle for a new and more just international economic order."

Also among the guests were members of Yaqub Khan's party, and M. Afzal Qadir, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Pakistan Embassy in China.

Present were Vice-Ministers of Foreign Affairs Han Nianlong and Fu Hao, and Deputy Chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army Zhang Zhen.

VATICAN SAID 'UNDISGUISEDLY HOSTILE' TO PRC

HK221446 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0812 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Review by correspondent Chen Weibin [7115 4850 2430]: "The Vatican Should Change Its Course"]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Apr (XINHUA) -- Last month, in spite of the fact that a responsible member of the Chinese Catholic Association issued a statement in advance to lodge a strong objection, the Vatican still carried out prayer activities aimed at slandering China. In such activities, the Vatican maliciously distorted the reality in China, obstinately asserting that so-called "religious suffering" [jiaonan 2403 7181] has existed in China. It also incited Catholic associations throughout the world to follow it in pursuing anti-Chinese activities. This is another act of the Vatican in being undisguisedly hostile to China.

It is known to all that the government of our country pursues a policy of freedom of religious belief. Although the policy was sabotaged during the 10 chaotic years, it has been restored since the smashing of the "gang of four." The lives of the broad masses of clergy and believers are secure again. The malicious slander by the Vatican has played the role of teaching by negative example so that the Chinese Catholics can see more clearly through its anti-Chinese features.

In recent years, the Vatican has repeatedly adopted a pose of intending to improve its relations with China and has demanded through various channels to establish diplomatic relations with China. However, it has explicitly stated that it will not sever its relations with Taiwan. As long as the Vatican refuses to give up this position of harming Chinese sovereignty and territorial integrity, China will never talk about establishing normal relations with it.

Over a long period of time, the Vatican has carried out a series of infiltration and interference activities against China. For instance, without prior approval by the Chinese Catholic Association, the Vatican coercively assigned the post of the so-called archbishop to Deng Yiming. This was absolutely opposed by the organizations of the Chinese Catholic Association. Taking advantage of China's open-door policy, the Vatican authorities have spread, through broadcasts, materials which violate the sovereignty of the Chinese Catholic Church. They have even established illegal organizations to undermine the efforts of the Chinese Catholics to run their churches independently with the initiative in their own hands and tried to attain their objective of controlling the Chinese Catholic Association again. The Chinese people, including all patriotic Catholics, will never tolerate these hostile acts.

The Chinese Catholic Association pursues an independent policy and is willing to carry out friendly contacts with religious personages of various countries throughout the world on the basis of equality and exert joint efforts to make contributions to world peace. However, China resolutely opposes infiltration and interference activities by all foreign churches, including the Vatican, on the pretext of religion. The Vatican should change its attitude toward Chinese churches.

U.S. BIAS SAID TO CAUSE ISRAEL'S PROVOCATIONS

["Commentary: Israel's Expansion, Aggression Continue in Southern Beirut -- by Correspondent Zhong Dong" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 22 (XINHUA) -- The massive bombings of southern Beirut by Israeli aircraft Wednesday have proved once again that Israel has not, in the slightest degree, given up its aggression and expansion.

Shortly after announcing the withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula according to schedule, Israeli authorities Wednesday sent jets to bomb the Palestine Liberation Organization's bases in southern Beirut and to intrude into Beirut's airspace.

This was a new, and serious action taken by Israel.

Since its gradual withdrawal from Sinai began two years ago, Israel has taken many aggressive and expansionistic actions. Last June, Israel bombed Beirut and southern Lebanon. In addition, it has raided nuclear installations in Iraq, annexed Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, and dissolved the administrative councils of some West Bank cities.

All these actions have aroused extreme indignation among Arabs.

Israel's attack on PLO's bases proves that the Palestine problem is a key point in the Middle East problem. Israeli Prime Minister Begin has repeatedly declared that he will never recognize the PLO and never allow the establishment of a Palestine state. These vows are proof of Begin's intention to map off the Palestine issue once and for all.

The day before Israel bombed southern Beirut, the 7th U.N. emergency special meeting asked Israel to withdraw from the occupied Arab lands and recognize the Palestinians' right to an independent state. But the Begin administration, which has turned a deaf ear to international opinion, ignored the U.N. call.

It is noteworthy how the United States shields Israel's actions. On the same day, Israel bombed southern Beirut, the United States vetoed a U.N. Security Council proposal that condemns an Israeli attack on the Al-Aqsa Mosque recently in Jerusalem.

U.S. Biasness toward Israel causes Israel's reckless provocations as evidenced by the Palestinians, the Arabs and other people in the world.

UN ENVOY CRITICIZES ISRAELI BOMBING IN LEBANON

OW230747 Beijing XINHUA in English 0730 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Text] United Nations, April 22 (XINHUA) -- China strongly condemns Israel for its latest crime of aggression against Lebanon and firmly supports the palestinian people in their just struggle and Lebanon and Syria in their endeavour to safeguard independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, Chinese Permanent U.N. Representative Ling Qing declared here today.

Speaking at the resumed 7th emergency special session of the General Assembly on Palestine, he said that Israel's indiscriminate bombing Wednesday on Palestinian refugee camps and innocent Lebanese population "is another provocation on the part of Israel against the Lebanese, Palestinian and Arab people as a whole."

He pointed out the latest bombing followed recent Israeli acts of violence in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the attack on the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem.

Ling Qing added that draft resolutions put forward earlier at the Security Council by Jordan, Morocco and other states, whch condemned Israel for its crimes in the Golan Heights and the precincts of al-Haram ash-Shari and demanded that Israel stop its acts in violation of the Geneva Convention, reflected the common desire of the Arab, Islamic and non-aligned countries to oppose Israeli aggression and to preserve peace and stability in the Middle East.

The United States has vetoed these draft resolutions, emboldening Israel in its aggression, Ling Qing noted. The Security Council thus had failed to discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Chinese representative added.

He continued that in order to achieve a just solution to the Middle East question, it was imperative for Israel to withdraw from all Arab territories it occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem. The national rights of the Palestinian people must be restored, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own state. As the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, PLO should participate in all efforts to achieve a comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East question.

"The Assembly should take all necessary and effective measures, including mandatory sanctions, against Israel. The question of Palestine is a major issue in the present day world. We hope that the United Nations will shoulder its responsibilities and make its own contributions to the settlement of the Palestine issue," the Chinese representative stated.

Commentary on Bombing

[Commentary by XINHUA correspondent Zhong Dong [6988 0392]: "Retreat and Advance"]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Apr (XINHUA) -- On the afternoon of 21 April, Israel dispatched aircraft to bomb PLO bases south of the Lebanese capital Beirut and also intruded over Beirut's airspace. The indiscriminate bombing lasted 1 and 1/2 hours and caused the death of at least 25 people, while hundreds were injured. By this barbaric aggression the Begin clique has torn up the cease-fire agreement of last July and again created tension in the Middle East.

The Israeli Cabinet announced in a radio broadcast at 1230 on 21 April that Israel would withdraw its forces from the Sinai on schedule, and the massive bombings started 1 hour 55 minutes after the announcement. This retreat on the one hand and advance on the other has revealed the vicious intentions of the Begin government. Its decision to withdraw from the Sinai seemed to indicate that it wants peace; however, its inhuman and savage bombing of the Beirut area proves that it likes war even better. The facts have again told people that Israel has not in the slightest degree given up its aggressive and expansionist ambitions against the Arab world.

The bombing of the Beirut area is just a new and serious step taken by Israel. Since its gradual withdrawal from the Sinai began 2 years ago, Israel has already taken many steps along the path of continued expansion. Last June, Israel bombed Beirut and southern Lebanon, and at the same time provoked a missile crisis with Syria and carried out an air raid on a nuclear reactor in Iraq. It brazenly announced the annexation of Jerusalem and also took the serious step of annexing the Golan Heights. More than 1 month ago, Israel also started to institute a so-called "civilian administration" on the West Bank of the Jordan River and attempted to apply the method of replacing Palestinians with Jewish officials to attain its objective of bringing the West Bank into "greater Israel." Israel's step-by-step advance has evoked tremendous anger among the residents of the occupied and annexed Arab territories. The fierce flames of their resistance are now ablaze.

That Israel has aimed the spearhead of its attack against Lebanon and will be content with nothing less than its destruction proves yet again from the negative aspect that the Palestine problem is the key to the Middle East problem. Begin recently swore repeatedly that he will never recognize the PLO or allow the establishment of a Palestine state. The targets of the raids on the Beirut area last year and this time were in both cases the PLO offices and camps, and Israel's conspiracy to annex the West Bank of the Jordan River -- Palestinian territory -- shows still more clearly that it wants to completely eliminate the Palestinian problem. Begin thinks that he can swallow a nation with one gulp and strangle a state with one grip; how great his appetite and ambitions are.

The day before Israel bombed Beirut, the seventh UN emergency special meeting asked Israel to withdraw from the occupied Arab lands and recognize the Palestinians' right to an independent state. The Begin government paid not the slightest attention to this, as it has consistently turned a deaf ear to international opinion. The U.S. attitude is worth mentioning. On the same day, the United States again vetoed a UN Security Council proposal that condemned an Israeli armed attack on the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem. U.S. protection and connivance has long become the root of Israel's reckless provocations, as evidenced by the Palestinians, the Arabs and the people of the whole world.

FURTHER REPORT ON NPC STANDING COMMITTEE SESSION

[Text] Beijing, 22 Apr (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the Fifth National People's Congress opened its 23d Session at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon.

Ye Jianying, chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, presided over the plenary session this afternoon.

Entrusted by Ye Jianying, chairman of the national constitutional revision committee, and representing the committee, Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the committee, presented an "explanation on the revised draft of the constitution of the People's Republic of China."

Peng Zhen said: Since the founding of the republic, China has had three constitutions. The 1954 document was comprehensive in content, while the 1975 and 1978 documents, restricted by the historical conditions at that time, were undesirable. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee at the end of 1978, the nation's situation has greatly changed and developed. The 1978 constitution no longer suits the needs of the current situation. Therefore, some relatively important changes have been made.

He said: The draft of the revised constitution has been worked out by the national constitutional revision committee in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the Third Session of the Fifth NPC on revising the constitution and establishing the national constitutional revision committee. The draft has been prepared after the committee extensively solicited opinions from various localities, departments and quarters and through conscientious and detailed discussions in the past 18 months. The draft consists of five parts: "preamble," "general principles," "rights and obligations of citizens," "state structure" and "the national flag, emblem and capital." Besides the preamble, it contains 140 articles.

Peng Zhen explained the principal points of the revised draft.

-- The preamble in the draft of the revised constitution affirms adherence to the four fundamental principles -- socialism, the people's democratic dictatorship, Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and leadership of the party. The Chinese people will continuously adhere to the four fundamental principles in the future to build China into a socialist country which has modern industry, agriculture, defense and science and technology and is highly democratic and cultured.

-- The first article of the general principles in the draft of the revised constitution states: China is "a socialist state under the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants." This is our state system, which determines the nature of our country and the positions of all classes in the country.

-- The socialist system is fundamental. The draft of the revised constitution states: "The foundation of China's socialist economic system is the socialist public ownership of means of production, or ownership by the whole people and the working masses' collective ownership." Economy of ownership by the whole people "is the dominant force of the national economy."

-- The material base of the socialist society is the highly developed productive forces. The draft of the revised constitution states: "The fundamental task of the Chinese people is to concentrate their efforts on socialist modernization." The state will take various measures to "continuously increase labor productivity and economic results to develop social productive forces."

-- It is a long-term task to promote high spiritual civilization while developing high material civilization at the same time. The task consists of two aspects: conducting ideological and ethical education and developing education, science and culture. Its purpose is to educate people of all nationalities, men and women, young and old, throughout the country so they can become educated, virtuous and disciplined and have high aspirations.

-- Raising the nation's cultural, scientific and technological levels is indispensable to the development of socialist material and spirtual civilization. We must have, not only a large number of experts and scholars who are highly professional and specialized in their respective fields, but also a vast number of educated workers and peasants.

-- The draft specifically provides the basic rights of citizens in accordance with the principle of socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. The draft resumes the 1954 constitution provision that all citizens are equal before law. The draft stipulates that citizens' rights should not be separated from their obligations. Any citizen enjoys rights provided by the constitution and law and has obligations to observe the constitution and law.

Provisions in the draft of the revised constitution concerning state organizations embody important reforms and new developments in China's state system. These provisions are: The system of people's congresses will be strengthened and the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee expanded. The chairman of the state will be reinstated. The Central Military Council will be established to lead the whole country's armed forces. The State Council will follow the system of responsibility of the premier. The Standing Council of the State Council consists of the premier, vice premiers, state councillors and secretary general. The central authorities and the local authorities will exercise properly divided powers. The local authorities' functions and powers will be strengthened under the unified leadership of the central authorities. The regional national autonomy will be strengthened. The political power at the grassroots level will be strengthened.

In conclusion, Peng Zhen said: This draft will be made public by the NPC Standing Committee for nationwide discussion. In accordance with views gathered from nationwide discussion, the constitutional revision committee will further revise the draft, and then submit it to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC for discussion.

Also attending today's session were NPC Vice Chairmen Ulanhu, Wei Guoqing, Liao Chengzhi, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Xu Deheng, Xiao Jingguang, Shi Liang, Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun and Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan.

Also present were Jiang Hua, president of the Supreme People's Court; Huang Huoqing, chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate; and Standing Committee members of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference now in Beijing. The responsible persons of the people's congress standing committees of all provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government attended the session as observers.

The session will hold group discussions from 23 April.

CHINA DAILY ON CADRES EDUCATING THEIR CHILDREN

HK230144 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 23 Apr 82 p 4

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "A New Party Injunction"]

[Text] When the gang of four was overthrown in 1976, the country faced the gravė problem of reeducating its younger generation. Moral breakdown affected many young people, who were cynical, egotistic, irresponsible and on the whole ignorant.

This was one of the legacies of the 10-year turmoil during which colleges and high schools were mostly closed down, and tens of thousands of intellectuals and technical personnel were sent off to do manual labour. Professional knowledge was in general looked down upon.

During those chaotic years, many young people were deprived of both school and parental upbringing. They were encouraged instead to leave home and campus to "rebel" against society. The result was that these young folk were greatly influenced by anarchism and a total lack of respect for any authority.

The years immediately following the collapse of the gang of four saw thousands of maltreated ageing cadres rehabilitated and back at their original posts, the phoney charges against them having been dismissed. To the mortification of many of these old party cadres, some of their own children had been badly misled because of the lack of education and the kind of life they had led during the years of tumult.

Alert

A recent case in point is the son of He Huiyan, a high ranking officer of the People's Liberation Army and a party member for 50 years. The young man was arrested on a charge of rape. Upon learning the news, he wrote a letter to the Central Committee of the party making a self-criticism and blaming himself and his wife of negligence in raising the son. The culprit has since been sentenced to life imprisonment.

The Disciplinary Inspection Commission of the Central Committee has pointed to this incident to warn the whole party against the danger of youngsters going astray, which could result in harming the cause of the party and the nation.

If the party members concerned devote attention to help straighten their misled children, they will go a long way to set an example for other parents throughout the country.

The commission issued a circular on April 10 to the effect that for the rest of this year all party organizations, without exception, should check up on how members bring up their children and make an assessment of their merits and demerits.

The circular also stipulated that no party members should ever raise a finger to shield their children's crimes and that, in prosecuting and punishing criminals, no consideration should be given to parents' rank and past record in revolution. All party members are required from now on to report to their respective party branches on how their children are being brought up.

Timely

In focussing its attention on the importance of party cadres educating their children properly, the Central Committee obviously is mindful of the painful lessons of the "Cultural Revolution," which brought to light the sad truth that state power, for the seizure of which thousands of communists gave their lives, could change hands without a shot being fired.

Times have changed, as has the people's mood. When Dong Cunrui blew himself up together with a Kuomintang pillbox, he knew that it was a communist's duty to give his life if necessary. When martyrs faced enemy firing squads, they were unshaken in their conviction that socialism would ultimately triumph.

The party's higher echelons are clear-minded enough to have de ided that the fruits of the long years of war and revolution -- at a cost of millions of lives and untold hardship -- shall not be squandered. Building a highly democratic and highly civilized socialist country requires the conscientious efforts of several generations to come. In this respect, the injunction by the Central Disciplinary Inspection Commission is surely both timely and vital.

ARTICLE VIEWS STRATEGY OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

[Article by Sun Shangqing [1327 1424 3237]: "Some Understanding on the Strategy of Our Country's Economic Development"]

[Text] At present, people often discuss the strategy of economic development. The study of the strategy is still at an initial stage and its achievements are relatively few. My understanding of strategy is rudimentary and superficial.

Our socialist society is based on public ownership. This kind of socialist development requires us to set a strategic target conscientiously, to coordinate forces from all sides and to achieve the target step-by-step, so as to push our society forward. Achieving the strategic target of social development requires a series of strategies. The strategy of economic development is a basis for social development. It is impossible to discuss other social developments if we leave behind economic development. Different social natures have different strategies of social development. The strategies of economic development may differ a lot even for countries of the same nature. This is mainly due to differences in specific socioeconomic characteristics.

I believe that based on specific production relations, population, technology and resources are the prerequisites for laying down the strategy of economic development.

1. Population: The strategy of economic development of a society will certainly be incorrect or unworkable if it neglects the condition of population. The reason is that population affects economic activities in two aspects. First, men are producers. Men can become laborers and produce. Second, men are consumers. In order to live, to seek necessary comfort and to make further developments, men need raw materials and resources for their survival, comfort and development. Men produce wealth for the society, and in return, they have to get back some wealth from the society to fulfill their own needs. We should proceed from the condition of population in formulating the strategy of economic development. Chairman Mao stressed that we should proceed from the condition of our population of 600 million when handling matters and solving problems. Comrade Chen Yun also said that our country has a population of 1 billion, of whom 800 million are peasants. We should take population into consideration when handling problems. That it is in fact a strategic ideology is beyond doubt. Even some researchers on economic strategies in the capitalist class do not deny this factor.

We should not only generally consider the effect of population but also fully consider the specific conditions of our country's population when formulating the strategy of economic development.

Our country has a large population of peasants but our agricultural productivity is very low. As a result, surplus products provided for the society by agriculture are relatively few. This seriously affects the size of accumulation, the speed of economic development, the development of various enterprises and the upgrading of science, education, culture and public health.

How to deal with our population in the formulation of economic strategy is a very important problem. According to Marxist theory, the increase in population should be compatible with that in raw materials and resources in a planned society. Generally speaking, the Marxist attitude towards population is that it pays much attention to men as producers, to developing man's potential as producer so as to satisfy the needs of social and human development. However, our population has increased to nearly 1 billion at a time when our standard in exploring for natural resources is still relatively low and our development ability is still relatively weak. Under these circumstances, the most important way for Marxists to solve the contradiction between the increase in population and that in natural resources and raw materials is to control the increase in population. Therefore, we should not confuse our viewpoints with those one-sided viewpoints concerning population which have appeared in foreign reports on the strategy of economic development.

On the other hand, we should actively bring the effect of population into full play. It is true that man is the most important factor for production. The problem is that a good coordination and development of labor population requires a series of social conditions. For instance, the young people who are now seeking employment can create wealth for the society. However, at present, we cannot at one time provide them with enough production resources to do production and non-production work. We should try our best to find out new ways to bring the productivity of our population into full play.

This is a very important task. Another condition of bringing population into active play is the quality of our population, including health and, to a greater degree, the intellectual level of our population. In a word, population is a very important problem to take into consideration when we formulate the strategy of economic development.

2. Technology: The strategy of economic development would lose its scientific significance if technology were ignored. It is beyond doubt that in the future, the development of technology will proceed faster and faster. From the Marxist viewpoint, technology has become the major means of developing modern productivity. Theoretically, there are three ways of developing productivity: first by increasing the labor force; second, by rationally coordinating the essentials of productivity through microeconomic and macroeconomic study; third, by carrying out technological reform and revolution. The upgrading of modern productivity depends more and more heavily upon the upgrading of technology. Therefore, the strategy of our economic development relies heavily upon technology. Material technology is in the form of facilities, means of measuring and testing which become the materials for production. Technology is also in the form of know-how, the invention and mastery of technology and man's knowledge and skill. As the fulcrum of the strategy of economic development, technology includes material technology as well as technological know-how. Material technology will be a dead thing if it is not mastered and handled by workers who possess the corresponding knowledge and skill. Therefore, material technology, technological know-how and its development, trends and changes should all be taken into consideration in formulating the strategy of economic development.

3. Resources: The formulation of the strategy of economic development and the condition of resources are closely related. Productivity for economic development can be increased through the exploration of resources. There are two kinds of resources. One is processed and becomes raw materials, fuel and power. Another is what Karl Marx called "natural resources", which are not processed. We should work harker in exploring for resources and in developing the range and quality of resources in a bid to use our natural resources effectively and properly. Fundamentally speaking, our economy cannot be developed if our resources are not exploited. However, the exploitation and use of resources depend on the development of technology. At present, exploring for resources in our country is relatively less-developed as our capacity and technology for exploration are limited. The conditions of our resources are favorable. However, our superiority is undermined by our high population and poor technology. For instance, our country is vast and we are rich in land and other natural resources. The land for farming, forestry and animal husbandry makes up 46 percent of the total land area. When distributed equally, everyone would get 6.6 mu. But the average for the wrold is 33 muper head, five times more than ours. The average area of arable land of our country is 1.5 mu per head, while the wrold average is 5.5 mu per head, three times more than we have. Our country has about 1.8 billion mu of land for forestry. The average is 1.8 mu per head; the world average is 15 mu per head, eight times more than we have. These figures indicate that on account of our huge population, our average level is much lower than that of the world despite the fact that we have vast land and rich resources.

We should, therefore, take population, technology and resources into consideration when formulating the strategy of economic development. We should not isolate these factors. As we have a large population, the production rate of our 800 million peasants is very low. The rate of commodity grain is only 15 percent. The labor productivity of industry is not high. Under these circumstances, the construction capital of our country cannot be accumulated quickly to a large sum. The development of production cannot be too rapid. The upgrading of the people's standard of material and cultural living is taking place relatively slowly. Therefore, the ideology for the strategy of economic development should be opposed to any drastic methods of making achievements. We should foster an ideology of long-term struggle.

Looking back on our country since its founding, we notice that we have failed to take the basic factors for the strategy of economic development into consideration. We have hoped that our country, with a vast territory, a huge population and low production rate, will strive to surpass some economically advanced countries in a few years' time or in a decade. This is obviously impractical.

The above-mentioned bases for the strategy of economic development -- population, technology, and resources -- tally with the three bases for productivity. Economic study of the unity of the three bases for productivity and the study of the development and law of productivity will provide us with a scientific basis for the formulation of the strategy of economic development. The combination of productivity and the law of production relations will set the stragegy of economic development on a solid scientific ground.

BIDS INVITED ON COMPUTERS, EDUCATIONAL AIDS

[Text] Beijing, April 17 (XINHUA) -- China is inviting bids for instruments and equipment to strengthen laboratories at 26 universities as part of a university development project, according to the China National Technical Import Corporation (CNTIC).

The first stage of the project includes procurement of equipment for physics, electronics, biology, chemistry and engineering as well as microcomputers, peripherals and university computer systems.

Bids for university computer systems will be opened in public at CNTIC on July 16 while other bids will be opened on June 16, CNTIC said.

The World Bank will finance the project with 200 million U.S. dollars under an agreement signed last November by the Chinese Government and the World Bank. Half of the financing will be in the form of a loan from the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development and half in credit from the International Development Association.

The Chinese Government will also finance the purchase with a sum similar to the World Bank loan and credit, said an official of the Chinese Ministry of Education. The government already has made large investments on improvement of university education and research, he said.

The 26 project universities will install the equipment in 46 computer, analytical testing and specialized laboratory centers and a number of general laboratories for junior and senior students.

The ministry official said the equipment will raise the ability to do laboratory work of students majoring in science, engineering, medicine and agronomy. While the level of theoretical education and research at Chinese universities is not low, he explained, laboratory experiments need to be strengthened.

The university development project is expected to be completed in 1985, he added.

PLA AIR FORCE REVIEWS POLITICAL WORK RESEARCH

[Text] The leading organ of the PLA Air Force recently held a conference on political work research. The purpose was to sum up the air force's experience in conducting research over the past year into the political work of the new period and to commend a number of leading cadres at and above the army level who made achievements in political work research.

Ever since the General Political Department held a forum on political work research last June, the air force has been active in this research. It has achieved some high quality research results in its efforts to find out the laws governing political work during the new period. The air force's experience in political work research primarily includes the following:

1. Leading cadres get involved directly. Both air force Commander Zhang Tingfa and Political Commissar Gao Houliang have gone deep into the grassroots units and written their own investigation reports. Since last year the air force political department has received 75 investigation and study reports written by leading cadres at and above the army level.

2. Pay attention to the offices first so they can set examples for the air force units, thus providing impetus to mass participation in political work research. Since last June air force offices at all levels have produced 481 investigation and study reports. (Ding Yiping), a teacher of the air force political school, in his active effort to seek laws governing grassroots level political work, has written an easy-to-understand book on the subject entitled "How To Do Well in the Day-to-Day Ideological Work at the Company Level." The book has been well received by company cadres at the grassroots level.

3. Closely combine the three aspects of investigation, study and problem solving. Make good efforts in investigation, get results out of the study and make sure the problems are effectively solved.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN SPEAKS AT FORESTRY MEETING

[Excerpts] The Fujian provincial meeting on the work of state forestry farms concluded on 15 April in Fuzhou after 7 days in session. Those attending the meeting summed up experience and achievements in production and construction by the state forestry farms in the province. They also discussed and studied issues concerning how to manage state forestry farms and how to institute economic responsibility systems in state forestry farms. The meeting emphastically pointed out: All state forestry farms must regard the development of forestry as their major task and actively promote a diversified economy, while fulfilling state production plans in both quantity and quality to achieve the goal of developing forestry with the income from forests and of continuously expanding reproduction in the field of forestry.

The meeting called on forestry farms in various localities to maintain close touch with reality and work out specific long-term and short-term plans for the development of a diversified economy. It is necessary to seek truth from facts, emphasize practical results and try to complete projects one by one. The meeting put forward the following future task of Fujian's state forestry farms: It is necessary to expand the area covered by trees by 100,000 mu in Fujian, increase forest reserves by 10 percent and raise forest output and income from forests by 10 percent annually.

When the meeting was in session, Comrade Xiang Nan, secretary of the provincial CCP committee [as heard], received the participants of the meeting and made an important speech. Comrade Xiang Nan said: Forestry is a major issue which will greatly affect Fujian's economy. It constitutes the main force in the eight base areas under construction in our province. This is the happiest event we have ever seen in the province.

Comrade Xiang Nan said: Through our strenuous efforts, our financial deficits can be eliminated in 1, 2 or 3 years. However, forest deficits cannot be wiped out in 10, 20 or even 30 years. He hoped that all comrades in the field of forestry would demonstrate a sense of pride, regard their hardship as a form of happiness and glory, truly cover the motherland with trees and tap even greater wealth from the mountains and villages for the motherland and the people.

SHANDONG URGES IMPROVED ECONOMIC EFFICIENCY

[Station commentary: "Shift Emphasis of Economic Work to Improving Economic Efficiency"]

[Excerpt] Improving economic efficiency is the core of the 10-point policy on economic development and the fundamental starting point for bringing economic development onto a new course. It reflects the basic socialist economic law and the law of planned and proportioned development of the national economy. Since the PRC's founding, our province has accomplished a great deal in industrial and communications production thanks to the leadership of party committees at all levels, provided large amounts of materials and commodities to the various sectors of the national economy and the people's livelihood and contributed great amounts of capital to socialist construction. However, under the prolonged influence of leftist ideology, we have for a long time ignored the increasingly serious inefficiency in economic work, with the result of colossal waste. Reports on gross industrial output have more often than not been exaggerated. Many products are highly priced, poor in quality and hardly marketable, and eventually end up being dumped at reduced prices. Thanks to implementation of the readjustment policy following the third plenum of the party, inflated reports on industrial production have decreased and economic efficiency has improved. However, the problem of unsalable and overstocked goods resulting from lopsided attention to output and output value at the expense of quality and variety has yet to be solved at the source. We have also failed to properly handle the relations between speed and efficiency and between macroeconomic and microeconomic efficiency. All these problems reflect an inadequate understanding on our part of the objective of socialist production and of the relations between production and consumption. We failed to understand that production is for consumption and only commodities needed by society will be recognized and have their value and usefulness realized.

Increasing economic efficiency is a problem crying for solution in our current economic work. To solve this problem, we must first of all effect a successful turnabout of our guiding ideology. Leadership at all levels in particular must straighten out their ideology. We should divert our main attention away from output value and speed to the variety, quality and marketability of commodities, and lay more emphasis on reducing consumption, bringing down production costs and increasing accumulation than on increasing revenues by means of increased output. We should switch our concentration from production to management and technology and, instead of expanding enterprises and increasing production capacity, attach more importance to technological innovations, equipment renewal and the application and popularization of new technology, and strive to turn out more commodities that are able to meet market demands with less labor and material input.

SHANGHAI PAPER ON PROMOTING UNITED FRONT WORK

[Commentator's article: "Pay Attention To Doing United Front Work Well"]

[Excerpts] The Fourth Session of the Seventh Shanghai Municipal People's Congress and the Fourth Session of the Fifth Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee are being held seriously and vigorously.

The people's deputies selected from among people of all walks of life and the municipal CPPCC committee members, with high spirit and vigor, are actively expressing their views and offering advice on how to step up the establishment of socialist material and spiritual civilization and accomplish peaceful reunification of the motherland, showing the vitality of the patriotic united front.

The patriotic united front is playing a more and more important role in our political life. Nevertheless, some of our comrades do not fully understand our party's united front, nor do they attach importance to united front work, because of "leftist" interference and influence over a long period of time. Therefore, to strengthen the united front, ideological education among cadres and people is an important part of the reeducation in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, as well as an important content of the education on the situation and tasks of the new historical period.

Since China entered the new historical period of development, the patriotic united front has also entered a new historical stage of development. Since the bourgeoisie ceased to exist as a class and the class situation in China underwent a fundamental change, our patriotic united front has become a comprehensive political alliance of all socialist working people, patriots who support socialism and patriots who support reunification of the motherland. This broadly comprehensive patriotic united front, led by the Chinese Communist Party, consists of workers, peasants, members of various democratic parties, public figures without party affiliation, intellectuals and cadres without party affiliation, former bourgeois industrialists and businessmen, former Kuomintang personnel who crossed over to our side, upper circles of minority nationalities, patriotic personages of religious circles, relatives, residing on the Chinese mainland, of those who are in Taiwan, patriotic Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Overseas Chinese who returned to settle in China and Overseas Chinese. Within the united front, there will still be various contradictions, but conflicts of fundamental interests no longer exist. The current primary task of the united front has shifted from the old task of serving socialist tranformation to serving the four modernizations in the present socialist construction.

In Shanghai, the largest city in China, intellectuals, former bourgeois industrialists and businessmen, members of various democratic parties and public figures of various circles account for a considerable percentage of the urban population. They are educated and have broad social connections and an intense desire to contribute their strength to the motherland. They are a very important force which our country must rely on in the four modernizations. Because our party's various policies have been implemented, step by step, since the 3d Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the majority of our friends outside the CCP have had peace of mind and been fired with greater patriotic enthusiasm. Many of them have actively contributed to the four modernizations. They have also actively responded to, and implemented, Chairman Ye Jianying's nine-point proposal on peaceful reunification of the motherland and Chairman Hu Yaobang's proposal. They have stepped up contacts with the compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macao and overseas; actively publicized the CCP's principles and policies, the excellent situation of the motherland and the achievements in socialist construction; and assisted various government departments concerned in implementing policies, thus contributing their strength to promoting the reunification of the motherland.

During the sessions of the municipal people's congress and the municipal CPPCC committee, we should unite in a more comprehensive way with the people of various nationalities, members of various democratic parties, various mass organizations and all patriotic forces in order to consolidate and develop the united front. We are confident that if all fronts and departments, under the guidance of the correct line, principles and policies laid down by the party Central Committee and the State Council, attach importance to the united front work and do it well, we surely can unite with all forces which can be united with, mobilize all positive factors and constantly push our great socialist cause forward.

REN ZHONGYI SPEAKS ON IDEOLOGICAL, ECONOMIC WORK

[Text] Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi said recently, while examining the industrial and communications work in the provincial economic commission, that in the economic field, we should lay equal stress on both ideological and economic work.

Ren Zhongyi said that we must resolutely carry the struggle of combating serious crimes in the economic field through to the end. For staff and workers in factories and enterprises, the main task is to carry out positive education and study. Cases involving them will be handled realistically when they occur. But the method of making confessions and reporting offenses on a mass scale and the method of everyone washing his hands and taking a bath will not be used. If mistakes have been made, or even if laws have been violated in some units, but the leaders have not personally committed crimes such as embezzlement or bribery, the nature of the case is different. It is necessary to examine and correct the mistakes, but these mistakes must not become burdens for them. They must continue to work hard and achieve more successes.

As to the new problems in the present industrial and communications work, they must be studied and properly sovled. We must not only see the difficulties and become dispirited; instead, we must make up our minds to score more achievements this year. The open-door economic policy and the policy of enlivening our economy must be carried on. While laying the stress on planned economy, it is necessary to display the auxiliary role of regulation by market mechanism. In order to rectify the trend of liberalization, it is necessary to strengthen management and work out some regulations and methods, but we must not present obstacles to normal activities for enlivening the economy. When it is necessary to send purchasing agents to some other places, they should be sent. Of course, purchase by illegal means must not be allowed. All units in our province as well as in the entire country should supply other units with what they need and units must help each other. The experience of some enterprises, such as enlivening production through sending agents to other places to promote sales and purchase raw materials, must be affirmed and popularized. At the same time, it is also necessary for factories and enterprises to make good arrangements for technological innovation.

Referrring to the organizational system, Ren Zhongyi said that under the present situation in which the reform is going on at the central level and has not yet begun in our province, we must continue our normal practice and coordination. Cadres at various levels must give play to their enthusiasm and pay more attention to improving their method and style of work. In short, they must promote production and use all means to do their jobs well.

The meeting demanded that party, government and army leaders at all levels and all cadres, especially comrades engaged in people's air defense work, clearly understand the situation, the characteristics of modern war and the strategic position and tasks of the region, keep clear heads, get rid of ideas of pacifism and lack of vigilance, strengthen their concept of war and display the spirit of patriotism. While grasping economic construction and the building of the PLA units, they should also further promote people's air defense construction in a positive and responsible way.

Li Jianan, Dong Zhiwen and Guo Cheng, leading comrades of Guangdong, Hunan and Guangxi, spoke at the conclusion of the conference. They gave their ideas on further promoting people's air defense and combat-readiness construction. We Kehua, commander of the Guangzhou PLA units and chairman of the people's air defense committee, delivered a summation.

NANFANG RIBAO REJECTS ARGUMENT FOR SMUGGLING

["Nanfang Forum" article by Chen Li [7115 4409]: "Analyzing the Theory That 'Smuggling Is Beneficial'"]

[Text] In an attempt to confuse the public and cover up their own criminal activities, certain people involved in the smuggling and selling of contraband have put forward a number of "lofty theories." The one they tout the most is the so-called "smuggling is beneficial theory," which insists that "smuggled goods are cheap and therefore benefit the common people"; or that "because the profits from contraband goods are so large, the unit and the region also stand to gain." Wang Zhong, the former secretary of the Haifeng County committee, commented that: "By getting involved in smuggling, we will have enough money for construction"; and that there is "no need to make a fuss" over smuggling. The "lofty theory" that "smuggling benefits the people and the country" is obviously sheer nonsense. However, because it is linked with such fine phrases as "benefits the people" and "benefits the country," some people are easily taken in. Therefore, it is very important that we should expose the fallacy of such a theory.

Smuggling activities seriously damage the nation. Not only do they cause the country to suffer serious economic losses, but they also damage, in a certain sense, the country's sovereignty. Customs and customs duties constitute an important aspect of national sovereignty. After the opium wars the imperialist powers forced a series of unequal treaties on our country, by seizing control of our country's customs and depriving our country of sovereignty over customs duties. One important aspect of these treaties was that the foreign powers were able to engage in large-scale smuggling, to evade customs duties, to dump large quantities of foreign goods on our country's market, to strangle our country's native industry and commerce and to plunder our country's wealth. According to historical records, because smuggling was so widespread, there was a massive decrease in income from customs duties between 1844 and 1848, even though there was no decrease in the actual amount of foreign goods imported through Guangzhou during the same period. In 1844 the income from customs duties was 3.36 million silver dollars; by 1848, however, this income had dropped to 424,045 silver dollars, meaning that customs revenue had been reduced by more than half in the space of 4 years. Regardless of whether we are talking about China in the past or China today, smuggling and the selling of contraband surrenders the country's sovereign rights, subjects the nation to humiliation and brings calamity to both the country and the people. Under no circumstances can smuggling activities be tolerated by any sovereign nation.

Today, smuggling activities pose a direct threat to a part of our country's industrial production. The influx of certain "foreign goods" -- such as televisions, tape recorders, calculators, watches, umbrellas, nylon and other manufactured goods -- into a number of towns and villages has had a serious impact on the sales of similar domestically manufactured goods. Certain factories have been forced to either reduce or completely halt production. This not only affects the development of our country's commerce and industry and the accumulation of capital for reconstruction, but also threatens the interests of the broad masses of workers and staff.

In addition to this, smuggling activities have also corrupted a group of our cadres and polluted the social atmosphere. There are certain party members and cadres who have allowed themselves to become disorientated by the evil influence of smuggling, taking part in such activities themselves in the hope of making vast profits; they are no better than common criminals. In areas where smuggling is particularly rampant, a good number of peasants have lost all interest in working the fields and many fishermen refuse to actually catch fish. This has caused very serious damage to production in agriculture and the fishing industry and has also given rise to a number of other criminal activities. As soon as the people involved in smuggling and selling contraband manage to get hold of some money, they lead a completely dissolute life, spending money as if it were water and seriously polluting the social atmosphere.

As for the supposed cheapness of smuggled goods, such an argument simply does not hold water as far as the common people are concerned. In view of the fact that smuggling activities cause such serious damage to the nation, how could they possibly benefit the common people? Basically speaking, the interests of the people and those of the nation are identical. Therefore, something which hurts the nation will also certainly hurt the people. Moreover, while certain smuggled goods may be relatively inexpensive in price, many of them are either shoddy imitations or defective. For example, most smuggled watches are imitations of well-known brands with no real value whatsoever. Anyone who buys such products has clearly been had.

From the above it can be seen that smuggling activities harm both the country and the masses and that the only people who benefit are the criminals involved. Many of the people involved manage to strike it rich, building foreign-style villas filled with high-class furniture and every type of machine imaginable and leading a life of extravagant luxury. Therefore, the notion of "benefiting the people and the country" is completely false; self-interest is where the truth of the matter really lies. It is about time that we stopped listening to such nonsense!

HENAN ISSUES URGENT CIRCULAR ON FIGHTING DROUGHT

HK230311 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Summary] The Henan provincial government issued an urgent circular on 21 April on continuing to fight drought, tend the wheat and ensure spring sowing. The circular said: The province has done well in wheat management and preparations for spring sowing. However, most parts of the province have had no rain for 1 month, while temperatures have been high and evaporation great. Hence, the drought has continued to develop, threatening wheat growth and spring sowing. It is essential to strengthen tending of the wheat crop and carry out sowing of the early autumn crops on schedule. The circular made the following demands:

1. Further launch the masses to tend the wheat and sow the early autumn crops. The next 20 to 30 days is the key period for this work.

2. Seriously implement the spring sowing plans. Governments at all levels must teach the cadres and masses to sow the crops according to the state plans.

3. Get a good grasp of fighting drought. According to the weather forecast, the drought will continue to develop. Every effort must be made to expand the area under irrigation. Water conservation responsibility systems must be set up and put on a sound basis. It is necessary to act to prevent and cure plant diseases and insect pests in the wheat crop.

The circular said: It is necessary to continue to publicize and implement the minutes of the national rural work conference, strengthen ideological and political work, reduce the number of meetings and strengthen technical guidance. Supply work must also be organized well.

YIN FATANG AT LHASA PERSONNEL WORK MEETING

[Summary] The Xizang regional conference on personnel work was recently held in Lhasa. The conference conveyed and implemented the spirit of last year's national conference of personnel bureau directors and discussed and looked into the problems of how personnel work serves the line, principles and policies of the party in the new period and contributes to the building a new Xizang of unity, wealth and civilization. Regional CCP committee First Secretary Yin Fatang and Deputy Secretary Song Ziyuan attended and delivered important speeches. Yangling Duoji, regional CCP committee secretary and people's government vice chairman, also attended.

The conference held that sine the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, particularly since the region implemented the important instruction of the central authorities on work in Xizang, personnel departments at all levels and cadres in the region have done a great deal of work and accomplished all tasks even better. The current main task of the region's organizational and personnle work is to build a force of cares and leadership groups in an organized and planned way.

The conference explicitly pointed out that "the key to thoroughly solving the problems of nationalities and to achieving regional antonomy of minority nationalities lies in building a force of cadres who regard Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as the guiding principle, have Xizang cadres as the main body, adhere to the four basic principles, faithfully implement the principles and policies of the party, further integrate with the masses and have a certain cultural level, and a certain professional knowledge and management ability. Moreover, in accordance with the spirit of the instruction of the central authorities, in the future we must also require that a certain number of Han cadres and cadres of other fraternal nationalities, particularly professional and technical cadres, come to Xizang to work. This will be beneficial to the building of our region. Han cadres and cadres of minority nationalities must study together, help trust and support each other and strengthn unit." After study, the conference held that in doing personnel work in the future, the following work must be done:

First, it is necessary to train and promote outstanding middle-aged and young cadres. Veteran cadres must shoulder an important responsibility in training and promoting outstanding young cadres. They must pass on their experiences, give help and set examples. Second, it is essential to train cadres and raise their political and professional levels. Third, it is imperative to properly solve the problems of work, study and livelihood of intellectuals. Fourth, we must make good arrangements for cadres after their retirement. Fifth, we must seriously do well in transferring, assigning and readjusting cadres. We must also strengthen their education.

BRIEFS

YUNNAN ECONOMIC CRIMINALS -- According to incomplete statistics, by 6 April, 115 economic criminals in all places throughout Yunnan Province had gone to procuratorial and public security organs or their own units to confess their own unlawful and criminal activities and requested the government to deal with them leniently. Since the proclamation of the decision adopted by the 22d session of the NPC Standing Committee on severely punishing criminals who sabotage the economy, all places throughout the province have universally publicized the decision in many forms, explained the state law and laid stress on publicity of the party's policy, "leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse to." As a result, many people in all places who committed crimes have voluntarily surrendered themselves to public security organs and confessed their crimes. According to statistics, by the end of March, 29 criminals in Qujing Prefecture had surrendered themselves to procuratorial organs or confessed their crimes to their own units. Now, 26 criminals in Kunming have voluntarily surrendered themselves to public security organs and confessed their crimes. [Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Apr 82 HK]

BEIJING MEETING ON FINDING JOBS FOR UNEMPLOYED

HK220327 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 13 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The Beijing Municipal CCP Committee and government held a gathering on 13 April which demanded that all departments and sectors in the city do everything possible to work together and get a good grasp of providing jobs for urban youths and developing the collective economy.

Vice Mayor Wang Chun delivered a report. He first recalled Beijing's successes in finding jobs for youths awaiting unemployment and developing the collective economy in the past 3 years. During this period the city has set up 4,700 collective production service networks and points and provided employment for 147,000 young people awaiting employment. The various groups have also developed over 1,700 factories, cooperatives and groups in collective light industry and handicrafts. These have effectively supported socialist construction.

Comrade Wang Chun pointed out in his report: The employment of urban youths is a major issue related to the vital interests of the masses, to the stability and unity of the state and to the progress of the four modernizations. Party and government leadership at all levels must get a thoroughly good grasp of this work. This year the city needs to find employment for 200,000 young people awaiting employment. The task is very heavy. It is, therefore, necessary to tackle the following tasks well:

1. Actively develop collective commerce, catering, service and repair businesses in connection with solving difficulties in the masses' daily life.

2. Develop labor-intensive light industry and handicraft enterprises that do not cause pollution or disturb people. The emphasis should be on producing small daily necessities urgently needed in the markets, small foodstuffs, arts and crafts products and so on.

3. Expand and develop all types of collective building and repair trades.

4. Develop all kinds of labor service trades that benefit production, suit the socialization of domestic labor and afford conveniences for the masses' daily life.

5. Develop collective livestock breeding and cultivation under the guidance of the state agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry and fisheries farms.

6. Gradually open up and expand ways to export labor services, as the city unfolds this work.

Mayor Jiao Ruoyu attended the gathering and made a speech. He demanded that all departments and systems work together to solve the problems of premises and other issues for the collective economy. He also called for strengthening management over the collective economy and serious implementation of state polices and decrees.

NEI MONGGOL DISCUSSES PROBLEMS IN TRAINING CADRES

[Excerpts] Agricultural and animal husbandry departments in our region have trained their cadres extensively. Over the past few years, they have adopted effective measures and opened various types of training classes for their cadres to learn science, thus training a great number of backbone forces for rural economic undertakings. This has significantly improved the composition of the cadre contingent and promoted the region's agriculture, animal husbandry and forestry.

According to statistics, forestry, animal husbandry, water conservancy, meteorological and other departments in our region have established 23 training bases since 1979 and opened 789 training classes at 3 levels for 47,600 cadres. More than 50 percent, about 2,460 people, of the cadres who were obligated to attend the classes were at and above commune banner or county levels. Through the training classes, these cadres have not only mastered the ways to lead agricultural and animal husbandry production, but also become leaders of the masses of peasants in studying and applying science. The goal of training a few to give impetus to many has been achieved. Over the past 2 years, we have scored initial achievements in training leading agricultural and animal husbandry cadres at all levels. Throughout the region, 47 percent of such cadres at and above the county or banner level and 58.8 percent of such cadres at the commune level have been trained. These trained cadres have realized that nonprofessional cadres without agroscientific knowledge would be unable to organize and lead in the modern large-scale agricultural production and would not be welcomed by the masses. However, even now, there are still a small number of leading cadres who have not truly understood the importance of cadre training and have paid no attention to it. They think that to study or not makes no difference to them or to their performance as leaders. They do not understand that science and technology mean productive forces; therefore, they do not think it is urgent to study, and do not study of their own accord. Thus far, only one-sixth of the No 1 and No 2 leaders of banners, counties and communes and only seven of the secretaries of the 88 banner and county party committees throughout the region have attended the training classes. Therefore, enhancing the understanding of leading cadres at all levels is the key to successful cadre training and to the fulfillment of the principle of relying on science to develop agriculture.

Training cadres is not a makeshift policy. It is a long-term strategic task, a reliable guarantee for gradual agricultural modernization. Therefore, all leading departments should regard it as an important task, include it high on their agenda and grasp it as firmly as they grasp policies and production.

TIANJIN RALLY DECIDES ON ECONOMIC CRIME CASES

[Summary] The Tianjin municipal procuratorate held a televised rally on the evening of 12 April to announce its decisions on handling a number of economic criminals. The procuratorate decided on lenient treatment for two criminals who had given themselves up and made restitution, and on the arrest of three criminals according to law. Municipal CCP committee Second Secretary Huang Zhigang attended and spoke at the rally. He pointed out: Tianjin has now been waging the struggle against economic crimes for more than 2 months. The struggle is continually deepening, and a number of major cases have been unearthed. In particular, many economic criminals have recently given themselves up and made a clean breast of things. Thus we have made a good start in the struggle.

Huang Zhigang demanded that organs, factories, mines, enterprises, schools and so on repeatedly publicize the decision of the NPC Standing Committee and its significance and ensure that everyone knows about it. The public security personnel must make their own contributions to promoting the struggle. Economic criminals who want to be treated leniently must hurry to give themselves up. This is the only way out for them.

PAPER VIEWS CULTURAL UNITY OF MAINLAND, TAIWAN

[Article by Mu Yang [4476 2799]: "Healthy Development of National Culture Calls for a Unified State"]

[Text] In scanning some Taiwan publications recently, we noted that there have been great differences between the mainland of the motherland and Taiwan in the use of terms and phrases. What are called on the mainland "luxiangji", [video recorder], "liti sheng" [stereo], "daodan" [guided missile] and "suliao" [plastics] are repsectively known in Taiwan as "luyingji," "shenli sheng," "feidan," and "sujiao." What are called on the mainland "jiebanren" [successor] and "jiating jiaoyu and xuexiao jiaoyu" [family education and school education] are known in Taiwan as "chuanren" and "qinzhi jiaoyu." Some names also show variations because they are habitually translated differently. For example, the name rendered in Chinese on the mainland as "Hei-ge" [Haig] and the name of a state presented as "Sha-te A-la-bo" [Saudi Arabia] are respectively given in Taiwan as "Hai-ge" and "Sha-wu-di A-la-bo." Due to different social systems, such terms related to prostitution, drug-use, and so forth as "ma sha ji" and "qiang li jiao," are new to mainland readers. As far as entire pieces of writing are concerned, the literary style is entirely different because of differences in usage. In addition, the publications of the mainland and Taiwan differ in the use of simplified or complex Chinese characters. Given so many differences, some middle-aged and young intellectuals on the mainland have found that it not so easy to read Taiwanese publications with understanding. Those who are younger find it still more difficult. Of course, Taiwan compatriots encounter similar problems in reading mainland publications.

These differences obviously have both their strong and weak points. For example, the mainland translation of "daodan," in my opinion, is better than the Taiwan version of "feidan." "Daodan" contains the meaning of something being guided artificially. "Feidan" is a rendition that does not clearly distinguish its meaning from bullets and shells that fly through the air. On the other hand, the mainland version of "jiating jiaoyu and xuexiao jiaoyu" is not so clear and simple as the Taiwan equivalent of "qinzhi jiaoyu." But the mainland and Taiwan have long been separated. It is also difficult to bring about an exchange of publications. For this reason, both sides cannot immediately draw on each other's strengths to make up for what is lacking. As a result, each goes its own way. This is obviously a loss as far as the cultural development of the motherland is concerned. As things go on this way, more serious consequences will result.

Since World War II, some countries and nations have been in a state of separation. One side has reformed the language while the other has not. One side has borrowed heavily from Western languages, while the other has drawn chiefly from the Oriental ones. This has given rise to serious barriers between the compatriots of the same country in regard to spoken and written language. In my opinion, the compatriots on both sides of the Strait have the obligation to maintain the purity and unity of the motherland's culture. The only effective way to achieve this goal at present is to realize the suggestion for "communication through three channels" put forward by the Chinese Communist Party and the nine-point proposal set forth by Chairman Ye Jianying and to realize the peaceful reunification of the motherland. The Taiwan authorities have so far stubbornly refused to accept these reasonable and thoughtful views. As far as the healthy development of national culture is concerned, this obviously also runs counter to the interests of the entire Chinese nation.

AFP: TAIWAN NUCLEAR FUEL PELLET TECHNOLOGY

[Text] Taipei, 22 Apr (AFP) -- Taiwan's research center has successfully developed new technology for making nuclear fuel pellets of uranium dioxide, it was learned here today.

A research center report said the development provides a reference for process design in the manufacture of nuclear fuel at a future pilot plant in Taiwan. The research center has been studying the up-to-date technology for making nuclear fuel from uranium dioxide (UO2) in order to strengthen the self-reliance of Taiwan's nuclear industry.

The report said the newly developed manufacturing process of uranium dioxide from ammonium uranium carbonate (AUC) was better than the conventional one because it was simpler.

The report said that the powdered uranium dioxide manufactured from ammonium uranium carbonate had excellent fluidity and could be directly compressed into fuel pellets without going through the process of pre-pressure and other treatment. The consumption of the pellets was 92 to 98 percent, in accordance with international specifications, the report added.

The report said that the up-to-date technology of manufacturing uranium dioxide from ammonium uranium carbonate had been classified confidential by the advanced [word indistinct] countries.

WEN WEI PO ON BEIJING'S VIEW OF PEACE MOVEMENT

HK230700 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 23 Apr 82 p 2

[Article by Kuan Chien-tzu [4619 6015 1311] "Beijing's New View of the Peace Movement"]

[Text] A XINHUA reporter wrote a commentary entitled "Western Peace Movement Against Nuclear Arms Gains New Momentum," which was carried on yesterday's front page.

The reason why we regard this commentary as important is not simply because the Western peace movement against nuclear arms has gained momentum, but because this XINHUA commentary has a new view of, and a new attitude toward, this peace movement. Of course, this new attitude is not just that of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY. According to our estimation, it is that of the Beijing leadership. Let us take, for example, what happened last fall. At that time, the peace movement against nuclear arms, of unprecedented dimensions since World War II, engulfed all of Western Europe. But none of the XINHUA reporters in West Germany, France or Britain wrote a commentary similar to that of yesterday's that is, the extensive role of the peace movement against nuclear arms had not been affirmed as it was in yesterday's commentary.

Last fall, the target of the West European people's peace movement against nuclear weapons was to oppose the deployment of new nuclear weapons in Western Europe by the United States. Of course, even without the U.S. deployment of nuclear weapons, we still cannot be certain that Soviet nuclear attacks will be avoided. If the United States does not deploy nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union may consider it weak and easy to bully and may become even more reckless.

However, although the main target of the West European people in protests against nuclear war preparations was, for a period of time, the United States, we can never say that their activities are in the interest of the Soviet Union. We should never overlook the fact that their general objective is to oppose nuclear war preparation by the two hegemonist powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, and to safeguard peace in Europe and in the world.

However, the root of nuclear war preparation does not lie just in the policies and targets of one hegemonist power, but in the policies and targets of contention of both of the hegemonist powers. Therefore, the opposition of the West European people against nuclear war preparation and the nuclear arms race will eventually lead to the opposition against and restraining of the contention between the two hegemonist powers.

However, as commented on by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, "last year, the peace movement in Western Europe was generally referred to as a pacifist movement. This is incorrect." What has now been said is correct. But last fall, the expression "a pacifist movement" was also uttered by the Chinese and was found in China's newspapers. Even if this movement might not have been treated derogatorily, it was only touched on lightly, or was even seldom reported.

Of course, it always takes time to observe, understand and analyze something. We will certainly derive a correct understanding if our thoughts are not bound by rigid notions or by the notion of drawing a line based on whom we oppose.

"Practice is the sole criterion for testing truth." Recently, the West European people again launched a peace movement against nuclear weapons in mid-April. It has spread to the United States and Japan, showing that this is the desire and will of the broad masses of people. The masses are true heroes!

"Ducks are the first to know the warmth of spring while swimming in the river." This commentary of the XINHUA reporter discloses a new view of the Beijing leadership which is worth attaching importance to. This is in keeping with what the top Beijing leaders have repeatedly stressed recently -- uniting with the Third World, opposing contention between the two hegemonist powers and safeguarding world peace. Of course, we also have to unite with the people of the Second World and even with the people of the two superpowers of the First World and support the peace movement against nuclear arms.

Beijing is testing truth through practice in international struggle and is constantly developing its own independent policy. No international hegemonists should indulge in vain hopes that China will fear anyone or depend on anyone. The Chinese people will oppose any hegemonist who interferes in our internal affairs or encroaches upon our sovereignty!

Geng at Beijing Reception

OW241906 Beijing XINUUA in English 1856 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- A reception was given here this evening by Senior Colonel Kim Pyong-ho, military, naval and air attache of the embassy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to mark the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Korean People's Army.

Present were Geng Biao, member of the Politburo of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, vice-premier and minister of national defense; Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Liang Biye and Hua Nan, deputy directors of the P.L.A. General Political Department; and Xu Guangyi, deputy director of the P.L.A. General Logistics Department.

Also present were Korean Ambassador to China Chon Myong-su and Mrs. Chon Myong-su.

Ambassador Chong Myong-su and Deputy Chief of General Staff Zhang Zhen spoke at the reception.

In his toast, Ambassador Chon Myong-su said the Korean People's Army has in the past 50 years conquered violent storms and has successfully accomplished its mission as a revolutionary army. He said that the Korean people and the army are striving for the independence and peaceful reunification of the fatherland in accordance with the program put forward by their great leader Kim Il-song at the 6th Congress of the Korean Workers' Party.

The ambassador said, "The Korean people and army treasure very much the unbreakable friendship cemented with blood between the two countries and will work hard to further strengthen and develop the friendship."

[Commentator's article: "Fifty Glorious Years"]

[Text] Amid a vigorous upsurge of building socialism, the Korean people are greeting the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Korean People's Army.

The Korean People's Army is a heroic army under the leadership of the Korean Workers Party [KWP]. For half a century, this army has traversed a glorious course of battle in the struggle to oppose imperialist aggression and defend national independence and self-determination.

On 25 April 1932, under the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song, the Korean people founded Korea's first anti-Japanese armed force -- the Korean People's Revolutionary Army. This army held aloft the torch of armed struggle against the Japanese, battled heroically, advancing wave upon wave, and finally liberated the motherland in 1945 after more than 10 years of struggle amid extreme hardships and difficulties. On 8 February 1948, this force, developed and strengthened, became the regular armed force -- the Korean People's Army -- in the northern half of the republic. During the war of aggression launched against Korea by U.S. imperialism, this army defied brute force and struggled boldly to defend the fruits of the revolution; after 3 years of bloody combat, it smashed the aggressor's assault and won glorious victory in the motherland's war of liberation.

Since the war, the Korean People's Army has actively implemented the guiding principle of self-defense in national defense. Apart from repeatedly repulsing the military provocations of the South Korean puppet clique and effectively defending the northern half of the republic, it has carried forward the fine tradition of army-people unity in the struggle to build the motherland, and actively taken part in various construction projects. It has been warmly supported and cherished by all the people.

To reunify the motherland by peaceful means by their own efforts is the common desire of the 50 million people of Korea. The KWP and government have long made unwearying efforts to realize this desire. However, the Chon Tu-hwan clique has ignored the common aspirations of the Korean people and continued to aggravate the tension. Not long ago, apart from staging the large-scale "Team Spirit 82" military exercise in the region of the "38th" Parallel, the U.S. and puppet armies also greatly stepped up military spending. They have raised this year's military spending to over $15 billion. Their criminal conspiracies are all too clear.

In the face of the intensified pushing of the "two Koreas" policy by the South Korean puppet clique, together with its rabid preparations for war, the Korean people and the People's Army are raising vigilance a hundred-fold and stand in combat readiness. The aggressors are certain to court destruction if they dare to play with fire.

The people and armies of China and Korea, who fought together to resist external aggressors during the war years, are close comrades in arms and brothers. While we mark the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Korean People's Army, we sincerely wish the Korean people and the Korean People's Army ceaseless new victories in the cause of building and defending their motherland.

DPRK PAPER CONDEMNS U.S. ARMS SALES TO TAIWAN

[Text] Pyongyang, April 23 (XINHUA) -- "The U.S. arms sale to Taiwan, a part of Chinese territory, constitutes a grave encroachment upon China's sovereignty and a gross interference in her internal affairs," said the Korean paper NODONG SINMUN today.

NODONG SINMUN in a commentary said, "The U.S. supply of arms to Taiwan is a question of principle concerning China's sovereignty." NODONG SINMUN pointed out that the obstinate stand of the United States in selling arms to Taiwan was aimed at creating "two Chinas" and maintaining the present division of China by reinforcing Taiwan's military forces so as to turn Taiwan into a U.S. base for aggression.

NODONG SINMUN stressed, "The Korean people strongly condemn the U.S. imperialists for their encroachment upon China's sovereignty, and firmly support the stand of the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese Government on the Taiwan question." It said, "A peaceful reunification of China is in the fundamental interests of the whole Chinese people and conducive to the maintenance and consolidation of peace in Asia and the rest of the world. The United States should see clearly the trend of the times, immediately stop giving military support to Taiwan and erect no obstacles in the way of China's peaceful reunification."

The reshuffle brought changes to 14 portfolios, a third of the 42 posts on the council. Vice-Premier and Chairman of the State Commission for Planning Nguyen Lam was replaced by Vo Van Kiet, a newly elected member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Vietnam. Dong Si Nguyen, a newly elected alternate member of the party's Political Bureau, became vice-premier. He also replaced Dinh Duc Thien as minister of communications and transport. Vice-Premier Vo Chi Cong was replaced by Vu Dinh Lieu. Tran Phuong, formerly minister of internal trade, became vice-premier. Dang Huu took the post of chairman of the State Commission for Science and Technology, replacing Le Khac. Nguyen Huu Thu replaced Dang Thi as secretary general of the Council of Ministers and director of the Office of the Council of Ministers.

The major reshuffle was a follow-up of the personnel changes in the Fifth Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party. The reshuffle, according to REUTER, seemed "designed to implement the economic policies thrashed out in months of wrangling behind closed doors and approved at the fifth party congress last month."

MEDIA VIEW WEST EUROPE VISIT BY SRV'S THACH

XINHUA Roundup

OW231848 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 23 Apr 82

["Roundup -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister's Visit to Western Europe" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 23 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's recent visit to Western Europe failed to achieve the expected results. His visit, the first for a Vietnamese senior official to make a tour of Western Europe since the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea, took place at a time when Vietnam was beset with mounting difficulties at home and abroad. The West has suspended its aid to Vietnam as a result of the latter's aggression against Kampuchea. Hanoi originally counted on the Soviets to go all out to help it overcome the difficulties. But Moscow itself has been confronted with so many troubles at home and abroad that it cannot afford to fill such a "bottomless pit" as Vietnam. In such circumstances, Hanoi has no other way but to send Thach to seek aid from Western Europe. He visited France, Sweden, West Germany and Belgium.

It was not accidental for Thach to choose France as the first leg of his trip. For France resumed its aid to Vietnam last last year despite the latter's continued occupation of Kampuchea. Paris has promised to offer a loan of 200 million francs to Hanoi. Thach's trip to France had two purposes: to work out a plan on the use of the loan and to urge France to play a "positive role" in the Southeast Asian affairs.

An AFP dispatch reported that France has the intention to intercede with some West European nations for Vietnam for repaying by installments the 200 million U.S. dollars owed to them and to persuade the EEC to resume food aid to Vietnam. The French newspaper LA CROIX said in a commentary on the France-Vietnam relations that Hanoi wants to extricate itself out of its desolate isolation resulting from its aggression against Kampuchea, while Paris wants to have a hand in Asia.

However, France's resumption of its aid to Vietnam has met with strong opposition from the ASEAN countries and from Kampuchean resistance groups. Democratic Kampuchea condemned France's action as an "encouragement to Vietnamese aggressors."

In the course of his visit, which lasted from April 8 to 21, Thach talked glibly about "friendship" and "cooperation." While claiming that he would not act as a beggar, Thach in fact clamoured for all possible aid to Vietnam. He even said that the purpose of his visit was "to see friends" and express the hope that Europe would play a "very important role" in stabilizing the situation in Southeast Asia.

However, European sources believe that "cooperation with Vietnam will bear no fruit" due to Vietnam's relations with the Soviet Union and its present economic situation. The Belgian Government has made clear that it will not resume aid to Vietnam before the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea in accordance with relevant U.N. resolutions. EEC officials said after meeting with Thach that the EEC's position has never changed since it suspended food aid to Vietnam after the invasion of Kampuchea. West Germany reiterated that it would take concerted actions with other EEC member states. The West German minister of foreign affairs did not utter a word about the aid problem during his talks with Thach. As for Sweden, it has made a decision to cut its aid to Vietnam by half in fiscal 1982 though Thach begged for an increase.

The Vietnamese authorities intend to get rid of its extremely isolated plight by making a break-through in Western Europe through Thach's visit. So the Vietnamese foreign minister tried by hook or by crook during his visit to divert people's attention from the problem of Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea. Making false charges against China and Thailand, he claimed that Vietnam would not put its troops out of Kampuchea unless China and Thailand stopped their support for the Kampuchean people in their struggle against Vietnam. But most of the European countries he visited continued to voice their opposition to Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea. The Belgian Government once again told Thach that Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea was "an obvious violation of international law." The West German Government insisted that "the Kampuchean people should be allowed to determine their own destiny free from any outside intervention," and firmly refused to recognize the Phnom Penh puppet regime. Belgium urged the Vietnamese forces to withdraw so as to ensure the Kampuchean people's right to self-determination.

In short, Thach failed to achieve in his trip what the Vietnamese authorities expected. As the Belgian paper EXPRESS put it, Vietnam "has lost almost all its friends" because of its invasion of Kampuchea, and Western countries "have shown little interest" in the visit.

Radio Commentary

[Station correspondent (Mu Kang) commentary: "About Nguyen Co Thach's Trip to Western Europe"]

[Text] As soon as the difficulty-plagued Fifth Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party [VCP] came to an end, His Excellency Nguyen Co Thach, the Vietnamese foreign minister and recently-elected alternate member of the VCP Central Committee Political Bureau, hurriedly set off on his trip to West European countries, among them France and Sweden.

During his current trip, Nguyen Co Thach has repeatedly made clear that the purpose of his trip to Western Europe is not ot beg for aid, but to visit his friends.

However, beggars cannot hope to get anything unless they stretch out their hands and ask for alms. Therefore, as expected, Nguyen Co Thach shifted his tune, saying he was ready to make requests for aid, thus revealing the real purpose of the current trip to Western Europe by this notorious international beggar.

As a rule, beggars must invariably resort to flattery in order to get alms. Nguyen Co Thach is no exception. An AFP report says: Before his departure, Nguyen Co Thach stressed that France played an extremely important role in Indochina. AFP added that upon his arrival in Paris His Excellency the Vietnamese foreign minister also said: In our country's relations with Western countries, France occupies an important position. He stated again and again that France is making and will continue to make contributions to the peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

Reports say that during his trip to Sweden, Nguyen, Co Thach also on several occasions praised Sweden as Vietnam's genuine friend in need and expressed thanks to the host country for its generous support to Vietnam. However, despite Nguyen Co Thach's sweet words, he did not get much from his trips, according to reports. Even France, the country which is ready to make contributions in Indochina, only agreed to provide additional aid of 6 million tons of cereals, and this aid includes the $3 million in aid that France had agreed to provide Vietnam late last year. Also, Vietnam's huge debts to West European countries amount to $200 million.

Such is France's aid to Vietnam. What about Sweden's aid? The Swedish paper EXPRESSEN reported that Sweden demanded that Vietnam get out of Kampuchea and agree to a free election in that country. If the Vietnamese Government displays a deaf ear, it certainly will face a reduction in Swedish aid. It has also been reported that Nguyen Co Thach's visit to Sweden could not change Sweden's decision to reduce $20 million kronas in aid to Vietnam during the next fiscal year. As things now stand, many difficulties still remain in Nguyen Co Thach's requests for aid during his current trip to West Europe. Therefore, the Le Duan clique's dream to scrounge up Western Europe's money to relieve difficulties in Vietnam's battered economy will also vanish. No wonder Nguyen Co Thach, during his trip to Sweden, anxiously told newsmen that he was not sure about the success of his current trip to Western Europe.

[Article by Ji Yanfeng [1323 1693 7364]: "Things Do Not Turn Out to Nguyen Co Thach's Liking"]

[Text] As soon as the Vietnamese Communist Party's [VCP] "Fifth Congress" was concluded, Nguyen Co Thach, who had just been promoted to alternate member of the Political Bureau of the VCP Central Committee, hastily flew to Europe and began Vietnam's first high-ranking visit, since its invasion of Kampuchea, to France, Sweden, West Germany, Belgium and the EEC headquarters. What was he attempting to do on this visit? From Vietnam's present difficult and isolated situation both at home and abroad, one can easily see that he was attempting to change this situation and beg for economic aid from the West. However, things have not developed in accordance with Hanoi's wishful thinking.

According to Hanoi's wishful thinking, Nguyen Co Thach's visit, with the visit to France as a bridge, would breach Western Europe and change its notorious and isolated situation in the world. Although Nguyen Co Thach was busy running about, he drew very little attention. In Sweden, in response to Nguyen Co Thach's appeal for Sweden's "playing a more active part" in Southeast Asia, the Swedish foreign minister pointed out in the talks that the staying of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea was "an obvious violation of international law."

In Belgium and West Germany, Nguyen Co Thach made the same appeal. But Belgian Minister of External Affairs Leo Tindemans replied that Vietnam should withdraw its troops from Kampuchea without delay and German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher reiterated that Kampuchea should determine its own future without the intervention of foreign troops. The statement by West Germany's Foreign Ministry even stressed that this stand was also in conformity with the EEC's stand on the Kampuchean question. In France, where Vietnam had placed great hopes, it could not achieve its aim either. Soon after his arrival in France, Nguyen Co Thach stressed that in the relations between Vietnam and Western countries, France "has been playing a special role." He hoped that France would play the role of a bridge. AFP held that this was a hint that the Kampuchean question could be solved if France recognized the Vietnamese-supported puppet regime in Phnom Penh. However, the French officials said that although France intended to exert more influence over Indochina, it still would not recognize the puppet regime and would not support Vietnam's stationing of troops in this country.

During this visit, in order to "restore the reputation" of Vietnam, Nguyen Co Thach frenziedly recriminated that China had "created a split and laid a trap" on the Kampuchean question, trying to cover up Vietnam's aggressive act in this country and win the sympathy and support of his masters. However, lies have short legs. Everyone knows that the reason the Kampuchean question has remained unsolved is that Vietnam has rejected the UN's resolution on this question and refused to withdraw its 200,000 troops from Kampuchea. How could Nguyen Co Thach deceive people by evading that basic fact and making a false countercharge against China? Just as was pointed out in the Swedish EXPRESSEN when it commented on Nguyen Co Thach's visit to Europe, Vietnam has "lost almost all its friends" and the Western countries "have very little interest in it."

According to the wishful thinking of Hanoi, Nguyen Co Thach's visit to West Europe would also complete a mission of begging for economic aid from it. Although he claimed that he "did not come as a beggar," he still brought with him a "list of new items which need help." And although he had made great efforts and endlessly pestered the Western countries for economic aid, Sweden did not change its original plan to reduce 21 million Swedish kronas of aid of Vietnam next year, the Belgian Government clearly stated that it would not restore its aid to Vietnam before the latter carries out the UN resolution and withdraws its troops from Kampuchea, and the West German foreign minister did not even mention a word of aid during the talks. This was not an isolated case. West Europe is clear that since Vietnam has followed the USSR and landed in an economic predicament, "the cooperation with it will be without results."

It seems that things are not turning out as Hanoi expected. As a matter of fact, if it continues to follow Soviet hegemonism and continues to occupy Kampuchea by military force, any attempt to change people's impression of it or to get material benefits is doomed to failure.

Huang Hua said: "The cause of the turbulent international situation comes from the two superpowers' rivalry for world hegemony."

Referring to the Afghan issue, the two sides strongly denounced Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, and demanded withdrawal of the Soviet aggressors from Afghanistan to let the Afghan people decide their own destiny without outside interference. Huang Hua expressed his appreciation for the Icelandic Government's stand in demanding the withdrawal of the Soviet aggressors.

Huang Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, Chinese vice-premier and foreign minister, gave a banquet in honor of Icelandic Minister of Foreign Affairs Olafur Johannesson, Mrs. Dora Johannesson and their party at the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

Huang Hua made a speech at the banquet. Referring to the relations between China and Iceland, he said, "The geographical distance and different social systems and cultural and historical background have not prevented China and Iceland from establishing a friendly relationship of mutual trust. This is because we have many things in common and many things to benefit from each other. We should sympathize with, support and learn from each other." He stated that "bilateral interflow in the cultural, educational, art, sports and other fields has kept increasing, and efficacious cooperation is being carried out in the fishery and geothermal fields. In the exploitation and utilization of geothermal energy, in particular, we have received much help from the Icelandic side."

Huang Hua said: "The current international situation has become more tense and turbulent. In many parts of the world, peacehas been undermined and some independent countries have been subjected to foreign aggression.

"To maintain world peace and oppose hegemonism are an urgent task confronting the people of the whole world." "The Chinese Government and people are ready to work with the government and people of Iceland to contribute to the cause of peace of mankind, proceeding from our respective conditions," Huang Hua added.

In his speech, Johannesson said: "Since the establishment of diplomatic relations, our exchanges and cooperation have developed fast. There have been reciprocal visits in the cultural field, and in arts and sports, and trade has begun to develop. There has also been cooperation in science, especially in the field of geology and in the field of the utilization of geothermal energy.

"We in Iceland are deeply concerned about the increasing tension in the world situation. Detente efforts have suffered serious setbacks in the last few years. The international political climate has deteriorated and a sharper tone characterizes relations between the superpowers. The international community is facing complex economic problems. [Beijing, XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1541 GMT on 24 April carries an identical version of this report, but adds the following at this point: "The development of relations between the poor and rich countries has not been satisfactory and the worldwide energy crisis has aggravated this situation with the result that the poor countries have suffered tremendously."]

"Another very alarming feature of development in recent years has been in the tremendous buildup of armaments which is a threat to world peace and the security of all states."

The Icelandic foreign minister said: "We advocate strengthening of international cooperation. We consider it of utmost importance that all countries, large and small, respect the Charter of the United Nations and refrain from interfering in internal affairs of other countries. Iceland is one of the Nordic or Scandinavian countries. We consider the cooperation of these five countries of great importance. There is a long-standing stability in northern Europe. We think it is not only of important to the five Nordic countries that this stability is maintained but for the world as a whole. Our goal must be to ensure peace, freedom, justice and economic progress for all peoples of the world."

Also among the guests were Icelandic Ambassador to China Petur Thorsteinsson and Mrs. Thorsteinsson.

Meeting With Hu, Deng

OW251559 Beijing XINHUA in English 1549 GMT 25 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 25 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping, chairman and vice-chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, today had a sincere and cordial talk with Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Democratic People's Republic of Algeria and secretary-general of the Party of the National Liberation Front, and the principal members of his party. The meeting took place in the Great Hall of the People.

Vice-Chairman Deng said the Sino-Algerian friendship between our two peoples has been forged in struggle. "In international affairs," he said, "we have cooperated and supported each other for many years. Sino-Algerian relations are very good, and the two countries have also cooperated very well in the struggle for the establishment of a new international economic order."

The vice-chairman said that not only should the North-South dialogue now be brought to the agenda, but the South-South cooperation is also a very important issue. "If the Third World countries want to achieve development, they should expand cooperation among themselves," he said. "Third World countries have their own characteristics and strong points. They can learn from each other and there are broad fields for their cooperation." Vice-Chairman Deng said China holds high respect for Algeria's efforts to promote the unity and cooperation among the Third World countries and expand the Nonaligned Movement. "We believe," he said, "Algeria will play still greater role in opposing hegemonism, safeguarding world peace and in the struggle for the establishment of a new international economic order."

Chairman Hu said President Chadli Bendjedid is an "old friend and old comrade-in-arms of the Chinese people." "Your current visit has provided us an opportunity to exchange views," he said. "I believe that the visit will further strengthen friendship and cooperation between China and Algeria."

President Chadli Bendjedid said that he wished his current visit would raise friendly relations between Algeria and China to still a new level. "It is very important to strengthen consultations among the Third World countries and between Algeria and China," he said. As a nonaligned country, he said, Algeria has paid attention to both the South-South cooperation and the North-South dialogue. The strengthening of South-South cooperation will benefit the people of the Third World countries, he said. "We will not let the superpowers dominate the world and decide the destiny of the Third World countries," he stressed.

After the meeting, Chairman Hu and Vice-Chairman Deng hosted a dinner in honor of the Algerian guests. Present on the occasion were Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs, and Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party.

BRITISH ATTACK ON FALKLAND ISLANDS REPORTED

[Text] London, April 25 (XINHUA) -- British helicopters today attacked an Argentine submarine near the island of South Georgia in the South Atlantic, the Defense Ministry announced here today. This dramatic development in the Falklands (Malvinas) crisis came less than 48 hours after Britain had warned Argentine vessels and aircraft to stay away from the British naval task force or risk encountering "appropriate response." The Defense Ministry spokesman did not say how the attack had come about, what weapons were used or what happened to the submarine. He said the attack was made on a "hostile" Argentine submarine "in pursuance of our inherent right of self-defense under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter." This incident has removed any doubt that Britain is willing to use force in the Falklands region even when negotiations for a peaceful solution are still under way. However, opposition Labor Party leader Michael Foot today queried the wisdom of the British helicopter attack on an Argentine submarine "at this moment when the (U.S. Secretary of State Alexander) Haig discussions are still to be discussed and when the further discussions that we demanded could still be brought into play," as he put it.

FURTHER ON DRAFTING OF NEW CONSTITUTION

XINHUA Review

OW241230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1202 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- The multi-layered drafting of China's new constitution is approaching a high hour. The draft of the revised constitution now being discussed at the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress has been worked out by the national constitutional revision committee, which has been soliciting opinions from all quarters over the past year and a half. The work was done in accordance with guidelines issued in August 1980 at the Third Session of the Fifth National People's Congress.

The 1978 constitution no longer suits the current political and economic situation or the needs of the people for a modernized country. A systematic revision is needed to refine the state system which is based on the people's democratic dictatorship. Other aims of the new constitution are to foster the socialist democracy, to strengthen the socialist legal system, to consolidate and amplify the fundamental rules and regulations of the state, to conscientiously safeguard the rights of the people and the rights of various nationalities. Other compelling goals of the constitution are to consolidate and develop the present lively political situation which is characterized by stability and unity, to fully mobilize all positive factors, to fully realize the superiorities of socialist system and to speed up the four modernization program.

Beginning in September 1980, the secretariat of the revision committee has gathered opinions from various government departments and organizations, committees and levels of the population. The committee invited scholars and specialists in law, political science and economics to consultation sessions and received letters from people throughout the country and motions from the deputies to the people's congresses. At the same time, it has made a careful study of the three constitutions China has established since the 1949 founding of the People's Republic (adopted in 1954, 1975 and 1978 respectively) and of other documents. It also studied all the constitutions of old China (before 1949), current constitutions of various countries in the world as well as old constitutions of some foreign countries.

The secretariat then worked out a preliminary draft of the revised constitution and later this preliminary draft was submitted to the revision committee for discussion and further revision. The current draft was completed after hearing the opinions of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, the Standing Committee of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference and other departments.

The draft will be offered for nationwide discussion after being approved by the N.P.C. Standing Committee. Later the further revised draft will be submitted to the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress to be convened later this year.

The current draft, which has been submitted to the N.P.C. Standing Committee, sums up China's experience in the past 30 years in socialist revolution and development. It adheres to the four fundamental principles and the people's democratic dictatorship, the form of government which practises democratic centralism as well as the system of autonomy in nationality areas which are inalienable to the People's Republic of China. It also reflects the transformation and improvement of China's political, economic and cultural systems and embodies the interests and aspirations of the people of all nationalities.

EDITORIAL ON PROTECTING, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY

[Editorial: "Protect and Develop Our National Industry"]

[Text] China has scored initial results from instituting its policy of opening up to the outside world, which has played a role in stimulating the building of the four modernizations. Everyone knows this. There is also no need to deny that a number of new problems have cropped up in the course of implementing this policy.

Proceeding from summing up experiences and improving our work, we are now probing this question: Does a socialist country whose economy is mainly a planned one face a problem of protecting its national industry? If we say that this question was not particularly prominent for a long time in the past, then we should acknowledge that in the wake of instituting the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, we have imported a lot of advanced technology and equipment from abroad, and the question of protecting national industry is facing us ever more acutely.

Please look: Trucks and autos of various foreign makes are on the roads everywhere, and there are large numbers of "utility" and "dual-purpose" vehicles imported under various pretexts and yet China's No 1 automobile plant, built in the 1950's, does not have enough to do, and much of its equipment is idle; neither does the No 2 automobile plant, built in the 1970's, have enough to do, while many auto plants are threatened with production cuts.

Please look again: We have imported large quantities of seamless steel pipes for the petroleum industry, but the Chengdu seamless steel pipe factory does not have enough work; and the state has bought advanced foreign manufacturing technology for certain pieces of mining equipment, large oxygen producers and so on, and is already able to turn out technically-advanced products of relatively high quality, yet cannot sell them on the domestic market. Certain customer units still continue to order goods from abroad, to undermine yet again the domestic manufacture by relying on foreign products.

It is even more plain how imported television sets, radio cassettes and wristwatches dominate the market and damage the sales of similar goods made in China.

Does not all this suffice to show that protecting and developing our national industry has become an extremely important question in China's economic work?

The slogan of protecting and developing national industry is an old one. This issue was put forward by advanced Chinese back in the days when China was still a semifeudal and semicolonial society. The reformist leader Kang Youwei of the late Qing Dynasty lamented in his famous "Gong Che Shang Shu:" "We are ruining our country if we let foreign goods circulate while forbidding our own people to produce them." The history of industry in old China is a bitter history of how the Chinese people struggled for existence under oppression and exploitation by imperialism and the comprador bourgeoisie.

Why has protecting and developing national industry become an issue more than 30 years after China entered socialist society? This is not a simple repeat of history; it is a new question that has arisen as China enters a new historical period. In this new period of historical development, we are practicing a policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. This is a very great change, and a fully correct one. It is inevitable that certain new problems should arise. We can only apply new methods to solve the new problems. This means that we must implement the policy of opening up to the outside world, draw in foreign investment and new technology, and import new equipment that we are for the moment unable to produce in China. However all this is aimed at developing our own industry, and so the things we import must be digested, studied and developed in connection with China's realities, so that we will be able to produce them ourselves. This is a new skill we must learn. The imperialist embargo in the early postliberation period indeed stimulated the people of the country to base their work on domestic efforts and to be self-reliant and work hard to make the country strong. But even in those days we were trying to get foreign aid and to have dealings with foreign countries. Chinese and foreigners all know this. Conditions have changed now, and we can revive and develop international exchanges. We should not, and cannot, carry our modernization behind closed doors. Like relying on our own efforts, opening up to the outside world is our basic policy, and could be described as the road we must follow to achieve the four modernizations. We must unswervingly follow this road.

Today's China is a socialist country. We practice a planned economy and take planned economy as the primary factor and regulation by market mechanism as supplementary. When formulating national economic plans, and when signing economic and technical contracts and import and export trade agreements with foreign countries, we must both draw in advanced technology and import the necessary advanced key items of equipment, and also strictly limit imports of equipment that we can produce ourselves and meet our own needs. We should import what we should, otherwise we will repeat the mistake of closing China to international intercourse. We should resolutely not import items that we should not import, otherwise we will make the mistake of relying on foreign countries, being unable to digest foreign things, and never being able to maintain independence and keep the initiative in our own hands.

Our comrades should understand that international economic competition is becoming ever more intense. The economically-developed United States and Japan, and the EEC countries, have all adopted various measures to protect, support and encourage the interests of their own industries and the development of their national industries, while the developing countries regard their national industries as their lifeline. As a socialist country, China should all the more absorb the strong points of others in a planned way to make up for its deficiences, to promote the strengthening and growth of its national industry. The most important thing here is the relationship between partial and overall interests and between current and long-term interests. We acknowledge that it is rational in terms of internationalizing production to draw in certain advanced foreign technology and import certain fine-quality foreign products. However, from the angle of advancing China's industrialization, we must attach importance to protecting and developing our national industry. If we import foreign goods when we could make such items ourselves, with technological capabilities at international standards and low prices, then such imports will hamper the development of national industry and even deal blows at it, and damage the overall and long-term interests of the people of our country. Such imports should therefore be considered, examined and restricted. We should realize that our national industry, including the machine building industry, now has a considerable foundation after more than 30 years of development. This is acknowledged both at home and abroad. What reason do we have for underestimating our own capabilities? There is no basis for the uncritical notion that Chinese products cannot match foreign ones; and such a notion also dispalys too great lack of ambition. The following high-tension polyethylene deal was concluded in the Beijing Hotel: The importing unit was a Chinese enterprise, the exporting unit was also a Chinese enterprise, and a foreign businessman in the middle speculated and reaped the profit. Such a case of Chinese despising Chinese products and thus helping others to make money at Chinese expense should never occur again.

Of course, while protecting and developing our national industry, we should devise ways of improving many backward aspects in China's industry and rouse ourselves to catch up. It will not do to rely on a protection policy and be content with backwardness. The Chinese people have ambition. We believe that under the correct leadership of the Central Committee, our national industry will certainly enjoy new prosperity and great development by adhering to the policy of opening up to the outside world and increasing our ability to rely on our own efforts.

BEIJING RADIO STRESSES COMBATING ECONOMIC CRIME

[Station commentary: "In the Face of the New Tests"]

[Text] The struggle to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic sphere manifests the class struggle in the economic sphere under the new historical conditions. As far as the ideological sphere is concerned, this is also a struggle against corruption and degeneration. It means that CCP members and cadres are facing a serious new t st.

As the saying goes, strength of character is tested in a crisis. In the course of struggle many facts indicate that the majority of party members and cadres are demonstrating firmness in the face of the new test. They have remained sober-minded and continued high vigilance in the course of struggle, and have maintained their true characteristics as Communist Party members in combating corruption by capitalist ideas and all types of sugar-coated bullets.

However, in the face of economic criminal activities, some party members and cadres have taken a laissez-faire attitude and failed to demonstrate their militancy as Communist Party members, while others have placed criminals under their protective umbrellas. Still others have directly participated in various criminal activities and sinned against the party and the people. Why are some people able to withstand the new test, whereas others fail? This is a question worth pondering.

Facts have proven that those who stand firmly in the face of the new test possess the following two lofty characteristics:

1. They place the interests of the people and the state above everything else. Sharp-eyed and clearheaded, they dare to struggle, because they are selfless and fearless. For example, party member and worker (Zhang Jiyang) of the Chaoyang county post and telecommunications office in Guangdong Province was suppressed when she exposed the crime of shielding a smuggler by her direct supervisor, the director of the post and telecommunications office. However, she told her husband: Everyone shares responsibility for the country's fate. Every party member shares responsibility for the party's fate. I simply cannot ignore such a crime. She was even ready to go to jail. It was this spirit of regarding the defense of the interests of the people and the state as her own bounden duty and of totaling ignoring her own interests and safety that gave (Zhang Jiying) tremendous strength.

2. They firmly believe that under the leadership of the Communist Party, truth will definitely defeat evil. For example, party members and cadres of the (Meilin) production brigade in Fujian Province, pace setters in combating corruption and smuggling, were cursed and attacked by evildoers when they led the masses in struggling against corruption and smugglers. Deputy Secretary (Li Dahan) of the brigade party branch said: I firmly believe that justice is on our side. It was this kind of conviction that helped the (Meilin) brigade withstand the pressure and triumphantly and persistently wage struggle against smuggling.

On the other hand, let us look at those who failed in the new historical test. They have lost the above-mentioned two lofty characteristics. They have totally forgotten the party's prestige, the people's interests and the revolutionary truth. What they have in their mind is their own interest. They are soulless and spiritless. They have become degenerated in their thinking. How can they possibly withstand the attacks by the sugar-coated bullets?

History is inexorable. The serious new test is now facing us. Do all the party members and cadres consciously realize this point? What must they do in order to withstand this test? Everyone must answer these questions with his own deeds.

SHANGHAI PAPER CITES YAO YILIN ON FOREIGN TRADE

[Text] Vice Premier Yao Yilin has reassured foreign businessmen that China continues to need overseas investment and will not suddenly change direction in its economic policy.

Yao Yilin, who is also director of the State Planning Commission, called on them to co-operate with China and invest in its industrial construction, especially energy development, communications, transportation and harbour building.

The Shanghai paper SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO said Yao told a delegation from the Stanford International Research Institute: "Since 1976, China has never made any change in and will insist on its open policy on economic co-operation and trade with foreign countries. China has stressed both self-reliance and co-operation with foreign countries."

On foreign loans and joint venture projects, Yao said: "Having eaten too much, we sometimes need intervals to digest in order to eat more. When we stop to digest, some foreign newspapers comment that China's economy has collapsed. While we are eating more after the interval, they carry the news of China's great economic leap forward.

"In my view, all these sayings are exaggeration. I hope that those who are making deals with us will not be affected and make a fuss of it. In line with our own programmes, we need to readjust our economy."

Yao said that in the past China had made mistakes in trading with foreign businessmen. "A child always thinks he could eat much," Yao added. "But he is not able to eat up what he thought he could. We are no longer children but we have made similar mistakes in our work sometimes."

"Foreign businessmen should not expect to have big dealings with China's exterprises at the beginning. We ought to increase trade step by step on the base of mutual understanding, in case big mistakes occur.

"China has passed its most critical period and its economic situation is becoming better gradually," Yao summed up: "I am sure that foreign businessmen can find more and more opportunities to co-operate with China."

COMMENTATOR ON WORK CONCERNING INTELLECTUALS

[Commentator's article: "Seriously Check on the Work Concerning Intellectuals"]

[Text] In accordance with the CCP Central Committee's demand on checking the work concerning intellectuals, the Anhui Provincial CCP Committee is seriously checking the implementation of policies on intellectuals and returned Overseas Chinese. Similar work has been unfolded in other provinces and autonomous regions.

The question of intellectuals is one to which the party and the state attach great importance. The building of our socialist material and spiritual civilization could not succeed without intellectuals. Over the past few years, the party has done a lot of work in bringing order out of chaos for intellectuals. The party has in theory and policy expounded and affirmed that the intellectuals of our country, like workers and peasants, are part of the working people and an important supporting force of our party. At the same time, the party has devoted great efforts to redressing unjust, sham and wrong cases for intellectuals, readjusting the work of some professionals whose studies and strong points are not properly employed in their present work, appraising their job titles and improving their working and living conditions. However, we must point out that the implementation of the policies on intellectuals is not very even in all localities and departments. A few localities and departments report very insignificant results even now, and some people even bear resentment toward this work. Since erroneous extreme "leftist" ideology has not been eliminated, the leading cadres of some localities and units do not have sufficient understanding of the role and the function of intellectuals in the new era and do not understand the characteristics of hard and complicated mental work. They are still prejudiced against it. Therefore, it is imperative that we seriously check on the work concerning intellectuals.

To check on the work concerning intellectuals is to have a thorough understanding of the actual situation so as to solve problems. We must make use of this check to further implement the party's policies on intellectuals and returned Overseas Chinese, so as to further eliminate the prejudice of people within the party and in society.

Politically, we must treat them equally without discrimination; we must give them a free hand in their work and be concerned with their well-being. Apart from continuing to pay attention to solving problems regarding the senior intellectuals of the older generation, we must put special emphasis on checking and solving problems existing among middle-aged and young intellectuals. As a matter of fact, middle-aged and young intellectuals form the majority of the intellectual rank in our country; most of the mainstays of administrative work in scientific research, education, cultural and propaganda work, public health, industry and transport, agriculture and forestry are middle-aged intellectuals. They shoulder the historical responsibility of inheriting the past and ushering in the future, and carrying forward their present work and forging ahead into the future. In general, the working, studying and living conditions of these intellectuals are relatively unsatisfactory and there are many problems. If we do not view these problems existing among these comrades from a strategic perspective and solve them step by step, we are very likely to commit mistakes of historical nature. In checking the work concerning intellectuals, we must implement the spirit of carrying out, checking and solving problems at the same time. Problems that can be solved by the efforts of the local units, systems and districts must be solved as soon as possible; we must not turn a blind eye to them and adopt a hesitant bureaucratic attitude. As for problems that cannot be immediately solved, the local units and districts must put forward methods, measures and suggestions to the higher authority and explain their work to the masses.

The intellectuals in our country are people who have deep love for the motherland, the party and socialism and they understand the difficulties of our country. For the prosperity of our country and our nation, we must seriously do a good job of this work, study and stipulate measures to improve the work and strive to score some results within a short period of time. By means of this check on the work concerning intellectuals, we must establish this concept: Whether or not we mobilize the enthusiasm of the intellectuals and bring their intelligence and ability into full play is an important hallmark for appraising the leadership work of a locality or a unit.

MEETING SETS UP SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY SOCIETY

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- In an effort to promote the research of social psychology in China, a national society for the study of social psychology was set up here today at a meeting attended by 170 psychologists, sociologists, doctors and educational workers from all parts of the country. At this gathering, as elsewhere in the world, social psychology is generally concerned with relations between individual psychological activities and given conditions of social life. Social psychology and physiological psychology are the two pillars of the psychological science.

Yu Guangyuan, vice president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, and Fei Xiaotong, a noted social anthropologist and president of the Chinese Association for Sociological Research, were invited as advisers to the society, and Chen Yuanhui, vice president of the Chinese Association of Psychology, was elected president of the society.

Wu Jianglin, a well known social psychological professor, was elected standing vice president of the society. He said that the society will establish contact centers in Beijing, Guangzhou and Shanghai, bringing together full-time and spare-time social psychologists in order to popularize social psychology, to develop academic exchanges and to combine social psychology with practical conditions in China.

In order to promote socialist cultural and material development, Wu Jianglin said, social psychology is needed in studying social problems including social cutoms, juvenile delinquency, family planning and the education of the only child.

At present, Professor Wu is in charge of compiling a textbook of social psychology, the first in China, which is expected to be published next year and will be added to curriculum for college departments of psychology, sociology, and pedagogy. So far departments of psychology have been established in the Beijing University, Beijing Teachers' University, East China Teachers' University and Hangzhou University.

Twenty research topics in social psychology were selected at the meeting. These included: researching psychological characters of children, women, old people, students, teachers, shop assistants, customers, administrators and members of national minorities; and public opinion, aesthetic standards, mental health, marital happiness and other respects of social life.

Wu Jianglin pointed out that great attention should be paid to the psychological impact of the 1966-1976 chaos on the characters of young people.

The meeting decided to publish the first issue of its publication, the CHINESE JOURNAL OF SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY, this year.

FURTHER ON NATIONAL FORUM ON MILITARY WRITING

Ba Jin Speech

HK260951 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 82 p 5

[Article by Ba Jin: "Speech at National Forum To Discuss Literary Writing on Military Subjects"]

[Text] The national forum to discuss literary writing on military subjects jointly sponsored by the Cultural Department of the PLA General Political Department and the Chinese Writers' Association has already begun. It is a pity that I cannot attend the forum because I have not been well recently. I enthusiastically support this forum and wish the forum great success.

Military themes constitute an important part of the themes for literary creation. Under the leadership of the great CCP, and of Chairman Mao, Zhu De and other comrades, our People's Army has fought arduously for decades and has achieved tremendous historic merits. During this prolonged arduous struggle there have been countless heroes in our army who have bravely performed heroic and moving deeds. All these are rich sources for literary creation. Since the founding of the PRC, many excellent works have been written to describe revolutionary wars and extol heroes by our large number of writers who have experienced prolonged military life. These works have been well received by our readers. They have instructed generation after generation of young people in patriotism and revolutionary heroism. Over the past few years, another large number of good works have been published which have exerted very good influence on the masses.

In the early postliberation period, I went to an army unit and stayed for some time among the Chinese People's Volunteers. That was the first time I had lived with the PLA commanders and fighters and came into contact with common soldiers who were seemingly ordinary but actually not. I felt extremely warm in my heart. At that time on the Korean battlefield, which was characterized by fierce fighting and a hard life, people used to express their love and hatred by concrete action. Young fighters considered hardship a glory and more hard work as happiness. At crucial moments they vied to give their lives. Their revolutionary heroism and internationalist spirit moved and educated me. I made friends with commanders and fighters of the Chinese People's Volunteers, and there was a gradual change in my thinking and feeling. My first stay in the army unit lasted 7 months. The next year I spent another 5 months there. Although it was not a long time and the works I wrote were neither numerous nor good, I began to portray the images of young fighters and, through my works, conveyed more or less to my readers the feelings I had gained on the Korean battlefield. Even today the moving deeds of my beloved heroes are still inspiring my heart and stimulating me to march forward.

Our army is a beloved army. It has made new contributions in recent years to the struggle of defending and building the socialist motherland and in modernizing the army. I think volumes should be written about the army's glorious fighting history and heroic example. This is the duty of us writers. Now the international situation is still turbulent and not tranquil, and the danger of war remains. The PLA is still standing in the vanguard of the struggle to defend the motherland, safeguard the four modernizations, oppose hegemonism and preserve world peace. Whether from the angle of educating young people and future generations, building a socialist spiritual civilization and opposing wars of aggression, or from the angle of literature depicting rich and colorful real life to satisfy the people's increasing spiritual needs, we should all energetically promote and develop creative literature on military themes.

Thanks to the PLA leading comrades. It is because of your vigorous support and help that this forum can be convened successfully. This is the first forum of this kind to be held since the founding of the PRC. Our writers' association has not done much work in this respect, but we are willing to make efforts in organizing and promoting this work in coordination with you.

After this forum the Chinese Writers' Association and its branches in various localities should make arrangements to promote literary writing on military subjects, organize local writers to go to army units and live there for some time and strengthen the work of studying and commenting on literature with military themes. It is necessary to consider these tasks as part of the regular work, attach importance to them and try to grasp then with fruitful results.

Many of our writers have accumulated rich experience in writing on military subjects, but at the same time they also have some problems related to the ideology and other aspects of literary creation on military subjects and have to continuously conduct study and research to solve these problems. At this forum, we can sum up and exchange our experiences, fully confirm our achievements, discover our shortcomings, raise our understanding of the significance of writing literary works on military themes and heighten our sense of responsibility in order to promote the more satisfactory development of literary writing on military subjects.

As I do not have any good experience, I will not be able to give many opinions. I only want to convey some of my notions.

I think literary writing on military subjects, like writing on other subjects, is now faced with the question of raising quality. Of course, there should be a rather large number of literary works because we have numerous readers with varying needs. More important, however, is the quality of our literary works. Thus, it is necessary to create good works of a high ideological and artistic level that are liked by the broad masses.

One of the important problems in raising the quality of our literary writing on military subjects is to persist in adopting the method of creation based on revolutionary realism. For example, on the question of broadening our field of vision, it is necessary to link the military with other fronts and depict wars and military struggles with a broad, social background instead of writing about wars and military affairs in a manner of isolating them from social life. In this respect, Wei Wei's novel "East" is very satisfactory. In this novel, Wei Wei does not directly start the depiction by writing about the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea; instead, he gives a picture of the prosperous rural areas after the land reform. By portraying people under this background he showed the justness of the war to defend the motherland as well as made the novel grander by giving people a picture of the historical background.

Also for example, on the question of truthfulness, it is necessary to respect truths in life (including historical truths), dig for them in the depths of real life, and not to "elevate" or dismember them subjectively and at will. Mr. Lu Xun said long ago that "we should be strict in selecting materials and dig for them in depth."

I am fond of reading the letters of our martyrs in the self-defensive counterattack against Vietnam to their relatives and those martyrs' diaries that have been published in our newspapers. These letters and diaries are so true, so simple, so kind and so moving that in every line of them we feel the pulse of the noble and pure hearts of the martyrs who fought for their homeland, their relatives and their motherland. When they wrote them, they had no intention of having them published, but some of their letters and diaries are in a style more touching than "polished" writing. Naturally, literary works must be polished by writers, but as far as I understand it, in polishing them we should not run counter to the truth in real life. On the contrary, we should dig deep for the inside information of life and give a true picture of the times. By deeply delving into contemporary life in this manner, we will be able to make the characters in more works more characterized by their times and we will be able to make our works to a certain extent more profound in reflecting the times in history. Thus we will be able to avoid the malpractice of being satisfied at making superficial descriptions.

A third example is the problem of developing the characteristics and fortunes of the characters through portraying them in complicated contradictions and conflicts. The decades of fighting life of the PLA are rich, complex and diversified. During these heroic and unprecedented struggles, generation after generation of dauntless fighters were tempered. In portraying people and depicting their characteristics and fortunes in our literary works, we should put our characters in surroundings that are full of contradictions and conflicts. Only by so doing can we fully disclose their mental attitude and inner world. In this respect, we can learn from our literary classics on military subjects. For example, in "The Romance of the Three Kingdoms" and "Water Margin" the writers portrayed a large number of people of different characters in such a vivid manner that you feel that these people were real people whom you had lived among and who made an unforgetable impression on you. One of the important reasons for these writers' successes stemmed from the fact that the writers portrayed their characters through putting them in the vortex of struggle. Regarding the portrayal of heroic people, we have also to pay attention in our practices of literary creation, to the correct handling of the relationships between being heroic and being common and the relationships between heroic people and the masses.

Finally, I want to say something about the problem that writers should be familiar with life and plunge into the thick of life. In my opinion, this is the key to bringing about flourishing military literary creation as well as the prerequisite for raising the quality of literary works.

Life is the source, and the only source, of literary and artistic creation. Any serious writer, ancient or modern, Chinese or foreign, must always derive nourishment and look for material from this source. Divorced from life, what else has a writer to write about? And how can what is written by any good? If we do not proceed from life, we can only proceed from notions and fabricate. If a writer does not know life well, lacks accumulated experience, does not have a profound base in life and fails to experience and study it in depth, all these shortcomings will be exposed when he writes. My personal experience has impressively proved that this is true. If I had not been sent to Korea by the national writers' association in the 1950's, I would not have been able to write anything to extol the Chinese People's Volunteers. But I only stayed in Korea for 1 year, and accumulated only a limited amount of experience. Gradually I became unfamiliar with things I had been familiar with and lost contact with my newly-made friends and became unfamiliar with them. To create new works depicting the new era, experience in life accumulated only in the past is not enough. We must have new experiences, accumulated from life, and new knowledge and skill. And all this can only be known and grasped step by step in the process of plunging into the thick of life. Only by plunging into the heat of life in our army today, will we be able to write things that truly and profoundly reflect the new mental attitude of the fighters of our time.

I believe that following this forum more local writers will go to army units to observe and learn from the real life there. The close solidarity and cooperation between PLA writers and local writers will no doubt bring the literary writing on military subjects to still greater prosperity.

Let us all pick up the pen, use it as fire and as a sword, extol the true, the good and the beautiful, extol the "Great Wall" and the new generation of most beloved people and strike at and eliminate the dark, decadent, old and ugly. Let us use our literary works to make greater contributions to our beloved motherland and people and to build a socialist spiritual civilization!

Liu Baiyu Speech

[Excerpts] Comrade Liu Baiyu, director of the Cultural Department of the PLA General Political Department, delivered a speech at the forum on creative literature with military themes. In his speech he stressed the significance of developing creative literature on military themes, the need to raise the level of such literature in the new period and the need to strengthen leadership over this writing.

Comrade Liu Baiyu said: Our country has entered into a new historical period. Our party has called on writers and artists to play a stronger role in building a socialist spiritual civilization and cultivating socialist new people through their works. The sacred historical task of building a socialist spiritual civilization and cultivating socialist new people should be assumed by all superstructure departments and all socialist writers and artists.

The main contents of our country's revolutionary literature with military themes have been writings which describe armed struggle waged by the Chinese nation and the Chinese people against aggression and for liberation. Patriotism and revolutionary heroism are often forcefully reflected by military struggle, troops, people supporting the war and other participants. The history of the growth of the Chinese Communist Party is also linked with armed struggle. Even in the period of socialist construction, we still need the magic weapon of armed struggle. We must enable the people to understand this historical experience.

Outstanding literature with military themes can help the younger generation foster a correct world outlook and concept of life and war. It can help young people become socialist new people and develop noble internationalism, patriotism and revolutionary heroism.

Liu Baiyu said: During peacetime, struggles with or without bloodshed have never ended. Fighting to resist provocation and aggression and to defend territorial integrity and the dignity of state sovereignty on the Fakashan and Koulinshan front has been very fierce. The struggle between the corruptive forces and anticorruptive forces currently reflects an important part of class struggle. Our army, as always, is standing at the forefront of that struggle. We have waged extremely sharp and complicated struggle against enemy agents and economic crimes in many places on our country's frontiers and in coastal areas.

The basic purpose of our efforts to promote creative literature on military themes is to cultivate socialist new people with revolutionary heroism. This is precisely our goal in advocating this writing.

Comrade Liu Baiyu emphatically pointed out: At present, we are faced with an urgent problem. We must vigorously and promptly raise the quality of literature with military themes and create literature with a high ideological and artistic level. This is the key to the question of whether creative writing with military themes will be enthusiastically welcomed by the broad masses. This is also a main subject to be discussed at this forum.

In conclusion, Comrade Liu Baiyu said: On the southern frontier of our motherland, there is a flower called the sunflower. It is full of vitality. The artillery fire of the Vietnamese troops smashed the land but the flower stood there and continued to bloom brilliantly in the wind. I hope that our literature on military themes will give out brilliance on the socialist literature front in the new Long March like the sunflower, despite all kinds of difficulties and obstacles.

Bai Hua Interview

[Feature by correspondent Zhu Jian [2612 1969]: "A Visit to Bai Hua in the Spring Rain"]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Spring thunder had rolled for the first time this year. Outside the window, spring rain was falling. Seated opposite the correspondent was the well-known writer Bai Hua. The latter was attending a national forum on literary works on military themes. White-haired Bai Hua, who was 52 this year, was full of life and spirit, his eyes shining. When asked about how he had fared recently, he said with enthusiasm: I have come all the way from the border area of Yunnan to attend this meeting. Yunnan was where I fought many battles after I joined the army in 1947. Without realizing it, 25 years elapsed from the time I left the place until my return. I recently went there not in the role of a sightseer or reporter but with a keen desire to relive the past and see friends of various nationalities in the border area. I traveled some 4,000 kilometers visiting the southern, eastern and western parts of Yunnan. I wrote many works in poetry and prose. At the invitation of local literary and art circles, I also gave three lectures in Honghe Prefecture, Chuxiong Prefecture, and Kunming, respectively. I talked about my writing experiences and lessons. Looking thoughtful, Bai Hua said: On my recent visit to the border area of Yunnan I especially felt that time is precious. That we can live and write in peace is precisely because border fighters are safeguarding the country with their fresh blood, though their role is often belittled as no more than that of our sons. As a writer for the people, I feel a sense of urgency. I must hold myself responsible to history and to the people, producing works that are pregnant with the meaning of the era.

What Bai Hua said is full of meaning. Every word uttered by him spells out the feelings of a man of letters. The correspondent asked him: "What you wrote was once the subject of controversy. Can you let all those readers with their concern for you know your present way of thinking?" Bai Hua laughed, as he said: In recent years, many people at home and abroad have written letters to me on this subject. They have sent relevant magazines and newspapers from Japan, the United States, Hong Kong and various Southeast Asian countries and regions for me to read. I have felt deeply grateful. I know that this is not just a gesture of concern for me as an individual but also a show of concern for our whole country. It should be made known to them that our party has come to understand the nature of a writer's work and will not resort to extreme measures. Literary and art criticism is a highly delicate business. Using simple and crude means is no solution to ideological problems. That there are different arguments about a work is inevitable. Even among brothers and sisters, contradictions are unavoidable. It is hoped that foreign friends will also view things this way. It is hardly possible to achieve a consensus on any work. So long as we properly treat literary and art criticism and seriously analyze and discuss things, contradictions can be resolved.

"Do you still have any writing plans for movie scripts on contemporary themes?" asked the correspondent. "Of course, I do," Bai Hua said without the least hesitation. Many people have asked me whether I would change my style for this reason. You can rest assured that the party has never done anything to suppress any unique style or view that a literary work represents. I myself will also not betray the reader's hopes. I will only take a more prudent approach to my own works. Bai Hua said smilingly: Now objectively there are no difficulties standing in my way. When I went to Yunnan, the army unit specially put a jeep at my disposal and gave me all the help I needed. Now, the only problem is whether I can improve myself and write in a more profound and artistic manner, so that not only the readers at home but also the people of the whole world can understand the history of China and its people through our literature.

On writing plans, Bai Hua said offhand: My writing plans for the current year chiefly include medium-length and short novels, poetry, prose and also attempts at artistic exploration. Selected poems and stories by me will all be published. The movie script "Peacock Prince" will also be put on view. I am currently working on a novel. My novel entitled "Mummy, Oh Mummy" finished not long ago portrays the growth of a martyr's surviving orphan nurtured by eight mothers, including a peasant woman, hunter and player, all of them embodiments of the images of people with sympathy for the revolution. In fact, the growth of every revolutionary, including myself, involves more than eight mothers.

DENG URGES PLA AIR FORCE TO SUPPORT AGRICULTURE

[Text] Beijing, 25 Apr (XINHUA) -- In accordance with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opinion, the People's Air Force is actively making arrangements to use aircraft to sow tree and grass seed this year.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping recently pointed out: The air force should take part in specialized flying missions in support of agricultural and forestry construction for 20 years and make contributions to accelerating agricultural and animal husbandry development and covering the motherland with trees and grass.

In accordance with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's call, the air force party committee especially called the leading comrades of air force units together, conducted a study and made concrete plans and arrangements for aerial seeding of trees and grass this year. Commander Zhang Tingfa personally took charge of the task. Responsible comrades of the air force headquarters on their own initiative went to the State Agricultural Commission to get assignments, and various units promptly began making preparations for the aerial seeding. Units responsible for seeding forage grass in north China, northeast China and Nei Monggol selected skilled flightcrews to carry out the task. Large numbers of ground personnel raced against time to reequip airplances. Flying personnel began training in low-altitude and minimum-altitude flying. The air force of Lanzhou PLA units has already completed the reequipment of airplanes and training of flying personnel. The commanders and fighters are striving to improve their aerial-seeding technique and make more contributions to greening the motherland.

They have also worked out specific measures to this effect through analysis and investigations. All units are urged to hold a party committee meeting or an enlarged party committee meeting to study the guidelines of the central directives, deepen their understanding, unify their thinking and conduct education on the anticorruption struggle on a grand scale to revolutionalize, modernize and standardize all PLA units.

SHANDONG RADIO ON UNDERSTANDING RURAL POLICY

SK231449 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Station commentary: "Arm Cadres and Masses With Guidelines of Summary of Minutes of National Rural Work Conference"]

[Excerpt] The summary of the minutes of the national conference on rural work recently transmitted by the CCP Central Committee is another programmatic document of the party on rural work following the "decision of the CCP Central Committee on some questions concerning the acceleration of agricultural development." It is of great significance to arm the vast number of rural cadres and people with the guidelines of the summary of the minutes in perfecting the production responsibility system, developing the collective economy and promoting agriculture.

The implementation of the production responsibility system is a change affecting millions upon millions of people. By reforming the labor structure and the remuneration distribution system, the responsibility system combines authority, responsibility and profits of the peasants, thus arousing their enthusiasm. However, we must note that many problems remain in our work. Some cadres and people do not understand that in a collective economy practicing the production responsibility system, the public ownership of land and other means of production must not be changed. They do not understand that collective administration and management in the form of linking remuneration to output and awarding production contracts is indispensable, and it is necessary to bring into play simultaneously the enthusiasm of the collective and the individual. Consequently, incidents disrupting the collective economy have been reported in a few localities. Worse still, disparate understanding of and approaches to solving these problems have occasioned two kinds of worries among cadres and the masses: first, the implementation of the production responsibility system will lead them astray; second, whether the admittedly good responsibility system is here to stay. All these problems stand in the way of the development of the excellent rural situation.

Applying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, the summary of the minutes of the national conference on rural work not only systematically sums up the abundant experience of our nation's rural economic readjustment and reforms in recent years and ferrets out problems warranting attention, but also suggests many solutions to our problems. The summary points out in a timely manner that major changes of the rural production responsibility system have been realized and our attention should be switched to summing up, perfecting and stabilizing the system. It reaffirms that our agriculture must follow the socialist collective road; the public ownership of land and other means of production will not be changed for a long time to come and the implementation of the responsibility system in a collective economy is a long-term policy.

The central idea, guidelines and substance of the summary constitute a powerful weapon to enhance and unify the ideology of cadres and the masses. They are also an important policy foundation for further improving the production responsibility system. Attending to it as the focal point of our current rural work, localities must successfully organize the publicizing and study of the summary. Efforts should be made to publicize the summary among commune members and ensure it is known and understood by everyone.

DIVISIONAL-LEVEL CADRES LEAVE POSTS IN ZHEJIANG

OW201435 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1040 GMT 20 Apr 82

Among this group of departing cadres are veteran Red Army fighters who joined the army during the second revolutionary civil war period, the veteran Eighth Route Army fighters who joined the revolution during the war of resistance against Japan, people's heroes who made great contributions in war and veteran model fighters who made great contributions to army building. In those years, in the face of the national crisis, when the nation was in danger of being conquered, they determinedly joined the revolution, fought the enemy throughout the country and made contributions for the party and the people. Today, they do not claim credit, willingly vacate their offices and make new contributions to accelerating our army's modernization and regularization.

(Li Ke), full division-level adviser to the Hangzhou Military Subdistrict, was wrongly persecuted by Lin Biao and the gang of four during the Great Cultural Revolution and was not redressed for more than a decade. He was rehabilitated after the party's third plenary session and became an adviser. When the party organization decided that he should be relieved from his post for rest and recuperation, he happily accepted the decision, saying: I am over 60 years of age and do not have much energy left. My early departure from the office is favorable to the training of young cadres.

(Chen Peiting), deputy commander of the Shaoxing Military Subdistrict, worked until the last moment by going down to the basic-level units to inspect the militia work during the 3 months immediately prior to his departure from office.

(Fiang Xianren), people's hero of east China, first class, and deputy commander of the Jiaxing Military Subdistrict, concentrated his efforts to promote army regularization in basic-level units many times in the short period of time following the party organization decision on his departure for rest and recuperation. On the training ground, he trained fighters by explanation and demonstration, and this was deeply appreciated by cadres and fighters.

The party committee of the provincial military district showed cordial concern for these departing old cadres. The leading comrade of this committee had a talk with each of them and listened to their opinions and inquired about their needs before making arrangements for their departure from office. He emphasized that party committees at all levels must attach importance to solving all practical problems the relieved old cadres might have so as to ensure that they would enjoy the political treatment they deserve and adequate material and cultural life.

NANFANG RIBAO ON OPEN-DOOR POLICY, ECONOMIC CRIME

[Commentator's article: "A Sharp Weapon for Maintaining the Policy of Opening up to the Outside World and Enlivening the Domestic Economy"]

[Text] The decision on combating serious criminal activities in the economic field, recently issuued by the CCP Central Committee and State Council, is an extremely important document. Apart from being a sharp ideological weapon for combating economic crimes, it is also a sharp ideological weapon for urging the cadres and masses to maintain the economic policies laid down since the third plenary session and uphold the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. This article will dwell primarily on the question of how Guangdong should promote its economic construction in accordance with the spirit of the "decision."

The "decision" emphatically points out: "Combating serious criminal activities in the economic field is aimed at removing obstacles, boosting the development of industrial and agricultural production, ensuring the smooth progress of all our work and speeding up the modernization of our country. The leading organizations of our party, government and army at all levels should resolutely carry out the principles and policies formulated by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council and painstakingly give guidance and strengthen their political and ideological work in order to prevent the occurrences of any negative factors that will be detrimental to our production and other work. Moreover, they should regard this as a major criterion for assessing the results of their work." This is an important guiding ideology that we must deeply understand and thoroughly carry out.

We must pay attention to preventing and overcoming two kinds of one-sidedenss. This means that it is wrong if some comrades set the struggle of combatting serious criminal activitie in the economic field as opposed to our efforts to develop industrial and agricultural production, and therefore dare not vigorously and speedily crack down on economic criminal activities. These comrades must immediately correct their erroneous view. At the same time, it is also wrong if some comrades think that because we have to make efforts to combat economic crimes, we can slacken our leadership over the economic construction and neglect the implementation of our economic policies. We must resolutely launch the struggle to hit at economic criminal activities on the one hand and do well in solving the problem of continuity and stability of policies on the other, and resolutely bring into play the power of the party's economic policies.

We must consciously keep unchanged the policies of opening up to the outside world and of trial-operation of special economic zones. The CCP Central Committee has demanded that Guangdong practice a policy of opening up still more to the outside world. This is a major policy decision based on the overall situation of the country's modernization drive. Under the premise of upholding the four basic principles, we should sum up experiences, overcome shortcomings and be still more resolute in implementing this important central policy decision. Certain comrades think that the policy of opening up to the outside world will be changed and that there will be "drawing back." This does not accord with the facts and must be clarified.

During the past 2 years, our province has persisted in carrying out the special policies and flexible measures and has achieved a tremendous number of good results. The total output value of our industry and agriculture has been continuously rising with a relatively high speed. In our economic cooperation with the outside world, we have signed more than 13,000 contracts, by which we have introduced more than $2.6 billion of foreign investment into our province. Both the Shenzhen and Zhuhai special economic zones have succeeded in broadening their prospects during a short period of time. We have gradually raised the living standard of our people. We should fully confirm and correctly evaluate all these remarkable achievements. We should make our broad masses and our broad ranks of cadres clearly know, through their local practice and through their personal expereince, the benefits that the party's open-door policy has brought to the state, the collectives and the masses. By so doing, we will be able to make them spontaneously preserve the continuity and stability of our policies.

In order to better carry out the policy of opening up to the outside world, we should, in addition to resolutely combating serious criminal activities in the economic field and carrying out the struggle against corruption among our party members and state personnel, solve the problems of how to correctly utilize foreign capital and how to correctly spend our foreign exchange. During the past couple of years, a large number of the departments in our province have imported large numbers of consumer goods from abroad and dumped these consumer goods in our province, and even in other provinces and areas. This has caused the industry at home to suffer greatly. Some departments and localities in our province have purchased the agricultural and sideline products in our province and even in other provinces and areas at excessive prices. This has had an evil impact on our domestic market. We must firmly and promptly overcome all the above-mentioned malpractices which have resulted from people's poor understanding of the viewpoint that, in our external economic activities, we should take the whole situation into account. We should pay attention to developing our production at home, and we should rely upon and be concerned about the masses. In utilizing foreign capital and spending the foreign exchange that is allocated to our province in the future, we should carry out careful investigation and study and focus on introducing advanced technology and equipment or on purchasing the raw materials for which there are urgent demands in our industrial and agricultural production in order to facilitate the speeding up of our industrial and agricultural production.

Our province is situated in the vicinity of Hong Kong and Macao and has a large number of Overseas Chinese. This is an especially favorable condition for carrying out, in our province, the policy of opening up to the outside world, the special policies and the flexible measures. Under the premise of adhering to the four basic principles and under the guidance of the "decision," we must dare to and learn to know well how to fully utilize this especially favorable condition. All the comrades who are engaged in external economic work in our province must not only consciously adhere to their communist purity and their patriotic stand in safeguarding the interests and honor of their motherland, but also learn well how to deal with Hong Kong, Macao and foreign industrialists and businessmen. Quite a large number of our comrades have already set examples in these respects. We should propagate and popularize their advanced ideology and experience in a big way.

The "decision" clearly points out: "We welcome all international financial organizations and all foreign industrialists and businessmen to invest in our country. We pledge to protect and ensure their lawful rights and just profits as long as they observe the laws of our country and observe the principle of equality and mutual benefits. We highly appraise our Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots' concern and practical support for the construction of the motherland. In the same manner, we welcome their investment in the motherland, and will pledge to protect and ensure their lawful rights and interests and just profits. In combating serious criminal activities in the economic field, we will never involve those industrialists and businessmen who have been conducting normal and lawful transactions with us and who have not conducted illegal activities. On the contrary, combating economic crimes is precisely aimed at ensuring the continuous development of our healthy transactions with them and preventing them from being deceived and blackmailed by a few lawless persons in our country." By so saying, the "decision" reiterates to the whole country and the whole world that our party and state will continue to carry out the policy of opening up to the outside world. All our comrades who are engaged in external economic activities should give wide publicity of the policy of our party and state to foreign businessmen. In conducting our external economic activities, we should adhere to the principle of equality and mutual benefits and scrupulously abide by our promises in order to make foreign businessmen feel at ease in doing business in our country under the prerequisite of observing the laws of our country.

The policy of enlivening the domestic economy is also unswerving. For this, the "decision" has also laid down definite stipulations which reflect the stability and continuity of our policies. We should also conscientiously study and resolutely carry out these stipulations.

Under the fundamental principles of regarding the planned economy as the primary factor and viewing the whole country as one chessboard, we must continue to hand down some powers to the prefectures, municipalities and counties, and expand enterprise decisionmaking powers. The province has summed up the effective experiences of Qingyuan County in the field of reforming enterprise management. We should continue to actively popularize these experiences. In reforming the internal managerial system of the enterprise, the Nanfang food factory in Jiangmen municipality has made a significant breakthrough and has achieved remarkable results. We should continue to popularize, in an orderly manner, their experience in all the units that are suited to carrying out similar reform. All our efforts at reform of the economic system of our industry and commerce and all our efforts at reorganization of our enterprises should serve the goal of raising economic efficiency.

In the agricultural field, we should make our broad ranks of basic-level cadres and the broad masses firmly believe that the series of popular rural economic policies that have been formulated since the party's third plenary session will be carried out for a long time. There will be no change in the public ownership of the main means of production, in practicing various types of responsibility systems and in the policy of comprehensive management of agriculture, industry and sideline occupations, development of domestic sideline production and opening up of rural trade fairs. In a word, there will be no change in the strategic guiding policy of enlivening the economy and allowing the peasants to get rich as quickly as possible under the guidance of the state plan. The golden age for our broad masses of peasants has by no means ended. On the contrary, it has only begun. The good rural situation is only at the beginning stage. A better and happier future is awaiting our peasants.

Of course, we have to solve new problems that will crop up in the progress of the development of our industry, commerce and agriculture. Judging from what has cropped up at present, we have overcome the selfish departmentalism, the decentralism and the trend of liberalization in the economic field. In order to overcome these malpractices, we should carry out careful investigation and study, discuss things with the masses and strengthen our political and ideological work. In short, in so doing, we should pay attention to facilitating the preservation and development of the initiative of our cadres and masses and pay attention to facilitating the better and more comprehensive implementation of all the party's economic policies in order to boost economic development.

Maintaining the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy is parallel with combating serious criminal activities in the economic field. We hope the leading party and government organs at all levels will act according to the central and provincial CCP committee instructions, strengthen leadership over economic work and ensure still greater economic returns and growth rate in the province's economic construction this year while scoring victory in the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field.

Liu Jie Address

[Excerpts] Henan Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Liu Jie made an important speech at the 17 April plenary session of the second congress of the provincial social sciences association. After extending congratulations, Comrade Liu Jie said: This is a successful and important congress. I have been very interested to see some of the material printed and distributed by the congress, which has raised many valuable issues. We can say that this congress is a test of the strength of our philosophy and social science ranks, and it shows that these ranks are not weak.

Liu Jie said: We must attach great importance to philosophy and social science research. As far as we are concerned, it is even more important to realize that theory divorced from practice is empty theory. This requires that all our comrades engaged in ideological and theoretical work spontaneously and thoroughly investigate the entire practice of society and people's thinking. This means that we should study what new phenomena and new problems exist in society, and how to solve them; what people are thinking of at present, and why they are thinking that; and how to guide them to develop the correct orientation. Liu Jie pointed out: At present, the cadres and masses in our province are following the central instructions and dealing resolute blows at serious criminal activitiesin the economic field. They are implementing the 10 major principles for economic construction, perfecting the agricultural production responsibility systems and seriously straightening out the enterprises. All these things are practice in the field of social science.

We have already gained initial success in the struggle to combat serious criminal activities in the economic field. There has been a rapid increase in cases and clues exposed by the masses. Shaken and frightened, many persons who committed serious crimes have given themselves up. Various kinds of sinister trends and moods have declined somwhat. The cadres and masses have thus received great encouragement and profound education. There are a great number of new situations, problems and experiences arising successively in this struggle and in readjusting, restructuring, reorganizing and upgrading the national economy, in perfecting the agricultural production responsibility systems, in promoting the "five stresses and four beauties" drive, rural rules and pacts and the five-good family drive, in the comprehensive tackling of social problems and in strengthening ideological and political work. All these things await theoretical enhancement. It is evident from this that there is a broad scope for philosphy and social science, and now is the time for us to fully display our ability in this respect.

On the question of unifying understanding and strengthening leadership, Comrade Liu Jie said: The party committees and governments at all levels must fully understand the status and role of social science research in the building of the two civilizations, and strengthen leadership over philosophy and social science research and teaching. 1) It is necessary to further implement the party policy on intellectuals; 2) it is necessary to combine the specialized force with the practice of the masses; 3) it is necessary to provide material support. In short, the whole party must assign social science an extremely important position, and mobilize the enthusiasm of social science workers in every way, so that they can provide still better service for promoting the cause of philosophy and social science in Henan and for the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Comrade Liu Jie said in conclusion: This year is Henan's science year. In the science year activities, we must make social science and natural science fly wing to wing.

GUIZHOU REPORTS XINGYI PREFECTURE'S DEVELOPMENT

HK210240 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 19 Apr 82

[Summary] Xingyi Prefecture has made good progress in its economic construction under the party's leadership since liberation. Last September, the State Council decided to turn Xingyi Prefecture into Southwestern Guizhou Autonomous Prefecture of Bouyei and Miao nationalities. This decision will take effect at the end of this month.

"Now the prefecture has 7,443 water conservation facilities of various kinds that effectively irrigate 570,000 mu of land, which is 480 percent of the total irrigated area in the early postliberation period. The power of the prefecture's agricultural machines totals more than 100,000 hp, and the number of its large and medium-sized tractors has risen to 654. The total capacity of rural small hydropower stations amounts to 12,700 kilowatts. RETURNEE COMMENDS PARTY POLICIES IN XIZANG

[Text] Lhasa, April 19 (XINHUA) -- Gelong Losang Danzeng, a Tibetan who returned to his home in 1980, recently gave an interview to XINHUA in which he said: "The present policies in Tibet are very good. The people's life has improved remarkably."

The 67-year-old local government official went to India in 1959. He said that he had returned home twenty-one months ago. He has found that the current policies in Tibet seem to be working well. "As long as these policies are pursued, Tibet's future will be bright," he said, "and Tibetans living abroad will be willing to return to the motherland." "Before I returned home," he continued," I had been told that life in Tibet was very hard and that people had no freedom. But what I have seen here is just the opposite of that. Compared with the living standards when I left here in 1959, things have improved greatly. Every one has food to eat, clothes to wear and money to spend. Some people even have radios, tape-recorders and TV sets. This was unimaginable when I was in exile abroad."

"Now Lhasa is six or seven times larger. The narrow, twisted streets have been replaced by wide and straight ones. There is a lot of contruction going on in the city, and more factories have been built," Losang Danzeng said.

Speaking about the policies of regional autonomy, he said: "I had been told abroad that autonomy in Tibet was in name only. The fact is, many leading posts are held by Tibetans, and all country-level leaders are Tibetans. Tibetans are actually their own masters."
In conclusion, Losang Danzeng said: "History shows that the Han and Tibetan nationalities have been closely related as the sun and the moon. China shows great concern for the minority nationalities. This has made me feel our country has the warmth of a big family. That is why I made the decision to come back to settle here."

XIZANG RIBAO ON STUDYING RURAL MEETING MINUTES

[Report on 14 April XIZANG RIBAO editorial: "Seriously Study and Implement the Minutes and Promote Work in the Agricultural and Pastoral Areas"]

[Excerpts] The minutes of the national rural work conference, recently circulated by the Central Committee, is an extremely important document. Seriously studying and implementing this document and applying its spirit to unify our understanding and guide work in Xizang's rural and pastoral areas will play a great role in further promoting the development of agricultural and animal husbandry production and stimulating the continued advance of the excellent situation in the rural and pastoral areas.

The editorial says: We must first link study of this document with reality, and review and analyze the excellent situation that has emerged in the rural and pastoral areas since instituting the production responsibility systems. As a result of hard work in the past 2 year, the work of setting up various types of production responsibility systems has made great progress in our rural and pastoral areas. Over 95 percent of the production teams have now set up such systems. Over 82 percent of the total number of production teams have established systems of assigning land to each household in exchange for fixed levies or of fixing output quotas for each household. Practice has proved that the establishment of production responsibility systems has overcome many defects in production management and fully mobilized the socialist enthusiasm of the peasants and herdsmen. It has raised fine prospects for rural economic construction and social development.

However, Xizang started later than other provinces and regions in setting up production responsibility systems, and also acted rather quickly and vigorously in readjusting them. Some places made very slow progress at the start, and then pushed the work all at once. Some problems have inevitably resulted. We need to study and solve these problems. The editorial syas: Guided by this important document circulated by the Central Committee, our current task is to seriously sum up experiences, grasp the current main problems that urgently need solving and take effective measures to further promote the production responsibility systems.

1. We must apply the spirit of the central document to unify the understanding of the cadres and masses. In the previous period there were certain worries among the cadres and masses in the course of setting up the responsibility systems. Summed up, the cadres were afraid of acting in a rightist fashion, and the masses were afraid of policy changes. The central document has now clearly pointed out: China's agriculture must maintain the path of socialist collectivization. There will be no change for a long time in the public ownership of land and other basic means of production. There will also be no change for a long time in the establishment of production responsibility systems in the collective economy.

2. We must further implement the various policy measures, guided by the spirit of the minutes. We must repeatedly explain to the masses that the agricultural and pastoral economy is an important component of the national economy, that it is necessary to take planned economy as primary and regulation by market mechanism as secondary and that it is necessary to accept guidance by the state plans.

3. We must build the grassroots leadership groups well in accordance with the spirit of the central document. By studying the document and summing up experiences, we must help the grassroots rural and pastoral cadres to clearly understand the work tasks in the new situation.

The editorial concludes: In order to do still better at implementing the spirit of the central document in connection with the conditions in Xizang, the leaders at all levels and the departments concerned must also dispatch forces to the rural and pastoral areas to carry out an all-round investigation and study in light of the contents of the five sections of the document, and put forward views on implementing them.

KUNMING PLA DECISION ON STUDYING MAO'S WORKS

HK230329 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Apr 82

[Text] The CCP Committee of the Kunming PLA units issued a decision on 9 April on carrying out thorough and sustained study of Comrade Mao Zedong's works. The decision called on the commanders and fighters of all subordinate units to hold aloft the great banner of Mao Zedong Thought and carry out extensive, thorough, sustained and sound study of Comrade Mao Zedong's works. The decision pointed out: The mass activities of studying Comrade Mao Zedong's works suffered very great interference for a time due to the influence of erroneous trends in society and certain inappropriate propaganda. Ideological and political work was also consequently weakened. In order to change this situation, the CCP Committee of the Kunming PLA units calls on all commanders and fighters to study Comrade Mao Zedong's works, apply the stand, viewpoint and method of Mao Zedong Thought to study, analyze and solve new situations and problems that arise in building the PLA units, spontaneously uphold the four basic principles and contribute to speeding up the modernization and regularization of the units. The decision made the following demands on the study activities:

1. The party committees and political organs at all levels must regard the study of Mao Zedong's works as the primary task in doing a good job of ideological and political work. and get a thoroughly good grasp of it. They must formulate practical study plans and measures.

2. Leading cadres at all levels must advance in the front rank, and become models in studying and applying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

3. It is necessary to strengthen specific guidance and assistance.

4. Carry forward the study style of linking theory with reality, closely integrate studying Mao Zedong's works with learning from Lei Feng and the heroes and models and with building socialist spiritual civilization, spontaneously reform world outlook, constantly promote ideological revolutionization and be loyal and contented fighters defending the motherland.

5. Set up typical examples and commend the progressives. We must take the study of Mao Zedong's works as an important content in future assessment of progressives, examination of cadres and party and CYL recruitment.

HEBEI RIBAO URGES RAISING LABOR PRODUCTIVITY

HK260445 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 13 Apr 82 p 2

[Article by Lei Qingsheng [7191 1987 3932] of the provincial labor bureau: "It Is Imperative To Raise Labor Productivity"]

[Text] Rapidly raising labor productivity of the industrial enterprises of our province and bringing the economic results of both investment and existing equipment into full play is an important task in the present enterprise reorganization.

Since 1965, the average annual increase in the output value per worker of the province's industrial enterprises which are under the system of ownership by the whole people and which practice independent business accounting has only been 1.39 percent. The average annual increase in the output value per worker in 1980 was only 0.8 percent higher than in 1979, and that in 1981 was 2.4 percent less than in 1980. This state of affairs must be ended promptly.

There are many reasons for the drop in labor productivity of the province's industrial enterprises last year, but the important reason is that labor organization and the skills of enterprise management are backward. At the end of 1981 the industrial departments throughout the province had 1.422 million permanent workers, an increase of more than 87,700 workers over 1980. It is known to all that labor power and the means of production constitute essential factors of production. Only when labor power is organically integrated with the means of production can they form a practical labor force. In addition, this kind of integration of labor power with the means of production requires the maintenance of both an appropriate quantitative proportion and a certain qualitative relationship. Distributing and using labor power in accordance with this kind of proportional relationship will be able to bring into full play the economic results of the means of production and the positive role of workers in production and constantly raise labor productivity. At present, quite a number of enterprises in the province are basically in a state of "being overstaffed." However, disregarding the needs of production, the departments concerned are still continuing to "squeeze" new staff and workers into the enterprises. On the other hand, many of the new staff and workers who were recruited over the past few years had little schooling and little knowledge and did not receive any special training before they were assigned work. This state of affairs has interfered with the improvement of labor productivity.

To raise labor productivity, it is necessary to start with the improvement of labor organization and the strengthening of the management work of having fixed work quotas and a fixed number of staff. As for those types of production work of an enterprise where volume of work can be measured or checked, fixed work quotas must be drawn up in keeping with the implementation of the economic responsibility system. On the one hand, standards for quantity and quality must be worked out, and on the other, requirements for reducing consumption must also be formulated. If there are already standards promulgated by the ministry and the provincial departments concerned, we must act according to the regulations of the standards. If there are not any standards for fixing quotas, production quotas must be fixed in accordance with the highest level of the enterprise itself or the advanced levels of the same trade. Forcing down fixed quotas is not allowed. As for the staff and workers who cannot be assigned fixed quotas, it is necessary to draw up examination standards for them on the basis of setting up job responsibility systems and putting them on a sound foundation. After an enterprise fixes the number of staff and workers in the light of the orientation, scope and tasks of production, the surplus staff and workers must be put under unified management and arrangement rather than stay in the former workshops and posts.

Another important aspect of raising labor productivity is conducting cultural and technical training and improving the quality of the contingents of staff and workers. Enterprise technical and managerial personnel and cadres at various levels must go through strict training. What is more, it is necessary to provide vocational training for all staff and workers, and particularly for the new workers who have low standards of education and technical skills.

After finishing training and passing examinations, they will then be qualified to take up their new posts and operate the machines independently. Those who fail to pass examinations are not allowed to formally take up their new posts, and their time limits for apprenticeship and achieving proficiency should be extended. They will not become regular workers and their grade will remain the same until they have achieved the knowledge and ability standards they should achieve. In recruiting new workers, it is necessary to ensure quality and practice measures of open recuritment of workers and overall examinations and the principle of giving priority to the best qualified. In recruiting sons and daughters of retired workers, it is also necessary to act according to the requirements of recruiting workers and examine them morally, intellectually and physically. Those who fail to fulfill the requirements must not be recruited to fill their parents' posts. It is still necessary to better dovetail the educational system with the labor employment system and to strengthen the work of preemployment vocational training.

In the course of enterprise reorganization, perfecting the various systems and strengthening work discipline is not only an important link in the building of socialist spiritual civilization, but also an important guarantee for raising labor productivity. The actions and phenomena of violating work discipline must be boldly and forcefully handled. On the basis of reinforced ideological and political work, those deserving criticism must be criticized and those who need to be helped through education must be educated. Serious violators of work discipline must have both economic sanctions and administrative penalties imposed upon them, or even be simply discharged. This will avoid the practice of appeasement, which can result in greater disasters.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI AT UNITED FRONT CONFERENCE

SK250402 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Excerpt] According to our correspondent (Pei Zhimin), the regional CCP committee held a regional united front work conference 13-21 April in Hohhot. Attending the conference were secretaries of league, municipal, banner and county CCP committees, directors of united front work departments of league, municipal, banner and county CCP committees and responsible comrades of departments, committees, offices and bureaus under regional organs, of universities and of major plants, mines and enterprises, totaling over 210 persons. Among them were leading comrades of the regional CCP committee, including Zhou Hui, Wang Duo, Yun Shiying, (Xing Yilun), (Zhou Junyong) and Wang Zhiran, and Chairman of the regional CPPCC committee Kui Bi. Comrade Zhou Hui spoke at the conference. He urged the participants to strengthen study, raise their understanding and improve the region's united front work to a new level.

The participants heard and studied the spirit of the national united front work conference, studied important related speeches of central leading comrades, summed up our region's united front work and discussed and made arrangements for 1982 tasks in the united front work.

Comrade Wang Duo presided over the conference and delivered a speech. When making an initial estimate of our region's united front work, he said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee,party committees and united front work departments at all levels have eliminated lefist errors and done a great deal of work in ending turmoil, restoring order and implementing policies. As a result, the situation in our region's united front work is good and our united front work departments have scored remarkable achievements in work. However, due to the protracted influence of left deviation ideas, some units lack a clear understanding of the significance of the united front work,have a tendency toward factionalism and [words indistinct] and fail to firmly implement policies. This hinders the continuous consolidation and expansion of the patriotic united front.

Comrade Wang Duo said: To build our country into a strong socialist country with a highly developed material and spiritual civilization, it is necessary not only to safeguard and develop a lively,stable and united political situation, but also to unite all forces than can be united and bring into play all positive factors. Only by so doing can we score achievements.

In view of the realities that our region is a minority autonomous area [words indistinct] and most intellectuals at higher and lower levels in our region hail from throughout the motherland to engage in frontier construction, we must conscientiously implement the important instruction of the CCP Central Committee on work in Nei Monggol, implement the party's national policy, strengthen the unity of all nationalities and genuinely establish a brotherly, interdependent and close relationship.

SHANXI RIBAO ON PARTY DISCIPLINE, STATE LAW

HK230418 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 15 Apr 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Party Discipline Cannot Take the Place of State Law"]

[Excerpt] A serious fact is evident from the cases of economic crimes that have been or are now being investigated in our province: Most of the major cases are caused by organizing gangs and collusion between inside and outside and between upper and lower levels, and involve certain state work personnel and even certain responsible cadres. This is a new characteristic, under new historical conditions, of the struggle between capitalist corruption and socialist opposition to corruption. Hence, we must be completely just and impartial in dealing with state cadres who have committed serious economic crimes, no matter who they are, what unit they belong to and what post, high or low, they hold. We cannot allow the slightest exception to the rules, and still less can we appease, indulge, protect and connive with these people. However, the phenomenon of replacing state law with party and government discipline exists in this struggle. When investigating and dealing with certain cadres, especially leading cadres, who have violated the criminal laws, the practice in some places is always to minimize the affair and deal more leniently with them than with ordinary personnel. This is precisely one factor why certain cadres are secure in the knowledge that they have strong backing in engaging in criminal activities. The masses are very unhappy over this inequality before the law. We should take this as a lesson.

To replace state law with party and government discipline is an expression, in the new situation, of the "special legal rights" of feudal society, and is exactly the same as the practice in those days in which an official committed a crime, he could be reduced in rank, stripped of some emoluments, or redeem himself with money. Hence, in the struggle today to combat economic crimes, in order to truly uphold the principle of severity toward state work personnel and ensure that everyone is equal before the law, we must destroy the feudal "special rights" idea that the law does not condemn the nobility.

The party has its party discipline and the state has its state law. We must take the facts and the law as the basis in deciding whether cadres who violate law and discipline should be punished by party or government discipline or by state law. State cadres who break the law in ordinary ways should have their responsibility under party or government discipline investigated in accordance with the circumstances, and legal sanctions, without any replacement of state law by party or government discipline, should be taken against those whose violation of criminal law constitutes a crime.

TIANJIN RIBAO CALLS FOR IMPROVING INDUSTRY

[Report on 14 April TIANJIN RIBAO commentator's article: "The Whole Party Must Mobilize To Grasp Industrial Production"]

[Excerpts] The first quarter of the year has now ended. The second is the key quarter for industrial production. According to the experiences of many years, it is not difficult to fulfill the tasks for the whole year if production is promoted in the second quarter; otherwise, we will be in a passive position throughout the year. The cadres and workers must immediately mobilize to grasp the key battle of industrial production in the first quarter.

1. Correctly evaluate the situation in Tianjin's industrial production. Total value of output in the first quarter was 7.9 percent greater than in the same period last year. That in March showed an 8.1 percent rise over March of last year. However, the economic indices were not fulfilled too well during the quarter. Profit is estimated to be 1.7 percent lower than in the same period last year, with a decline of 3.03 percent in profit turned over to the state. Output plans were not fulfilled well either.

There are many favorable conditions as we look toward the second quarter, but there are also many difficulties. The main ones are that production tasks for certain products are insufficient, there are raw material shortages and the thinking of certain cadres is unsteady. Our passive situation will develop further unless we adopt resolute, decisive and effective measures. Not only will economic returns fail to rise, but the growth rate may also fall. This is a problem to which the cadres, party members and workers throughout the municipality must pay serious attention.

2. The whole party must unify thinking and take economic work, especially industrial production, as the central task. The article says: The first issue in solving the current difficulties is to unify thinking. On the basis of unifying thinking, we should unify our steps and work hard together and strive for victory in industrial production. We must clearly understand that economic construction remains the greatest task and key issue facing the whole party. Tianjin, an industrial base, must get a good grasp of industrial production.

3. Improving economic returns is the focal point of economic work. The article says: Improving economic returns is the focal point of economic work. We must resolutely and rapidly shift economic work onto the track of taking improvement of economic returns as the central task. People's thinking is not totally united on this issue. The main problem is lack of correct understanding of the dialectical relationship between returns and growth rate, and even setting the one against the other, as though if stress is laid on returns, it cannot be laid on growth rate, and if growth rate is wanted, it is impossible to improve returns. This is a onesided viewpoint. We want both returns and growth rate. What we want is a realistic growth rate with good returns, and returns with a relatively high growth rate. The cadres and workers on the industrial front must seriously study Premier Zhao Ziyang's important speech at the national industry and communications work conference.

4. Do a good job in straightening out the enterprises. The article says: Straightening out the enterprises is one of the central tasks on the industrial front. The municipal authorities have already made arrangements for this work. We must hurry to implement these according to plan. Straightening out the enterprises must be combined with inspecting financial and economic discipline and with combating economic crimes. We must fully understand the gravity, harmfulness and danger of economic crimes and spontaneously struggle against the criminal elements in the economic field.

We must pay great attention to rectifying and building the leadership groups while straightening out the enterprises. We must resolutely purge from the leadership groups at all levels the people of three categories -- those who rose to power by following Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and company and rebelling; people with gravely factionalist thinking, beaters, smashers and looters; and people who boycott the line, principles and policies laid down since the third plenary session -- so as to ensure the political and organizational purity of the leadership groups.

5. Brace revolutionary spirit and improve work style. The article says in conclusion: Bracing revolutionary spirit is an extremely important issue at present, and this is the case for leading cadres in particular. Streamlining the bureaucracy and reforming the systems constitute the central authorities' strategic plan, which is of very great significance. We resolutely support the central authorities' policy decision and profoundly understand its importance. We are also carrying out preparations in a planned way in accordance with the central arrangements. The comrades on the industrial front and in all trades and sectors must brace their revolutionary spirit. If we display still greater drive this year, Tianjin's industrial production will certainly score still greater success than last year.

BUSH HAS WIDE-RANGING TALKS WITH SUZUKI

[Text] Tokyo, April 24 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki met with U.S. Vice-President George Bush at his official residence this morning and stressed that the stabilitty of the Sino-U.S. relations is important to peace and stability in Asia, according to Japanese local press reports. The two leaders had a 90-minute talk on world issues and bilateral relations.

Suzuki said that the Japan-U.S. relations have entered a mature stage, which can find expression in the joint statement signed at last year's summit meeting in which the relations of alliance are mentioned. It is necessary for the West to maintain unity and coordination in face of a volatile international situation. It is all the more necessary for Japanese and U.S. top leaders to exchange views, he added. Bush agreed to Suzuki's opinion in this respect.

Referring to the strained Sino-U.S. relations over the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, Suzuki noted that the continued stability of the Sino-U.S. relations is important to peace and stability in Asia. He expressed the hope that China and the U.S. will return to the starting point of normalization of relations and promote mutual understanding.

Bush justified U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. While claiming the U.S. attaches importance to Sino-U.S. relations and hopes to keep the relations stable, Bush asserted that the U.S. must sell weapons to Taiwn in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act though the U.S. has no intention to provide Taiwan with new types of fighters.

In reply to questions on the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan at a news conference this evening, Bush explained repeatedly that the Reagan administration has not changed its policy towards China and is "not pursuing a two-China policy." Sino-U.S. relations are important to U.S. national interests, he said.

Bush arrived in Japan yesterday and will go to South Korea tomorrow.

XINHUA VIEWS U.S. ACTION AFTER SINAI WITHDRAWAL

["Commentary: What Will U.S. Do in Mideast After Sinai Withdrawal? -- by Correspondent Zhou Zexin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, April 26 (XINHUA) -- How the situation in the Middle East will evolve and what action the United States will take in this region after Israeli troops total withdrawal from the Sinai has become the focus of attention of the world. It may be predicted that so long as its basic policy of partiality towards Israel remains unchanged, the United States is unlikely to push the process of the Camp David agreement as it wishes and its Middle East strategy will again be riddled with numerous contradictions.

The Israeli pullout does not mean settlement of the Middle East problem. U.S. officials have disclosed that after the Israeli withdrawal, the United States plans to have Egyptian-Israeli negotiations on the Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip resumed in June; but most observers here assume a wait-and-see attitude towards the autonomy talks, as they are skeptical about the efficacy of the present-day U.S. policy in settling the Middle East problem.

The crux of the Middle East problem lies in the Palestinian issue. All efforts to seek peace in this region should be based on respect for the national interest of the Arab people and recognition of the Palestinian people's national rights. The U.S. had so far failed to make any fundamental change in its stand on that key problem. Though the Reagan administration no longer labels the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) as a "terrorist organization" and has even made clear that the U.S. will eventually enter into negotiations with the PLO on the condition that it recognize Israel's right to existence. However, so far the U.S. has refused to make direct contacts with the PLO and continued to exclude the Palestinians and their representatives from the negotiations on Palestine's autonomy, a matter of vital importance to them. Such a policy will never lead to a fair, reasonable and peaceful settlement acceptable to the Arab nations.

The Camp David agreement only envisages "full autonomy" for Palestinians living in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Egypt and Israel have different interpretations to autonomy, with Egypt stressing "national entity" and, eventually, a Palestine state, and Israel insisting on "limited autonomy," implying perpetual occupation of the West Bank and Gaza in the name of "autonomy." For this reason, Egyptian-Israeli negotiations on Palestine autonomy which started 30 months ago, are still deadlocked today. Washington has all along sided with Israel, trying to force Egypt to make concessions. And there are no signs that the United States will ever put pressure on Israel. Under such circumstances, how can these negotiations make any headway?

In addition to ignoring the rights of the Palestine people on this crucial issue, the United States has repeatedly connived at Israeli aggressions. In one year's time or so, Israel had virtually annexed Jerusalem, bombed Iraq's nuclear installations, annexed Syria's Golan Heights and repeatedly attacked Lebanon, killing innocent Arab residents there. Washington sometimes expressed "regret" at these savage acts or even voiced "condemnation." But it continued to provide Israel with military assistance, and dared not to explicitly criticize Israel for its recent air raids on Lebanon. The U.S. attitude can only encourage Israeli aggression and expansion and place more obstacles in the way to a settlement of Arab-Israel conflicts.

The United States, while seeking "strategic consensus" with Middle East countries, is sticking to its policy of tilting towards Israel. This will only increase its contradictions with Arab states and reduce its strategy of allying with the Arabs against Moscow to empty talk.

Speculation is rife about the prospects for peace in the Mid-East and the Reagan administration's Middle East policy following the Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai. Many are worried about the adverse effect of Israel's expansionist moves over the U.S. strategic interests in the region. Many are afraid that if its expansionist ambitions are not checked, Israel will annex the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and continue to threaten its neighbouring countires with force of arms after its withdrawal from the Sinai. A U.S. newspaper asked: "Is this state of affairs the intended result of Camp David and our peace efforts? Should we be silent in a situation so blatantly unfair?"

Obviously it is high time for the Reagan administration to make a new option in the Middle East. People are watching what move it would take next.

FURTHER VIEWS ON NGUYEN CO THACH VISIT TO EUROPE

Radio Commentary

OW250302 Beijing in Mandarin to Southeast Asia 0900 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Commentator (Ya Ming): "Nguyen Co Thach's Detente Rhetoric Is Not Worth a Penny"]

[Text] During his recent visit to Europe, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach offered a gesture of detente to improve his country's image in the international arena. He babbled that Vietnam would be ready to withdraw all of its troops from Kampuchea if China no longer posed a threat to that region. The meaning behind his statement is quite clear, that is, China should be held responsible for the fact that the Vietnamese troops have not withdrawn from Kampuchea.

Nguyen Co Thach harped on the shopworn theme of the so-called Chinese threat to explain Vietnam's military occupation of Kampuchea. While his motive was vicious, the trick he used was too clumsy. China has consistently followed the five principles of peaceful coexistence; it has never sought hegemony or spheres of influence. It has no military base abroad, nor has it stationed a single soldier on foreign soil. It is a sheer lie to say that China is posing a threat to another country. Even the Vietnamese authorities themselves do not truly believe in a Chinese threat to Vietnam. Otherwise, they would not have moved the 200,000 troops from Vietnam, which borders China, to Kampuchea, which is far from Chinese territory. Even more groundless is the allegation that China is presenting a threat to Kampuchea. Quite clearly, it is Vietnam itself that has committed armed aggression against Democratic Kampuchea, an independent country, and has fostered a puppet regime there. Because of this, it has been condemned by the United Nations and international public opinion. Now, Nguyen Co Thach totally disregards this fact.

China's support for Kampuchea's war of resistance against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation is based on international morality and is an act of justice, just as was its previous support for Vietnam's war against U.S. aggression and for national salvation. The Vietnamese authorities are standing facts on their heads by describing China's support for the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation as a threat to Kampuchea. Could China's previous support for Vietnam in its anti-U.S. and national salvation struggle have been a threat to Vietnam?

There is an essential difference between supporting a victim of aggression and opposing aggressors on the one hand and threatening another country in the interest of one's own country on the other. In supporting the Kampuchean people's sturggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation, China has never thought of doing anything for its own interests. It has no intention of turning Kampuchea into a sphere of Chinese influence. Instead, the Chinese Government has repeatedly and unequivocally expressed that, after the complete withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, China will be willing to join the other countries concerned, Vietnam included, in making an international pledge to neither invade Kampuchean territory nor use Kampuchean territory to encroach upon the independence and sovereignty of other countries in the region or intervene in Kampuchea's internal affairs in any way. China's stand is open and aboveboard. Disregarding the objective facts and China's consistent stand, Nguyen Co Thach fabricated the so-called Chinese threat in an attempt to defend Vietnam's refusal to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea; however, all that he did was in vain. While Nguyen Co Thach was visiting Europe, public opinion in all the countries he visited pointed out that Vietnam must comply with the UN General Assembly resolution to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. This was a loud and clear reply to Nguyen Co Thach.

During his visit to Europe, Nguyen Co Thach also stated that Vietnam is prepared to discuss with China the improvement of relations between the two countries. We would, of course, welcome such a suggestion if the Vietnamese authorities were really sincere. However, facts have proved that they have no sincerity at all. With Soviet support, Vietnam has committed frequent provocations against China along the Sino-SRV border, sent out gunboats to sink or damage Chinese fishing boats on the high seas, continued its anti-China activities and made groundless attacks on China. Does this mean that they are improving Sino-Vietnamese relations? Moreover, the Vietnamese authorities pursue regional hegemonism, persist in the armed occupation of Kampuchea and in controlling Laos and provide the air and naval bases in Danang, Cam Ranh Bay and (?Kompong Som) for use by the Soviet Union, thereby introducing the presence of Soviet Armed Forces into Indochina and Southeast Asia and threatening the safety of China and the Southeast Asian region. In so doing, are they creating favorable conditions for improving the Sino-Vietnamese relations?

While Nguyen Co Thach was visiting Europe, he assumed a pitiable posture in order to induce people's sympathy for Vietnam and seek political and economic advantages. His purpose in doing this was to extricate Vietnam from its isolation internationally and to ease its economic difficulties resulting from its aggression against Kampuchea. However, lies can in no way cover up facts. As long as the Vietnamese authorities refuse to give up their regional hegemonism and anti-China strategy, Nguyen Co Thach's rhetoric about detente will have no value at all.

RENMIN RIBAO Article

["International Jottings" by Bo Yong [3134 8673]: "He Wants Face"]

[Text] As soon as the Fifth Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party had concluded, Nguyen Co Thach flew to Europe in a hurry. What is the purpose of his trip? People can easily draw a conclusion from Le Duan's recent sorrowful remarks on Vietnam's economy: The main purpose of Nguyen Co Thach's visit to Europe is to beg for aid.

However, despite his obvious purpose of begging for foreign aid, Nguyen Co Thach said time and again, whether in France, Sweden and West Germany or during his visit to the EEC, that he had "come to Europe to visit friends" and "not as a beggar." Vietnam has gone in for the policy of military aggression and expansion in the past few years. As a result, its foreign exchange has been used up and it is heavily in debt. Yet the Vietnamese foreign minister put on lofty airs and seemed to say that Vietnam is not exhausted, has ample financial resources and does not need to look to others for help. "Visiting friends" is naturally a very gratifying thing to do. However, a saying goes: One does not consider saving one's face when one is hungry. To meet the Hanoi administration's urgent need, the foreign minister eventually stated that he was "willing to present a detailed list of many new items of goods needed," thereby showing the cloven hoof.

He says that he is not a beggar. Yet he has in his pocket a detailed list of goods needed. He looks a bit different from a beggar in the street, but he is essentially a beggar. He is at most a beggar who wants face.

HUANG HUA, OTHER LEADERS MEET WITH REWI ALLEY

OW211518 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 21 (XINHUA) -- A meeting celebrating the 55th anniversary of the arrival in China of Rewi Alley, an old friend of the Chinese people, was held here this afternoon under ths sponsorship of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries.

As 85-year-old Alley, in the company of Wang Bingnan, president of the association, stepped into the meeting hall, over 200 people from all walks of life greeted him with a standing ovation.

In his speech, Wang Bingnan extended his high regards and warm congratulations to Alley. He said: "For over half a century, Comrade Alley has lived and fought together with the Chinese people sharing their weal and woe. His contributions to the Chinese revolution and construction have been at once tremendous, many-sided and protracted." He paid tribute to Comrade Alley for the profound friendship he has fostered with the Chinese people in the past fifty years and more. Wang Bingnan briefed those present on Alley's deeds during China's revolutionary struggle and construction. He said: "During the early period of the Chinese revolution, Alley took risks and tried various ways to get urgently needed medical supplies and telecommunication equipment into the Red Army base areas in Jiangxi Province. He provided constant protection and assistance for our party's underground work. After the outbreak of the war of resistance against Japanese aggression, he started, together with Edgar Snow and Nym Wales, the Gong Ho (Indusco) movement and made his share of contributions to the support of the Eighth Route Army and the New Fourth Army and to the victory of the anti-Japanese war. After liberation, Comrade Alley actively participated in the movement of opposing wars of aggression and safeguarding world peace. At the same time he became highly involved in writing. Up to 1982, he had 63 books and translated works on Chinese achievements to his credit, which were published in China and abroad," he said.

Wang Bingnan also praised Alley for his high ideological consciousness, deep insight, courage, tenacity, and a constant urge to explore truth and daring to get things done. He said: "Comrade Alley deserves to be called a fine sone of the New Zealand people."

Wang Bingnan wished Alley good health and a long life and said he hoped he would live for at least 20 more years, and see with his own eyes the realization of his ardent hope of a lifetime.

Alley, in high spirits, said at the meeting: "It has been my privilege to have lived and worked in this land over the years, and to have been able to learn much about it, building up the realization that as the people of China go on working together to maintain their advance, almost everything is possible for them. The success of the Chinese revolution as it enters its new stages, is filled with hope for all peoples. A billion people making an old land flower again, millions of children growing up and learning the lessons of their revolution against all that had held China down! The 55 years in China have brought me much happiness and the thrill of watching many dreams come true," he said.

At the meeting, the host association presented to Alley an inscription reading "the pines and cypresses are evergreen," written by Chu Tunan, vice-president of the association. The documentary film "Chinese People's Friend Rewi Alley" was shown at the meeting. Attending today's meeting were Zhang Wenjin, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Chu Tunan and Hou Tong, vice-presidents of the host association; Zhang Guangnian, vice-chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association; Alley's close friend Dr. Ma Haide, and his relatives.

Also present were Edward Hill, chairman of the Australian Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist), and Mrs. Hill, and New Zealand Ambassador to China Francis Anthony Small and Mrs. Small.

Prior to the meeting, Liao Chengzhi, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, and Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs, met with Rewi Alley.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES UNITY, VICTORY OF ARAB PEOPLE

[Commentator's article: "Strengthen Unity and Strive for New Victories"]

[Text] After an arduous struggle of 15 years, Egypt has finally regained its territorial sovereignty over the Sinai Peninsula. Starting yesterday, the Egyptian flag has again been fluttering over Sinai. This is an important result of the persistent struggle of the Egyptian people.

With Egypt's recovery of the Sinai Peninsula, new changes will occur in the Middle East situation. However, the Palestinian issue, which is the core of the Middle East issue, has not yet been settled. The road to realizing peace in the Middle East area is still long and tortuous. Israeli expansionists are still occupying a vast expanse of Arab territory. They are hostile to the PLO and refuse to recognize the national rights of the Palestinian people. Moreover, the Begin administration has stepped up the annexation of the occupied territory. It has openly annexed East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights. It has also schemed to "administer" the West Bank of the Jordan and the Gaza Strip "with civil officials" in order to deprive the Palestinian people of their national right and to occupay these places forever. Several days ago, Israeli airplanes savagely bombed Lebanon. This is another new crime committed by the Begin administration. These aggressive acts of Israel have not only aroused the world's public indignation but have also reminded us again that checking Israel's aggression and justly and reasonably setting the Palestinian issue remain urgent tasks in realizing peace in the Middle East.

An important reason why the Israeli expansionists have dared to carry out aggression and expansion for a long period is the acute contention of the two superpowers for their own strategic interests in the Middle East and the U.S.' shielding and support of the Israeli expansionists. To date, the U.S. Government has refused to recognize the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people -- the PLO. Given its stand on the issue and repeated use of the veto power in the UN Security Council to protect Israel from condemnation and sanctions, the United States is undoubtedly conniving at Israel's aggression and expansion. It is only natural that this U.S. stand is denounced by Arab countries and world public opinion.

Strengthening the unity of the Arab world and acting in unison against its enemy are the fundamental conditions for triumph over Israel's aggression and expansion. At present, both Egypt and other Arab countries have the desire to eliminate differences and to restore unity. This is something gratifying. The Chinese people, who have all along sympathized with and supported the must struggle of the Palestinian people and the Arab people, sincerely hope that the Arab countries can eliminate differences and strengthen unity. We believe that so long as the Arab people uphold unity, strive to win extensive international support, dare to struggle and know how to struggle, they will certainly be able to recover all the occupied territory, realize the national right of self-determination of the Palestinian people and finally win victory.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS ISRAELI BOMBING OF LEBANON

[Short commentary: "Bombing Cannot Scare the Palestinian People"]

[Text] On the afternoon of 24 April, Israel dispatched 60 aircraft to carry out massive and barbaric raids on PLO bases in the southern outskirts of Beirut, capital of Lebanon, and southern Lebanon. The raids caused tremendous loss of life and property. This is yet another serious incident in the series of provocations recently carried out by the Begin regime. This deliberate provocation by the Begin regime not only violates Lebanon's territorial sovereignty but also wrecks the ceasefire agreement reached by Israel and Lebanon last July. This shows yet again that there is not the slightest change in the Israeli expansionists' stubborn stand of hostility to the Arab people.

While having no alternative but to withdraw from the Sinai Peninsula, Israel intensified its annexation of another portion of occupied Arab territory. Following its brazen annexation of east Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, it forcibly imposed so-called civilian administration in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in a bid to write off at one stroke the Palestinian people's national rights by means of an autonomy plan "for people, not for land." However, the Israeli schemes were strongly condemned by the Arab people and stubbornly resisted by the people in the occupied territories. The Begin authorities then proceeded to savagely suppress the peaceful residents of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip on the one hand while on the other scheming large-scale airraids on the bases of the PLO -- the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people -- reckoning that by this means they should weaken the Palestinian people's struggle to recover their land. However, as in the past, this scheme of the Begin authorities has been unable to and never will be able to succeed.

The Palestine issue -- the core of the Middle East problem -- becomes still more prominent as Egypt gradually resumes full sovereignty over the Sinai Peninsula. History has proven that this problem can certainly not be solved by armed conquest. A lasting peace in the Middle East can only be built by recognizing and restoring the national self-determination rights of the Palestinian people. Together with all peace-loving peoples who uphold justice, the Chinese people resolutely stand on the side of the Palestinian people and the Arab people, strongly condemn Israeli war provocations, and will strive together to curb Israeli aggression.

[Text] Beijing, April 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Democratic People's Republic of Algeria and secretary-general of the Party of the National Liberation Front, held talks here this morning.

Prior to the talks, Zhao Ziyang exchanged views on international issues of common interest with Chadli alone.

It was learned that the talks proceeded in a sincere and friendly atmosphere. The two sides expressed the hope that they would further strengthen cooperation between their two countries. Zhao Ziyang said: "There exist very good relations between China and Algeria. On this base, we will make common efforts to raise such relations to a higher level. It is a persistent policy of the Chinese Government to develop Sino-Algerian friendly relations which have a solid foundation," the premier said.

Zhao Ziyang said: "Sino-Algerian cooperation will exert an important influence on the promotion of cooperation between developing countries, that is, South-South cooperation. It will also play an active role in promoting world-wide discussions. Cooperation between our two countries in various forms will become an example for South-South cooperation." He said he hoped that the two countries would have wide exchanges and cooperation in the field of economy, technology and trade according to their respective need.

President Chadli said: "Cooperation between Algeria and China will expand in all fields. Our friendly relations and cooperation have been established on the basis of political mutual trust, and conform to the interests of the two peoples. This applies not only to economic and trade relations, but also to cooperation in strategy. Algeria treasures its independence won after its struggle; China also treasures its own independence. This is a basis for expanding cooperation between our two countries," Chadli said.

Taking part in the talks on the Algerian side were Mohamed Ben Yahia, minister of foreign affairs; Slimane Hoffmann, president of the commission for external relations of the Party of the National Liberation Front; Saleh Goudjil, minister of transportation and fisheries; Abdelhamid Brahimi, minister of planning and territorial management; Colonel Khalid Nezzar, military regional chief; Mohamed Lemkami, vice-president of the National People's Assembly; and Ali Abdelaoui, Algerian ambassador to China.

Taking part in the talks on the Chinese side were Gu Mu, vice-premier of the State Council; Huang Hua, vice-premier and minister of foreign affairs; Liu Jianzhang, minister of railways; He Ying, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Liu Huaqing, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Li Shuzheng, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the Communist Party of China; Chen Xian, vice-minister of the State Planning Commission; Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade; and Xu Ming, Chinese ambassador to Algeria.

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, Apr 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a grand banquet in the Great Hall of the People this evening to welcome Algerian President and Secretary-General of the Party of the National Liberation Front Chadli Bendjedid and other Algerian guests.

Prior to the banquet, Chadli, accompanied by Premier Zhao, met leaders of various government organizations.

Zhao Ziyang praised the Algerian people's long and arduous struggle for national independence and for the success of their national liberation. "Since its independence, Algeria has firmly maintained its independence, relying on its own efforts to overcome difficulties and to build the country. In this, the nation has achieved remarkable success," he said.

"Algeria has insisted on its opposition to imperialism and colonialism, and adherence to a nonalignment policy. It has been active in international affairs, safeguarding the rights and interests of the developing countries, and winning acclaim from the peace-loving countries and people all over the world," he said.

Zhao Ziyang said China and Algeria are friendly countries and their people have a profound friendship, forged early during Algeria's liberation. "This friendship has stood up over war of time. [XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1625 GMT on 26 April carries a similar report on Premier Zhao's banquet for the Algerian president. The XINHUA Domestic Service version reads...has stood the test of time.] Our countries share identical or similar views on many important international issues," he said. "Our people enjoy mutual trust and support, and have conducted sincere and effective cooperation across a wide range. The Chinese people will never forget, and will always be grateful to the Algerian Government and people for their consistent efforts to uphold justice in the United Nations and in its subordinate organizations. We will always remember their efforts to restore China's legitimate seat in the U.N."

He expressed his belief that Chadli's visit will strengthen relations between the two countries.

Referring to the international situation, Zhao Ziyang said that after World War II the Asian, African and Latin American countries won their independence one after another. The rise of the Third World was an important development internationally.

But these countries he said, have been facing economic difficulties and are still trapped by unequal and unjust international economic relations. All these, he said, have directly affected their consolidation of political independence. Algeria has made outstanding contributions to the effort to change this unreasonable situation. "For these we express our appreciation and support to Algeria," Zhao Ziyang said. "The Chinese Government and people will make common efforts with Algeria and other Third-World countries and people for the transformation of the old international economic order."

He said so long as Third-World countries strengthen their ties, conduct effective South-South cooperation and push for global negotiations, the strategic goal of establishing a new international economic order will be realized step by step.

Referring to the Middle-East issue, Zhao Ziyang said "At present the world is closely following the development of the situation. After annexing Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, the Begin government has unleashed large-scale repression on the West Bank, uttered war threats against Lebanon and, again in violation of the cease-fire agreement, bombed the suburbs of Beirut and the nation's coastal areas. This has caused heavy losses to both the Lebanese and Palestinians. The Chinese Government and people condemn the Israeli aggression and expansionism, and support the Palestinian and Arab peoples in their struggle to recover lost territories and national rights." [XINHUA Domestic Service renders the preceding sentence as: "The Chinese Government and people strongly condemned the Israeli aggression and expansionism, and will, as always, resolutely support the Palestinian and Arab peoples in their just struggle to recover lost territories and national rights."]

He hoped the Arab countries would unite in a common struggle against the enemy so as to bring a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle-East question at an early date.

Chadli said the friendship between the two peoples was neither circumstantial nor determined by subjective and temporary factors. "This friendship arose during the bitter struggle for freedom and dignity by our peoples," he said, "and in the sacrifices made for the establishment of a world of progress and justice. We have not forgotten that China was among the first nations to provide Algeria with material, military aid, and political and moral support," he said.

"Our cooperation has developed on such a solid historical basis and in a spirit of mutual understanding, strengthened by common aspirations for promotion of our relations," he said.

"Algeria and China have found new channels for bilateral cooperation and are willing to make common efforts for a new wholesome internationalcooperation through consolidation of their relations," the Algerian president said.

Chadli said he is extremely worried about the sustained tension in the world. "The state of affairs proves everyday that all international relations have been affected," he said. "The world has fallen into a state of crisis. The progress of national liberation has been held up, spheres of influence expanded, foreign policies of interference are growing and there are those resorting to force, or threatening to, and trying to restore its bases in foreign countries. Africa, Asia and Latin America have always been a coveted target, taking a high priority in the world strategy of these who would do their utmost to deny people's rights of self-determination in an attempt to control their natural resources forever," he said.

Chadli said Third-World countries will not agree to deprive themselves of their rights and mastery of their own destiny. "For a long time," he said, "the people of the Third World have been excluded from the historical stage. They were bound, oppressed and even pushed to shed their own national characteristics.

"However," he said, "they will no longer allow themselves to be ordered about by others nor yield to power politics."

Chadli stressed the determination of people of the Third World to conduct dialogues on an equal footing and to establish a new international order on the basis of promotion of democratic relations among countries.

He said the policy of nonalignment is a strict one, calling for unswerving faith to its basic principles. Without these principles there will be no freedom, safety or peace.

Referring to the Middle-East issue, Chadli said people have a responsibility to support the Palestinian people. They are waging a struggle under the leadership of their sole legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"Everyone should be committed to putting an end to the Zionist policies of aggression and annexation," he said.

Chadli praised China's progress in national construction. "The Chinese people are working hard to build a prosperous and modern socialist country, and have made great achievements in national development. Algeria, which regards vigorous economic development as its real creed, rejoices to see this," he said.

He said he believed his visit will strengthen Algeria-China relations and will contribute greatly to the mutual trust and friendship between the two countries.

The banquet was permeated with the friendly feelings of Chinese and Algerian people.

Attending the banquet were Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Gu Mu, vice-premier of the State Council; Liu Jianzhang, minister of railways; Bai Shouyi, member of the National People's Congress Standing Committee; Zeng Tao, deputy secretary-general of the N.P.C. Standing Committee; Peng Dixian, member of the Standing Committee of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; He Ying, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Xu Ming, Chinese ambassador to Algeria, and other government leaders.

Also on hand was Ali Abdelaoui, Algerian ambassador to China.

This afternoon, Chadli visited the Beijing No. 2 cotton mill with Wang Xiaoyi, vice-mayor of Beijing.

Restructuring Completed

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (XINHUA) — Premier Zhao Ziyang announced at the plenary meeting of the 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee this afternoon that restructuring of the ministries and commissions under the State Council has been completed. In the "explanation of the progress in streamlining the State Council and the three proposals," Zhao Ziyang said: Since the close of the 22d Session of the 5th NCP Standing Committee, which opened in late February, we have proceeded in an all-round way with streamlining ministries and commissions under the State Council and have made new progress. Throughout this busy period, the work of restructuring the ministries and commissions under the State Council has been completed, and choice of people for leadership posts has been made. In those ministries and commissions where the work has been done quickly, departments and bureaus have been streamlined and new leading personnel appointed. In other ministries and commissions, the work of streamlining departments and bureaus and appointing their leading personnel is expected to be generally completed by the end of May. On the whole, the work has progressed smoothly.

The 22d Session of the 5th NCP Standing Committee had already approved the proposal for reducing the number of vice premiers and setting up the posts of state councillors and for the establishment of a standing committee, consisting of the premier, vice premiers, state councillors and a secretary general, as a collective leading body in the State Council to take care of its routine work. At today's meeting, Zhao Ziyang submitted the nominations for vice premiers, state councillors and secretary general of the State Council and asked for approval of their appointment.

Zhao Ziyang said that, after streamlining, the 52 former ministries and commissions under the State Council would be reduced to 41. He put forward a plan for reforming the ministries and commissions of the State Council and a proposal on the appointment of leading members to some ministries and commissions.

Zhao Ziyang added: Statistics for 38 ministries and commissions show that, after streamlining and personnel changes, there are 167 ministers and vice ministers, excluding those holding concurrent posts. This is 338 less than the original number of 505, or a cut of 67 percent. Their average age is 58, or 6 years younger than previously. Cadres with a college education account for 52 percent of the total, against 37 percent previously. According to statistics covering 28 ministries and commissions, there are 488 departments and bureaus under them, compared with the previous 720, or a cut of 32 percent. They now have 1,398 departmental directors and bureau heads as against 2,450 previously, a cut of 43 percent. Their average age is now 54 as against 59 previously. The cadres with a college education account for 49 percent of the total, compared with 36 previously.

Further Tasks Explained

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (XINHUA) -- In his "explanations of the progress in streamlining the State Council and the three proposals" submitted to the 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee, Premier Zhao Ziyang called for continued efforts to do four tasks after the restructuring of the State Council.

He said: At the first step of streamlining the government structure, we have smoothly completed the restructuring of the ministries and commissions under the State Council and have formed new leading bodies for them, achieving decisive success in this work. However, in terms of the ultimate goal of streamlining the government structure, that is, improving the style of work and raising work efficiency, what we have done is just a beginning. For this reason we have to make continued efforts to do our work well in the revolutionary spirit.

The four tasks set up by Zhao Ziyang are:

1. The scope of functions and responsibilities of all ministries and commissions must be clearly defined. What their tasks are and how to fulfill these tasks must be made clear. Leading cadres of all ministries and commissions must heighten their spirits, boldly shoulder responsibilities and make a serious effort to do well within the scope of their functions and powers. Ministries should take the initiative to work independently and in a responsible manner to settle the questions that they can settle themselves. In no way should they ask instructions from the State Council in dealing with everything. Moreover, they should give more authority and greater responsibility, as appropriate, to the enterprises and institutions under them rather than taking over what the latter should do. Only in this way can the bureaucratic style of work and routine attitude be overcome and work efficiency be raised. Problems on which there has long been a lack of coordination among the departments concerned and for which responsibilities have been thrown around must be brought to the conference table and seriously discussed. Results achieved through discussions must be stated in explicit terms, recorded in files and implemented seriously. A regular meeting system should be established to settle issues requiring joint discussion by ministries and commissions. Regulations and rules, including those governing the division and system of work within ministries or commissions, regulations for the staff of the State Council, and work discipline should be formulated as soon as possible. All personnel, particularly leading cadres, should fully display their initiative and boldly take up the tasks which are in the interest of the people and the situation as a whole.

2. Conscientious work must be done for the settlement of veteran cadres. Previously, the State Council made regulations on the retirement of cadres. Recently it has worked out specific regulations for veteran cadres to leave their work posts for convalescenes. We should carry out these regulations in a serious manner and let the cadres retire or leave their work posts as they should; in other words,we should make this a regular system. As for the veteran cadres who have withdrawn to the second line of work, we should pay attention to giving full play to their role. This should be done on the basis of the needs of the work and their own situation; that is, we should seek truth from facts instead of creating work slots simply for the purpose of providing jobs for these cadres. While giving play to the role of the veteran cadres on the second line of work, we should give the new leading bodies a free hand in their work and let them shoulder responsibilities.

3. Close attention must be paid to the rotational training of cadres. This is a matter of great strategic significance for increasing intellectual investment, accumulating strength and preparing for development. One of the important aims of the current restructuring of the administration is to send large numbers of cadres to study in a planned way. Only by doing so can we enhance the quality of our cadre force to meet the requirements of the modernization program. From now on cadres' educational records and how well they do in vocational and technical studies will be used as important grounds for their evaluation and an important basis for appointments and promotions. As a principle, the various ministries and commissions should be responsible for the rotational training of their own cadres, and training should be closely linked with the work and business of each branch and department.

4. It is imperative to make sure that the task of reducing the staff of the State Council is carried out completely. An overall personnel ceiling has been set but it does not define the number of staff members. This, however, does not mean there is no limit to the size of the staff. Efforts must be made to achieve the target of reducing the entire staff of the State Council by about one third, and the staff ceiling should be applied to each specific unit. The reduction of staff must be real. Deception and falsification are absolutely impermissible. From now on, the addition of new staff members by any ministry or commission must be approved by the State Council, and no new staff members can be added without authorization or by means of disguised forms. Cadres transferred on a loan basis in the past, except for those to be included in the staff of the current organization for real work needs, should all be sent back to their original units.

Zhao Ziyang said: Our task is heavy and we have much work to do. If we fail to work well, not only will it be difficult to consolidate the results already achieved in restructuring the administration, but we may also find ourselves just one step short of success. We must achieve marked results in this area in 1982. He said: The current restructuring of the administrations serves as and should be an important part of the work to reform the economic structure. The restructuring of the administration and the reform of the entire economic structure, together with dealing blows at criminal activities in the economic field, building a socialist spiritual civilization and the question of rectifying the party work style repeatedly stressed by the CCP Central Committee, are four interrelated tasks of fundamental importance, an important guarantee for adherence to the four fundamental principles and the realization of the four modernizations. We must do well in the current restructuring of the administration from start to finish and achieve the expected goals.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS EMULATING ADVANCED INDIVIDUALS

[Commentator's article: "Create a Social Atmosphere of Learning From the Advanced"]

[Text] Creating an atmosphere of learning from the advanced by emulating the advanced individuals and regarding them as teachers is a matter of prime importance, which is related to the building of the socialist material and spiritual civilization and also has far-reaching significance in pushing all our work forward and improving the party's work style and the social mood.

Historical experiences tell us that in every stage of social development there must be a number of advanced elements, who are forerunners of the times, embodying the spirit of the era. People vie with each other to learn from the advanced so that a social atmosphere can be created for learning from and emulating them. This is a sign of vigor and prosperity of a country and a nation. Today, while striving for the realization of our lofty goal of socialist modernization, we too need large numbers of advanced elements who play their roles as vanguards, backbones and bridges among the broad masses of people so as to expedite the progress of building the four modernizations.

An atmosphere of learning from and emulating the advanced is now taking shape throughout our country. Advanced models are being respected more and more and their exemplary ideas and experiences are being spread far and wide. This is a heartening tendency. However, in a number of places and units there still exist the unhealthy tendencies of isolating and dealing blows at the advanced elements. This is an obstacle to the progress of developing the atmosphere for emulating and catching up with the advanced elements. One's approach to the issue of emulating and catching up with the advanced is not only a question which involves the character of the advanced elements, but a question which is related to creating a certain kind of social atmosphere, and has a direct bearing on promoting or obstructing the progress of building socialist modernization. Therefore, we must do more complete and painstaking work to stop the unhealthy tendencies of isolating and dealing blows at the advanced models and to clear away all sorts of prejudice against them. We must make the broad masses of people understand that the advanced people's ideas and behavior represent the orientation of the progress of history, and they are in conformity with the fundamental interests of the people. Their contributions bring benefit to the whole society and every one of its members. Gossiping about and slandering the advanced elements and being jealous of them shows a lack of proletarian consciousness and self-deception.

The advanced elements should be observed and treated properly and no excessive demands should be put on them. This will help to better foster the advanced and also fill people with confidence in emulating and catching up with them. Some comrades put too many demands on the advanced elements, thinking that since they are progressive they must be perfect in all ways without having any shortcomings. Such a harsh demand will make the advanced "feel embarrassed" and also make other comrades feel that they are too far behind to catch up. This does not help to create an atmosphere of emulating and catching up with the advanced people. As the saying goes, each has his own strength and weaknesses. The advanced elements should not be considered "perfect in every way." They do something outstanding in their posts, they manifest the high consciousness of vanguards and they show high responsibility for the socialist cause. All this must be welcomed by all of us. We must emulate these fine deeds and their examplary ideas and deeds must be spread widely. Thus, a social atmosphere will be created for taking pride in emulating the advanced people.

RENMIN RIBAO PRAISES 'PENG DEHUAI'S ACCOUNT'

HK270658 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Apr 82 p 8

[Article by Zhang Baolin [91728 1405 2651]: "Thoughts Induced by Reading 'Peng Dehuai's Account'"]

[Text] After reading "Peng Dehuai's Account," it was as if I had skimmed through the history of struggle of the Chinese Workers' and Peasants' Red Army and I felt the fiery, passionate heart of a genuine communist.

Closing the book, I am lost in admiration and reverence for him and yet cannot help feeling some anguish because this book about a soldier in battle was compiled chiefly by rearranging the several "confession statements" written by Old Chief Peng when he was in prison!

A great number of people of outstanding talent have emerged in the history of struggle of the CCP in the past six decades and more! However, many of the giants who passed away left behind for us their ideas and great achievements but little or no records written by them about their lives. What a huge, irretrievable loss this is to the history of our party, our army and the modern revolution.

Most of the senior leaders of our party and state are still shouldering heavy and complicated routine duties so that they do not have time to recollect the events of the past. The old comrades are usually very humble like General Feng Yi of the Eastern Han Dynasty who was reluctant in recounting about his military achievements. This is the reason why there are autobiographies available in our country. However, undeniably due to the lack of normal democracy inside the party some time ago, writing an autobiography was considered to be a deed to "monumentalize oneself." It is quite natural that the comrades refrained from writing autobiographies so as to avoid arousing suspicion.

As a matter of fact, the personal histories of the revolutionaries who have fought their whole lives for the liberation of their motherland and the people have already been melted into the entire cause of the proletariat. Their favorable and unfavorable turns in life, their writings and their experiences in battles have become an important part of the history of the party, the revolution and class struggle. Their memoirs will leave us with detailed, reliable, vivid and concrete historical materials and add splendor to our party, the proletariat and the Chinese nation. This is indeed an excellent thing which will benefit us incalculably.

This is the 6th year since the downfall of the "gang of four" and the 4th since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. There is no need for us to evade the question of "monumentalization." It is our hope that the old comrades will faithfully write down their experiences in the revolution, so that they can leave behind to the future generations the most precious legacy and the most magnificent chapter in the brilliant history of the Chinese civilization!

In ancient China, there were many honest historians who neither covered up people's faults nor lavished praises on them, so that they are still held in esteem nowadays. In writing memoirs, communists should all the more seek truth from facts, write without reservation and be faithful to historical facts. Old Chief Peng set an example for us in this regard: He did not gloss over his faults but strongly and unsparingly refuted the "charges" made against him. As a thoroughgoing materialist should be, he was dauntless; he had a strong sense of political responsibility, neither "covering up the faults of the elders" nor "bludgeoning" the erring comrades; he said yes for yes and no for no; he never called a red thing a black thing nor a black thing a red thing. This is the "historical ethics" of a model communist.

"Peng Dehuai's Account" was produced under special historical conditions. However, the publication of this book is of great significance. With the administrative structure simplified and the leading groups readjusted, a number of veteran cadres may be required to withdraw from the first line to the second line, to retire or to leave their posts for convalescence. Some of them may participate in social activities and investigations and others may make use of their time to write articles.

[Text] Beijing, April 24 (XINHUA) -- China has exported 34 ships each of more than 10,000 tons in the past three years with the total tonnage of all the ships exported during this period amounting to 900,000 tons, reports today's PEOPLE'S DAILY. In addition, some shipyards are now starting to build off-shore oil drilling rigs for export as well.

The ships exported include 36,000-ton or 27,000-ton bulk ships, 17,500-ton multi-purpose cargo ships, 12,300-ton container ships, and 700 horse power tugboats and pleasure vessels, the paper says.

According to contracts already signed, China will deliver a dozen more ships for foreign firms this years, says the paper. Two 27,000-ton ocean going freighters built and exported by the Dalian shipyard this year have received favourable comments from the shipping and shipbuilding circles abroad.

China has so far imported 15 items of advanced maritime technical know-how from other countries and has been licensed to produce some world famous brand products. The "Sulz" diesel engines with Swiss patent made by the Shanghai shipyard have been installed in some exported ships.

China produced only one 10,000-ton-class ship for export before 1979, the paper says. However, it is now accepting both fleet orders and orders for a single ship. The firms which so far have placed orders for Chinese ships are in the Hong Kong-Macao region, Singapore, Malaysia, the United States, Italy and West Germany, the paper says.

MEETING DISCUSSES OVERSEAS CHINESE-OWNED HOUSES

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (XINHUA) -- Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said today at a discussion meeting on implementing the policy concerning privately owned houses of Overseas Chinese held jointly by the State Council Office of Overseas Chinese Affairs and the State Administration of Urban Construction: It is our national policy to unite the masses of our countrymen residing abroad and enlarge and consolidate the patriotic united front. At present, implementation of the party's policies concerning Overseas Chinese affairs is mainly to implement the policy concerning privately owned houses of Overseas Chinese. This is a matter of prime importance concerning the development of the patriotic united front, accelerating the four modernizations program and the great cause of reunifying the motherland. The significance is great, and the task is arduous.

He expressed the hope that party committees at all levels will attach great importance to the task, effectively strengthen leadership and carry out the task successfully.

The discussion meeting was held in Beijing 20-26 April. The meeting was attended by responsible persons from real estate administrations, Overseas Chinese affairs offices and offices for the implementation of policies on privately owned houses from Guangdong and Fujian Provinces, and 20 cities including Beijing, Shanghai, Tianjin and Nanjing.

At the meeting, the responsible persons from the various places reported on the implementation of the policy concerning privately owned houses of Overseas Chinese in each area, exchanged experiences and discussed other relevant policies. Peng Guanghan, deputy director of the State Council Office of Overseas Chinese Affairs, and Cao Hongtao, deputy director of the State Administration of Urban Construction, spoke at the meeting. They reviewed the progress made in the past few years in implementing the policy on privately owned houses of Overseas Chinese.

They said that despite the country's economic difficulties and the housing shortage in many cities, fairly significant progress has still been made in implementing the policy of privately owned houses of Overseas Chinese. However, the development of the work is very uneven at present. To further implement this policy, arduous work remains to be done. The meeting held that the emphasis of the work at present is to concentrate on clearing out and returning houses owned by Overseas Chinese which were forcibly occupied during the 10 years of internal disorder. As to Overseas Chinese housing problems left over by history, the localities should proceed from the actual conditions of each area, actively draw up plans and handle the problems step by step in a planned way. In dealing with problems which do not belong within the scope of implementation of the policy or which, although belonging within the scope, still cannot be solved at present, we should earnestly do good ideological work among the people concerned to help reassure the public.

[Excerpts] The seventh Jiangsu provincial trade union congress ceremoniously opened at Nanjing's Great Hall of the People on the morning of 20 April. A total of 1,224 trade union representatives from provincial industrial, communications, farming, cultural and educational, science and technology, health, physical and cultural fronts attended this congress.

Leading comrades of the Jiangsu Provincial CCP Committee, the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government and the provincial military district, including Hu Hong, Hui Yuyu, Han Peixin, Chu Jiang, Zhou Ze, Wang Bingshi, Zhou Yifeng, (Luo Yunlai), Yin Zhongwei, Ye Xuchao, Zhu Hui, Chen Yusheng and Hua Chengyi, attended the congress.

(Mo Shan), vice chairman of the Jiangsu provincial trade union council, gave an opening speech. He said: The main task of this congress is to further study the important instructions of the CCP Central Committee on trade union work, define the present task of our trade unions and mobilize workers throughout the province to fully display their roles as masters of the country and make fresh contributions in building a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Hu Hong, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, extended congratulations to the congress on behalf of the provincial CCP committee. He said: As in the rest of the country, Jiangsu's political and economic situation is very good. This is the result of the contributions made by our workers, peasants, intellectuals and the general public in developing our province's good situation. Therefore, I extend revolutionary respect and cordial regards to the workers, engineering and technological personnel and cadres who work on various fronts.

Comrade Hu Hong discussed the new historical mission of the working class: to make China a powerful, modern socialist country with a highly developed material and spiritual civilization. He said: It is necessary to strengthen the building of the ranks of the working class. At present, it is necessary to strengthen the education in Marxism-Leninism, Mao Zedong Thought and revolutionary traditions and to strengthen education in culture and science and technology. Through the education in these two aspects, we shall make our working class a strong contingent with advanced ideology, skillful techniques, strict discipline and the ability to cooperate and unite with each other.

Hui Yuyu, secretary of the provincial CCP committee and governor, also spoke. Ding Keze, chairman of the provincial trade union council, delivered a work report entitled "Foster the Spirit of the Working Class As the Master of the Country and Make Fresh Contributions to the Building of a Socialist Material and Spiritual Civilization."

Xu Jiatun Address

OW250915 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] The seventh Jiangsu provincial trade union congress ended in Nanjing on 24 April after 5 days in session. The congress defined the forthcoming work and tasks for trade unions throughout the province. In the face of the new situation, under the leadership of the party, focusing on the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization and taking the workers congresses as the key, the trade unions at all levels must do good mass work in production, daily activities, education and other areas and bring into full play the enthusiasm of workers and staff members as masters to fulfill their duties and do their best for the socialist modernization program.

All the delegates attended the closing ceremony held at the Nanjing Great Hall of the People on the afternoon of 24 April. Comrade Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the provincial party committee, spoke at the meeting. Comrade Xu Jiatun's speech was divided into three parts.

1. On the current situation, he said: The current situation in our country is very good. This is one of the best periods since the founding of the People's Republic. The political and economic situation in our province, as in the rest of the country, is also very good. Because preparations for industrial production were done quite solidly this year and because production tasks were fixed early, industrial production targets for the first quarter of the year have been fulfilled rather well. The total industrial output value of the province for the first quarter increased 15.7 percent over the same period last year.

As industrial output increased by a big margin, taxes and profits turned in by enterprises also greatly increased. The province's revenue in the first quarter increased 18.5 percent over the same period last year. However, there were rather big gaps in coal, oil and power supplies. So it is hoped that you will all work together, overcome difficulties and do everything possible to save energy and increase economic results. At the same time, it is necessary to do a good job in energy production, exploration and coordination and to strive for a certain rate of continued growth of industrial and agricultural production and new progress in economic results.

2. On conscientiously studying and implementing the decision of the party Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, he said: The party Central Committee and the State Council attach great importance and pay close attention to the struggle. In our province, as in the rest of the country, initial results have been achieved in thes struggle. Now, we still must conscientiously study the decision, deeply understand the significance and nature of the struggle, clearly see the necessity, urgency and protracted nature of the struggle and pay special attention to new formulations and demarcation lines in applying policies in the decision. Only by studying the decision well can we implement it well.

3. On wholeheartedly relying on the working class, Comrade Xu Jiatun said: In the new historical period, the unity of the working class, the peasantry and the intellectuals is the most importance source of strength for realizing the four modernizations. The working class must unite all the forces than can be united, form the broadest possible united front, play the leading role of the working class better, unite the people of the whole country and strive for the realization of communism. Comrade Xi Jiatun pointed out: We must also correctly appraise the conditions and characteristics of the working ranks and strive to enhance the political and technical qualities of the working class.

After Comrade Xu Jiatun spoke, the congress adopted, in succession, a resolution of the work report of the sixth committee of the Jiangsu provincial trade union council, a resolution on the committee's financial report and a resolution on the committee's report on examining expenditures.

Then, Comrade (Mo Shan) delivered the closing speech. He said: Trade unions are schools for workers to learn communism. At present, we should conduct extensive education among workers and staff members on the current economic situation so that they will ardently love the party, socialism and the motherland, firmly establish the idea of acting according to national conditions, correctly handle the relationship between the interests of the state, collectives and individuals, maintain the inherent qualities of the working class, heighten our spirit and devote ourselves to the socialist modernization drive.

Comrade (Mo Shan) stressed: The trade union is the party's assistant, the link between the party and the masses. It is necessary to rally the broad masses of workers and staff members around the party and help the masses of workers feel that the trade unions are really their own organizations. He called on all the delegates to continue to carry forward the fine traditions of the working class, unite the masses of workers and staff members throughout the province and make new contributions, in their posts, to building a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

The congress closed victoriously to the strains of the "Internationale."

SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO CITED ON POPULATION CONTROL

HK260227 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 25 Apr 82 p 4

[Article reprinted from Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO -- date not given]

[Text] Shanghai, a city with 11,620,000 residents plus transients, has actually a population of over 12 million, being one of the few extra-large cities in the world. The result of 1950's high birth rate is looming -- the generation born in that period are getting married and their offspring are also coming into the world. Besides, hundreds of thousands of retired Shanghai people who are working in the hinterland will return to this coastal city. All this may cause grave consequences to people's living conditions of economic development in this most cosmopolitan city in China, which must not be underestimated.

Shanghai's birth rate in 1981 made a big jump to 16.79 per thousand. This made a population increase of 10.34 per thousand. And newborn infants were twice that of 1974, the year marked by the lowest birth rate ever recorded in the last 15 years in the municipality. It is estimated that this ever increasing tendency will last for the next 10 or more years. There are as many as 1.95 million young women in Shanghai of the 16-30 age group, and within a decade, the number of girls of marriageable age will increase year by year. If this problem gets out of hand, a tremendous population explosion will be touched off in its wake.

Natives' Return

Since 1949, there have been several occasions when large numbers of population flowed in and out of Shanghai. The total of Shanghai people who took on jobs in the hinterland and border regions amounts to 1.3 million. Among them, 950,000 left Shanghai in the period from 1953 to 1963, and 200,000 after 1964. Even if only one or two out of every 10 of them choose to come back to Shanghai after they retire, Shanghai's population will probably increase by several hundreds of thousands more.

From 1968 to 1973, Shanghai's educated youths were sent down to the countryside. Now, about 200,000 of them are working in other places, while half a million of them have in recent years returned to Shanghai and reunited with their families.

Young people in Shanghai get married remarkably late. The average first marriage age of women is over 26 in the city proper, and over 24 on the outskirts. In some past years, when late childirth was encouraged, not enough notice was taken to balance birth rate of each year, so still more childbirths will take place in the couple of coming years. Shanghai's population control needs overall scientific planning.

WANG DAOHAN ADDRESSES SHANGHAI MODEL WORKERS

OW270548 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 26 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The 1981 Shanghai city model workers meeting was held ceremoniously this afternoon at the cultural square. The municipal people's government awarded citations, medals and certificates to 1,013 model workers and 481 model collectives.

The cultural square was filled with an atmosphere of joy. Representatives of municipal model workers and model collectives, advanced producers and advanced workers from all fronts and old model workers who made contributions in the past -- more than 12,000 people in all -- attended the meeting.

Leading comrades of the municipal party committee, the standing committee of the municipal people's congress, the municipal government and the municipal CPPCC committee Hu Lijiao, Wang Daohan, Han Zheyi, Zhong Min, Xia Zhengnong, Yang Shifa, Chen Jinhua and others attended the meeting. Han Zheyi presided over the meeting.

Wang Daohan was the last to speak at the meeting. He spoke highly of the model workers' contributions to building a socialist material and spiritual civilization. On the current economic situation in Shanghai and this year's tasks, he called on workers, staff members and commune members in the entire city to further heighten their spirit, actively forge ahead, strive to improve product quality, increase varieties, reduce consumption and meet market demands.

Wang Daohan said: Workers, staff members, commune members and the masses of other laborers in the whole city should ardently love the party, socialism and the motherland and foster a firm belief in the four fundamental principles, in the party's line, principles and policies formulated since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and in the present leadership of the party Central Committee.

Wang Daohan, secretary of the municipal party committee and mayor of Shanghai, pointed out at today's model workers meeting: Dealing blows at criminal activities in the economic field is an important task for the whole party this year and for a long time to come.

He said: At present, it is necessary to widely inform the public of the seriousness and harmfulness of the criminal activities in the economic field and of the necessity and urgency to combat corruption and degeneration. It is necessary to increase the ideological and political consciousness of party members, CYL members, state personnel, PLA commanders and fighters, workers and staff members and commune members; enhance their ability to discern and resist decadent capitalist ideology, remaining feudalistic influences and other bad ideas, and to resist the bourgeois lifestyle; and encourage them to courageously and tenaciously wage a resolute struggle against unhealthy trends and evil practices and criminal activities.

GUANGZHOU RIBAO DISCUSSES ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK240554 Guangzhou RIBAO in Chinese 18 Apr 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "An Extremely Important Document"]

[Text] The "decision on severely punishing criminals who seriously undermine the economy" made by the CCP Central Committee and State Council was promulgated on 13 April. The Guangzhou Municipal CCP Committee and People's Government issued a circular on 16 April on conscientiously studying and implementing the "decision." The "decision" reviewed the achievements gained by the people throughout the country in building socialist material and spiritual civilization since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee under the correct leadership of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council. At the same time, it also pointed out certain dark sides in our economic and political life, in particular, the shocking criminal activities which seriously undermine our economy. The "decision" has explicitly expounded on the significance and nature of the serious criminal activities in the economic field and made regulations concerning the principles, policies and practice to deal with them. The "decision" is an extremely important document. CCP committees and people's governments at all levels and all units in the municipality must immediately organize the broad masses of party members, cadres and people to conscientiously study and resolutely implement it in connection with the actual situation.

At present, our municipality is gradually launching the struggle against criminal activities in the economic field. However, responsible comrades of certain units still do not have sufficient knowledge of the necessity and urgency of unfolding this struggle, and they still have doubts. Therefore, we must eliminate all ideological obstacles by conscientiously studying the "decision," in order to provide a guarantee for victory in this struggle.

Some comrades worry about whether the launching of this struggle will shift the focus of the modernization drive, whether it will affect the implementation of the special policies and the flexible measures, and whether it will affect this year's production and the foreign trade task. In fact, all these worries are unnecessary. The reason why they have such worries is that they have set the launching of this struggle in opposition to the implementation of the special policies and flexible measures. The "decision" explicitly pointed out: We must clearly realize that if we allow the serious criminal activities in the economic field to run rampant, we will not be able to smoothly realize modernization. Only if we deal hard blows at the criminal activities that undermine our economy in the course of resolutely implementing the various economic policies can we ensure that our country's modernization drive will proceed on the socialist road and can we correctly implement the open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic economy. Simultaneously, it is necessary for leading organs at all levels to make good arrangements, exert careful leadership and strengthen ideological and political work. They should prevent the emergence of all negative factors that affect production and work, and take this as the criterion for examining their work. The "decision" has made explicit regulations on specific work arrangements and clearly explained the theories that the launching of this struggle is related to the life or death of the modernization drive and that the launching of this struggle does not exclude the implementation of the open-door policy and the policy to enliven the domestic policy. Obviously, only if we clearly understand the nature and the significance of this struggle and understand the relationship between launching this struggle and implementing the various economic policies and launching the modernization drive can we stand high and see far, make overall plans by taking every aspect into consideration, grasp well the launching of this struggle and do a good job in production and other work. Some other comrades worry whether or not we will repeat past "leftist" mistakes in unfolding this struggle, and harbor fear of difficulty. The reason for this is that they do have sufficient understanding of the principles, policies and practice for launching this struggle. The "decision" stressed: During this struggle, we must on the one hand be resolute and deal hard blows, and on the other, we must make clear the key points and work meticulously with careful procedures. The "decision" stipulated that it is necessary to fix focal points and draw specific demarcation lines, and pointed out: It is necessary to correctly master the policies, and strictly distinguish and correctly handle the two kinds of contradictions; we absolutely cannot promote a mass movement and make everyone go through an ordeal.

Therefore, the key to this struggle has been made explicit and clear demarcation lines in the policies have also been drawn. As long as we work strictly according to party regulations and law, political discipline, judicial procedure and legal regulations, persist in taking the facts as the grounds and using the law as the criterion and insist upon stressing evidence and not easily believing statements made by accused persons we can deal hard and accurate blows at criminals who seriously undermine the economy.

We study the "decision" because we want to improve our knowledge, master the policies, be clear about the practice and guide our actions. In order to launch this struggle more deeply and promote production and work at the same time, CCP committees and people's governments at all levels and all units must make overall plans. They must seriously strengthen leadership over this struggle, and the principal responsible comrades must personally grasp the work. They must firmly grasp the cases, strengthen investigation of the cases, correctly master the policies and work according to law. They must appoint capable cadres to be responsible for important and major cases, implement the system of division of labor and strive to investigate and deal with a number of cases in a short period of time. It is necessary to get a good grasp of industrial and agricultural pro duction, external economic activities and other kinds of work. Due to the implementation of various economic policies since the third plenary session, our minicipality has already obtained distinctive results in industrial and agricultural production and in external economic activities. The current situation is very promising. At present, we must seriously sum up experiences, in particular, the experiences in implementing the special policies and the flexible measures, incessantly study the new situation, solve new problems, carry forward the results obtained and overcome the shortcomings. In addition, we must prevent and overcome the emergence of all negative factors which affect production and work so that our industrial and agricultural production, external economic activities and other kinds of work can progress smoothly. We must carry out vivid and specific ideological and political education for the party members, cadres and masses in connection with the progress of work, adopt various approaches and make use of typical cases. We must improve their standard of ideological awareness so that they will spontaneously wage resolute struggle against sinister trends and criminal activities. Dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is also a major task of the whole party this year and for a relatively long time to come. It is also one of the most practical and efficient measures for rectifying the party work style in a clear-cut way, adopt a firm stand and boldly and actively launch this struggle is a true test for each Communist Party member and the combat effectiveness of the party organizations at all levels. All party members and cadres in the municipality must further unify their ideology, coordinate efforts and unite with the broad masses by studying the "decision." They must actively unfold this struggle for upholding communist purity and opposing corruption, and be determined to win victory in this struggle.

CHEN PIXIAN ATTENDS HUBEI INDUSTRIAL MEETING

[Text] The Hubei provincial industrial and communications work meeting convened by the provincial CCP committee and people's government ended in Wuhan municipality on 19 April. In accordance with the spirit of the national industrial and communications work conference, the meeting emphasized that industrial production should be carried out by focusing on efforts to improve economic results. It said that this year we should bring about an advance in industrial and communications production and in all other aspects of work in our province as well, so as to guarantee the attainment of the goal set by the provincial CCP committee for ensuring an increase of 6 percent in production and striving for 7 to 8 percent. We should ensure fulfillment of the revenue task and seek a realistic and steady speed in industrial and communications production.

The comrades participating in the meeting had serious discussions centering around the problem of promoting better economic results. They summed up the past experiences gained in running industry by recalling the bitter lessons of laying too much stress on growth rate speed and too little on promoting economic results, which led to seeking unrealistic targets while suffering actual losses. They also unanimously held that first of all the guiding ideology for industrial production should be corrected if better economic results are to be achieved. We should switch from blindly seeking production value to promoting better economic returns. In present work, efforts should be made to carry out industrial production on the basis of improving quality, increasing varieties, minimizing cost and producing products which meet the requirements of the markets and society. Thus, our province's industrial production can proceed at a realistic and steady speed this year.

In accordance with the instructions of the provincial CCP committee, the comrades attending the meeting seriously studied and discussed the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. They held that the decision was very important and timely. Dealing blows at serious criminal economic activities is related to the destiny of our party and state as well as the success and failure of the socialist modernization drive. Grasping this struggle well will give a great and important impetus to filling people with enthusiasm, improving the party's work style and doing well in building material and spiritual civilization. By discussing violations of law and criminal activities in the economic field, the comrades came to realize that if we fail to strike heavy blows at economic crimes and to guard against dodging, making false claims and siphoning off an evasion in tax revenue, we can do nothing in promoting economic results. They all expressed their determination to vigorously implement the decision made by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on combating serious criminal activities in the economic field and to carry out this struggle to the end in light of the arrangements made by the provincial CCP committee.

Through discussions, the meeting also studied the problem of this year's energy production, conservation, regulation and coordination, the problem of tapping the potentials of the existing enterprises and improving and reforming them, the problem of straightening out the enterprises in batches and groups and the problem of straightening out political and ideological work in these enterprises. The meeting made arrangements for solving these problems.

During the meeting, Comrade Zhang Jinxian, member of the standing committee of the provincial CCP committee and vice governor, conveyed the principal spirit of the national industrial and communications work conference. He also summed up the industrial production situation in 1981 and put forth suggestions for production in 1982. Comrade Han Ningfu, secretary of the provincial CCP committee and governor, made a summation for the meeting. Comrade Chen Pixian, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, made an important speech on the relationship between speed and returns in industrial production.

Participants in the meeting included leading comrades in charge of industry and communications in the prefectures and municipalities and some counties in our province. In addition there were also chairmen of the economic committees, directors of the financial offices, directors of the finance bureaus and directors of the commerical bureaus in the above-mentioned places. Others who attended included leading comrades of the provincial departments and committees and bureaus concerned, as well as responsible comrades of some large factories and mines.

HUNAN HOLDS REPORT MEETING ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Excerpts] The Hunan Provincial CCP Committee and government held a report meeting on the economic situation for the provincial organs on 20 April. The meeting took place in the hall of Hunan Military District. Provincial CCP committee Secretary and Governor Sun Guozhi delivered a report on the economic situation.

Provincial CCP committee First Secretary Mao Zhiyong presided and spoke at the meeting. Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: Conducting thorough propaganda and education in the economic situation is a major content in strengthening ideological and political work. The party and government organs at all levels and the leading cadres at all levels must attach great importance to this and get a good grasp of it. By conducting education in the economic situation, we should enable the masses to realize the superiority of the socialist system, to see the tremendous power of the major party and state policy decisions taken since the third plenary session and to understand the truth that we must first eat and second carry out construction. Thus they will strengthen their sense of responsibility as masters of the house, love the party, the people, socialism, the motherland, the enterprises and collectives and their work, brace their spirits, go all-out and make more contributions to the modernization drive.

Over 2,000 persons attended the meeting, including responsible comrades of the provincial organs, Hunan Military District, PLA units stationed in Changsha and Changsha municipality.

In his report, Comrade Sun Guozhi affirmed the tremendous achievements in economic construction since the third plenary session. He pointed out: The facts of the past 3 years and more fully testify that the line, principles and policies stipulated by the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee accord with our national condition and are completely correct. As long as we unswervingly advance along the road pointed out by the Central Committee, our economic work will progress every year and the economic situation will get better and better.

Sun Guozhi said: According to statistics, Hunan spent 7.436 billion yuan from 1979 to 1981 in improving people's living standards, an average of over 140 yuan per member of the population. On the question of market prices, Comrade Sun Guozhi pointed out: Generally speaking, the growth rate of the urban people's income has exceeded the index of price increases, and the consumption level has been rising everywhere. There has been a notable increase in possession of consumer durables. Comrade Sun Guozhi stressed in his report: At present, we must pay particular attention to one problem: We must correctly handle the relationship between accumulation and consumption and the relationship between improving people's living standards and carrying out national construction. Comrade Chen Yun's saying that we should first eat and second carry out construction is an important strategic idea guiding our country's economic activities. It is an extremely important national strategy. Our economic work must take account of both the people's living standards and national construction. Only thus can there be good prospects for the state and for the four modernizations.

In conclusion, Comrade Sun Guozhi demanded that the party committees and governments at all levels get a good grasp of propaganda and education in the economic situation and guide the masses to do a good job in building socialist material and spiritual civilization, so as to make new and still greater progress in work this year.

It has been learned that Wu Lengxi will be appointed minister of the newly established Ministry of Television and Broadcasting. Zhu Muzhi will be appointed minister of the Ministry of Culture, Zhou Weizhi first vice minister, and Chen Huangmei and Zhou Erfu vice ministers.

Members of the CPPCC Standing Committee who attended the 23d Session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee as nonvoting delegates discussed in groups this morning Premier Zhao Ziyang's explanation concerning the progress of the organizational reform of the State Council and the three motions. They maintained that Premier Zhao's report was brief and to the point because he only used 20 minutes to explain important issues very clearly.

Vice Chairman of the CPPCC He Changgong said that he formerly worried about the insufficient number of vice premiers and that he felt relieved now because state councillors would share the work. He added: We, veteran cadres who have retreated, should fully trust the new leading bodies. We should foster and encourage them. We firmly believe that each new generation excels over the previous generation, as in the Changjiang, the waves behind propel those before.

Peng Dixian, member of the CPPCC Standing Committee and vice governor of Sichuan Province, said: Organizational reform has enjoyed popular support and is a happy event for which we have waited for a long time. We have scored such a great success within a period of 2 months or so. This has symbolized the prosperity and flourishing of our country. This has also shown that there is no lack of successors to carry out our cause.

TA KUNG PAO LOOKS AT CHANGES IN CENTRAL ORGANS

[Text] It seems that the main work of streamlining the organs directly under the CCP Central Committee initially got underway in early April. This is a major reform in the party's highest organs, following the streamlining of the first batch of State Council departments, the leading organs of the government.

Each Department Has One Director and Four Deputies

Except for the Organization Department, the names of the new directors and some of the deputy directors of the Central Committee's four main departments -- Organization, Propaganda, United Front Work and International Liaison -- have already been publicly announced. According to our information, after streamlining, each of these departments has 1 director and 4 deputies; originally, there were more than 6 or 7 of these; for instance, the United Front Work Department had 10 and the International Liaison department 8 or 9.

Qian Liren Appointed Deputy Director of International Liaison Department

The former department directors were still taking part in activities in Beijing during the first 10 days of April. On 1 April, it was still Ulanhu, as director of the United Front Work Department, attending the gathering to mark the 10th anniversary of the birth [as published] of the late Mr Zhang Lan, founder of the China Democratic League; on 8 April, former International Liaison Department Director Ji Pengfei gave a banquet for Hill, chairman of the Australian Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist), and Deputy Directors Ou Tangliang and Zhu Liang were also there. During 10 days in the middle of the month, new people took over these departments, and some of the deputy directors have become advisers.

The first new man to appear was Qiao Shi, director (formerly deputy director) of the International Liaison Department. On 12 April he attended a film party given by the Korean ambassador in China to mark the 70th birthday of Kim Il-song; Qian Liren, a new deputy director, also appeared on that occasion. One year ago, he was the newly-appointed representative of China to UNESCO in Europe. During the 1950's, he undertook leadership work in the national youth organization. On 14 April, former Deputy Director Ou Tangliang headed the CCP's friendship group visiting Italy, as adviser to the International Liaison Department. When Li Xiannian received the visiting Spanish Communist Party group on 19 April, former Deputy Director Feng Xuan was present as adviser.

It appears that the new team in the International Liaison Department consists of Qiao Shi, director; Liu Xinquan, Wu Xueqian, Qian Liren and Zhu Liang, deputy directors; and Feng Xuan, Ou Tangliang and Zhang Zhixiang, advisers.

Departure and Retention of Former Propaganda Department Director

Deng Liqun, the new director of the Central Committee Propaganda Department, appeared in this capacity for the first time on 12 April, when he attended a national meeting on script editing in feature film studios. He was formerly director of the Policy Research Office of the Central Committee Secretariat, and it seems he still holds this post concurrently. The former director of the department, Wang Renzhong, is a secretary of the Central Committee Secretariat, and it just means that he is no longer concurrently director of the Propaganda Department. Former Deputy Director Liao Jingdan may still hold his post; he presided over symposia on economic propaganda work in industry convened by the Central Propaganda Department in Sichuan and Hubei between the end of March and 11 April. Former Deputy Director Zhou Yang, a well-known figure in literature and art circles, submitted his resignation report some time ago, and evidently will not continue to hold the post. Zhu Muzhi may become minister of culture of the State Council, and will very probably serve concurrently as deputy director of the Propaganda Department. The former deputy director, He Jingzhi, is the youngest of the group, and it is believed he will continue to serve in this post.

The United Front Work Department and Wang Feng's Return to Beijing To Take Up His Post

Yang Jingren, the new director of the United Front Work Department, appeared for the first time in this capacity on 21 April, when he met Professor Fan Shoukang from Taiwan, who is returning to live on the mainland.

He was formerly deputy director of the department and concurrently vice premier of the State Council and chairman of the Nationalities Affairs Commission. Evidently, he will not serve as vice premier in the future, but he may continue to concurrently serve as chairman of the Nationalities Affairs Commission, because nationalities work comes under united front work. It is believed that nationalities work will be greatly stepped up in the future. Yang Jingren himself is a minority-nationality cadre and has extensive experience in united front and nationalities work. As for the four deputy directors, although their names have not yet been officially announced, Yang Jingren was accompanied by Wang Feng, Ping Jiesan, Li Gui and Chen Xin when he gave a banquet on 22 April for Professor Ma Bi, who has returned from Taiwan to live on the mainland. It may be that these are the four deputy directors. Ping and Li were former deputy directors of the department, and Chen Xin is a new man. It appears that Wang Feng has been undertaking important central duties since he relinquished his post as first secretary of the Xinjiang Provincial CPP Committee.

Organization Department Deputy Director Wang Zhaohua

The Organization Department is an important department of the CCP Central Committee, which takes charge of the cadres. Will Song Renqiong, secretary of the Central Committee Secretariat, continue to concurrently hold the post of director of this department? Up to now, only one new deputy director, Wang Zhaohua, has appeared; she attended the 16 April banquet for the Spanish Communist Party group. This department had two new deputies last year -- Yang Shijie and Bai Zhimin. Tao Zhu's widow, Zeng Zhi, who was deputy director of the department some years ago, is now an adviser to it. Shuai Mengqi (female) is another adivser.

It seems that the streamlining of the Central Committee organs has so far affected only the departmental level, and the bureaus and offices will have to be tackled next. Generally speaking, although the reform of these organs is not as arduous and complex as that of those under the State Council, it is of historical significance, because it is a fundamental reform in the CCP's cadre system and a major measure in totally abolishing the life-long tenure system for cadres, especially leading cadres. This is the first time such a thing has happened in the 61 years since the party was founded and the 33 years since the victory of the revolution. It is also the first time that it has been recognized that it is imperative to eliminate a reflection of the remnants of feudalism in the CCP's cadre system.

HONG KONG SOFTBALL OFFICIAL ON UPCOMING GAMES

HK230155 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 23 Apr 82 p 14

[By Carmen Chan]

[Excerpt] Hong Kong will not send a team to the women's softball championship unless the local association receives a clear indication from the Taiwanese on the flag and anthem issue. An official of the Hong Kong Softball Association said they regarded the invitation as a thing of the past, as the deadline for acceptances had already expired.

Senior officials of the association, together with the local men and women softball teams, went on a trip to Beijing and Guangzhou earlier this month. They did not return until April 14. The deadline for the Taiwan tournament expired the following day.

"We thought the deadline had already passed and the invitation was no longer valid. We didn't even talk about it at our council meeting on Sunday," the official said. He said they had received a letter from the International Softball Federation informing them the flag and anthem issue had been resolved. "But the Taiwan authority said otherwise. No one knows what is going on," he said. The official said the local softball association's council may reconsider the invitation if the Taiwan authority gives a clear indication of what it plans to do. "Only if we receive something formal from the host country will the council of the association take up the issue," he stressed.

BEIJING RADIO VIEWS WORLD ARMS TRADE

["International Current Events" program commentary: "Booming World Arms Trade"]

[Text] In recent years the world economy has been in a slump. International trade has stagnated, and markets have shrunk. However, the munitions trade alone has prospered. According to data from the International Peace Research Institute in Stockholm, Sweden and other research institutes, the world's arms trade grew at an average annual rate of 17.5 percent in the 1970's, far greater than the growth rate of international trade.

Total arms sales in the 1970's were four times greater than in the 1960's. Since the beginning of the 1980's, the arms trade has grown even faster. In 1980, arms sales to Third World countries and areas alone totaled $44.2 billion, an increase of $15 billion over 1979, or an annual growth of 50 percent. The momentum of this fast growth continued in 1981 and in the first few months of 1982. It is estimated that the arms trade in the 1980's will surpass that of the 1970's in both quantity and quality. Large quantities of modern weapons in the international market seriously threaten the cause of world peace.

The two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, have always been the biggest munitions merchants in the world. Weapons sold by the two of them account for more than two-thirds of the world's total munitions sales.

The two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, regard munitions sales as an important way to pursue hegemonism and contend for world hegemony. The Soviet-U.S. contention is very acute in the arms market. The history of Soviet arms sales is not long, probably beginning in the late 1950's, but sales have grown at a very fast pace. Especially since the mid-1970's, Soviet arms sales have gradually caught up with and overtaken those of the United States.

According to information from the West, in the past few years the Soviet Union has been leading in arms sales. In the 3 years from 1978 through 1980, munitions sales agreements signed between the Soviet Union and Third World countries totaled $26.5 billion, averaging $8.5 billion each year. In the same period, munitions sales agreements signed between the United States and Third World countries totaled $19.4 billion, averaging $6.5 billion each year. In 1980 Soviet munitions sales increased sharply to $14.8 billion, doubling U.S. munitions sales and ranking first in the world.

In the past, the United States was the world's leading munitions merchant. In 1977 the United States announced restrictions on arms exports and established an arms exports control agency, thus slowing down the pace of its arms sales. This gave the Soviet Union an opportunity to catch up with and surpass the United States.

Since 1981, in the face of aggressive Soviet challenges, the United States has changed its practice of restricting arms exports. It has increased arms sales and permitted sales of advanced new weapons. As a result, U.S. arms sales have increased rapidly. It is estimated that total U.S. arms sales this year will break the record 1975 sales of $16.1 billion and again rank first in the world.

Besides the NATO countries and the Warsaw Pact bloc in Europe, the major areas of Soviet and U.S. munitions exports are mainly strategic places over which they are contending. The Soviet Union regards the crescent-shaped area stretching from North Africa through the Middle East and the Persian Gulf to the Indian Ocean as the major area for arms sales. At the same time, it is speeding up the arming of Cuba and Vietnam to step up aggression and expansion in Asia and Central America. The weapons used by Vietnam in its aggression against Kampuchea and by Cuba in infiltrating Central American countries are mostly supplied by the Soviet Union.

In the past few years the United States has repeatedly increased arms supplies to Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Pakistan and Central American countries to contend with Soviet expansion in the crescent-shaped area and Central America.

The U.S. Government has openly violated the principles on which diplomatic relations were established between China and the United States and continued to sell weapons to Taiwan, violating China's sovereignty and interfering in China's internal affairs.

The two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, have used arms sales as a means to pursue their hegemonistic policies. This behavior has been met with strong objections from the many Third World countries. As a result, a noteworthy new trend has now emerged in the world arms trade: the diversification of arms supply sources by some countries to put an end to their dependence solely on the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States.

The munitions trade is a highly lucrative business. Many countries are now getting into the business. It is estimated that besides the Soviet Union and the United States, more than 20 other countries are exporting weapons. They include West European countries, Japan and other industrialized countries as well as countries like Brazil. These countries are taking advantage of the diversification of munitions sources to expand their weapons exports and contend with the Soviet Union and the United States for munitions markets.

In the past few years French arms sales have increased the fastest. According to the French Defense Ministry, French arms sales in 1981 totaled 33.8 billion francs, an increase of 1,400 percent in 12 years as compared with 2.4 billion francs in 1970. France has become the third largest munitions exporting country after the Soviet Union and the United States. French munitions exports account for about one-fifth of the country's total exports. Countries such as Britain, Italy, West Germany, Austria, Sweden and so forth are also very active in the world weapons market.

In the munitions trade, Third World countries are the victims. Many countries import some relatively advanced weapons in order to protect themselves from external threats by building up their own military strength. This is beyond reproach. However, the weapons trade, which is growing continuously in scale, has brought serious consequences to the Third World.

First, huge amounts of money are being spent which otherwise could be used for national economic development. Second, it provides an opportunity for superpower infiltration and interference. Even more serious is the fact that in the Third World, especially in areas of complex contradictions and turbulent situations, the concentration of huge quantities of weapons is making these areas more explosive.

According to TANJUG, in the past 7 years the United States, the Soviet Union and some Western industrial countries have sold to the developing countries 13,000 airplanes and helicopters, more than 50,000 tanks and armored vehicles, nearly 200 warships and submarines and 30,000 air defense missiles. The steady flow of these war weapons into the Third World cannot but seriously threaten the security of Third World countries and world peace.

As the international situation becomes increasingly tense, the weapons exporting countries, out of their strategic needs or seeking economic gains, are trying in every possible way to expand arms sales. Therefore, the world munitions trade will continue to grow.

"It is regrettable that, owing to the action taken against South Georgia, new obstacles have occurred in the course of the negotiations between the two parties concerned," he said.

"The Chinese Government hopes that both Britain and Argentina will exercise restraint and settle their dispute over Malvinas Islands reasonably and peacefully through diplomatic channels," the spokesman said.

XINHUA Comments

OW281236 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 28 Apr 82

["Disturbing Developments on Malvinas Islands Issue -- Commentary by XINHUA Correspondent Mei Zhenmin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- The British-Argentine dispute over the Malvinas Islands has at long last developed into an armed conflict between the two countries. Britain's naval task force attacked the South Georgia Island and engaged Argentine troops in fighting on April 25. Then, the Argentine Government declared that "technically we might be at war" with Britain. It also suspended peaceful negotiations with London through the United States. The developments have caused anxiety among world public opinion.

The British military action was taken when the negotiations were underway. Hopes for a peaceful settlement of the dispute went up after a new plan was worked out by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and the Argentine Government on April 19. According to the plan, Buenos Aires was to make concessions by agreeing to troop withdrawal from the Malvinas Islands, a joint British and Argentine administration in the islands during the transition period ending December 31, 1982, and relevant negotiations. But, the British Government rejected the Argentine plan and put forward stiff counterproposals including Argentina's withdrawal of troops, Britain's administration of the islands for a period of time, and negotiations on the sovereignty of the islands after consulting the inhabitants. Nevertheless, the Argentine foreign minister still went to Washington for further talks with London through Alexander Haig. It is to be regretted that Britain took military action at that very moment.

Representatives attending the foreign ministers' meeting of the Organization of American States condemned the British military action, regarded it as a challenge to Latin America and appealed to both sides to settle the dispute peacefully. The Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries issued a communique at the United Nations on April 26, reaffirming support for Argentina's sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. It hoped for continued negotiations for a just, durable and peaceful settlement of the dispute. The governments and public opinion of many countries also called on the two sides to halt the armed conflict and continue to seek a peaceful solution.

World public opinion stands for a peaceful settlement of the dispute because fighting there has impaired the relations between the Latin American countries and Britain and added a new hot spot to the many ones already existing in the world.

The mounting tension that arises in this hitherto quiet area near the Antarctica will surely divert the attention of the international community from such important and urgent problems as Afghanistan, Kampuchea and the Middle East. Unexpected losses will also be brought to Britain and Argentina. Western sources including some Britons maintain that to fight at the Malvinas Islands 13,000 kilometres away from Britain will constitute a heavy burden for the country and surely impose a heavier burden on the failing British economy.

The issue of the Malvinas Islands is in essence a historical problem left over by colonialism. Argentina's claim for sovereignty over the islands should be respected. For the present moment, the first urgent thing to do is to cease the armed conflict and resume peaceful negotiations so that this issue left over by history can be solved in a fair and reasonable way, in conformity with the fundamental interests of both parties to the dispute and the common aspirations of all peace-loving countries and people of the world.

ARGENTINA STEPS UP DEFENSE PREPARATIONS

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- The Argentine Government announced a series of measures yesterday to meet developments arising from its escalating conflict with Britain in the South Atlantic following the British landing on the South Georgia Island, according to a report from Buenos Aires.

The ruling junta has announced a ban on exports of military products and their components, as well as strategic materials such as alloys.

It also announced in a communique that reservists who do not report for duty in a mobilization will be punished by imprisonment, and possible execution if they desert in war time.

In a parallel move, the Interior Ministry called on the Argentine people to show a "patriotic attitude of serenity and firmness," and not to hoard food, medicines and fuel, and not to withdraw bank deposits. Political parties were requested to put "the great national objective before sectorial objectives." The moment of natural euphoria over the recuperation of the Malvinas Islands has passed "and it is necessary to return to work and labor," the Interior Ministry said in a communique.

Meanwhile, in the port of Comodoro Rivadavia on the South Atlantic coast, a spokesman of the Fifth Army Corps has told all foreign correspondents, estimated at 50, to leave the port city and return to Buenos Aires within 48 hours for "security reasons."

DRAFT OF REVISED CONSTITUTION PUBLISHED

[Text] Beijing, April 27 (XINHUA) -- China will reinstate a chairman of the People's Republic to represent the state in its domestic affairs and its relations with other states;

-- The functions and powers of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress will be expanded, with the Standing Committee having the power to enact certain laws and decrees and to supervise enforcement of the constitution;

-- China will set up a Central Military Council to lead the armed forces of the country;

-- China's State Council adopts the system of personal responsibility of the premier. The premier, the vice-premiers (two to four), the state councillors and secretary-general of the State Council participate in its regular meetings; the State Council will have an auditing organ to exercise independently supervisory powers according to law; and

-- China will restore the administrative set-up of townships in the rural areas, and the rural people's communes will remain as organizations of the collective economy, thus changing the current commune system of combining commune management and political power.

These are the main points of the "draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China" which was adopted by the national constitutional revision committee and is being made public by the N.P.C. Standing Committee, for nationwide discussion. In accordance with views gathered from the nationwide discussion, the constitutional revision committee will make further revisions of the draft, and then submit it to the N.P.C. session to be convened later this year.

Since its founding in 1949, the People's Republic of China has issued three constitutions, in 1954, 1975 and 1978. The current draft of the revised constitution makes substantial revisions to the 1978 constitution and, at the same time, retains some provisions of the previous constitutions that remain applicable.

The draft consists of a preamble and four chapters -- general principles; rights and duties of citizens; state structure; and the national flag, emblem and capital. It contains 140 articles.

The preamble explicitly provides that the basic task of the Chinese people in the coming years is to concentrate on socialist modernization.

The preamble reviews in broad outline modern Chinese history and the achievements made by the People's Republic of China since its founding more than 30 years ago. It also includes a brief account of the basic principles and policies China pursues in international affairs.

The preamble emphasizes:

-- Led by the Communist Party of China and guided by Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, the Chinese people will uphold the people's democratic dictatorship and the socialist road, steadily improve the socialist system in all fields, develop socialist democracy, strengthen the socialist legal system and turn China step by step into a socialist country with modern industry, agriculture, national defense and science and technology and with a high level of democracy and civilization.

-- Taiwan is part of the sacred territory of the People's Republic of China. The entire Chinese people, including compatriots in Taiwan, have the sacred duty of accomplishing the great task of reunifying the motherland.

-- The People's Republic of China is a unitary multi-national state created jointly by its various nationalities. Socialist relations of equality, unity and mutual assistance have been established among these nationalities and will be strengthened.

-- In the long years of revolution and construction, an extensive united front has been formed, led by the Communist Party of China, in which democratic parties and people's organizations participate and it embraces all the socialist working people, all patriots who support socialism and patriots who stand for the reunification of the motherland. This united front will become firmer and continue to grow.

The preamble says that the constitution, being the fundamental law of the state, is the country's supreme legal authority.

The chapter of general principles of the draft consists of 31 articles.

The general principles provide that the People's Republic of China is a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the worker-peasant alliance, that the socialist system is the basic system of the state, that all state power resides in the people and that state institutions operate according to the principle of democratic centralism.

The general principles stress the upholding of the uniformity and dignity of the socialist legal system and provide that no organization or individual shall enjoy privileges that transcend the constitution and law.

The basis of China's socialist economic system is socialist public ownership of the means of production, that is, ownership by the whole people, and collective ownership by the working people. The socialist economic system has abolished the system of exploitation of man by man; it applies the principle "from each according to his ability, to each according to his work."

China's economy consists of the state sector, socialist collective sector owned by the working people and the sector owned by urban and rural working individuals. The state sector of the economy, that is, the socialist sector owned by the whole people, is dominant in the national economy. The socialist collective sector owned by the working people includes the rural people's communes, agricultural producers' co-operatives and other forms of cooperative economy, as well as the various forms of co-operative economy in the cities and towns, such as those in the handicraft, industrial, building, transport, commercial and services. Their lawful rights and interests are protected by the state.

Land in the cities is the property of the state; in villages, towns and the surburban areas land is the property of the collectives, except for the portion which belongs to the state by law, and no organization or individual shall seize, buy, sell or lease land.

Foreign enterprises, other foreign economic organizations or individuals are permitted to make investments and undertake various forms of economic cooperation in China. They must abide by Chinese laws and their lawful rights and interests are protected by these laws.

The principles say that every Chinese should cherish the motherland, the people, labor, science and socialism; the people should be educated in the ideas and ethics of patriotism; and the influence of capitalist ideas, remnant feudal ideas and other decadent ideology should be opposed.

The general principles also provide that the state may, where necessary, establish special administrative regions. The rules and regulations in force in them shall be stipulated by law according to their specific conditions.

The number of articles in the chapter on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens has been increased to 22 from 16 in the 1978 constitution. The newly-added contents which stress citizens' fundamental rights include:

-- All citizens are equal before the law;

-- Personal dignity of citizens is inviolable; insult or slander against citizens in any form is prohibited;

-- Extra-legal detention of citizens, or extra-legal deprivation or restriction of citizens' freedom of person by other means, is prohibited; and

-- The freedom and privacy of correspondence of citizens are protected by law.

The draft says that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. Every citizen enjoys the rights prescribed by the constitution and law and at the same time has the duty to abide by the constitution and law.

The major revision in the chapter on the state structure is expansion of the functions and powers of the N.P.C. Standing Committee. The draft provides that the N.P.C. and its Standing Committee exercise legislative authority in the country and enact laws and decrees.

Apart from this, the N.P.C. has the following functions and powers: to elect the state chairman and vice-chairman; to decide on the choice of the premier of the State Council upon recommendation by the state chairman, and to decide on the choice of vice-premiers, state councillors, ministers, the chief auditor and secretary-general of the State Council upon the recommendation of the premier; to elect the chairman of the Central Military Council and, upon his recommendation, to decide on the choice of other members of the Central Military Council, and to recall or remove from office all these persons.

Apart from the prescribed legislative power, the N.P.C. Standing Committee has functions and powers to supervise the enforcement of the constitution; to examine and approve, when the N.P.C. is not in a session, partial adjustments that are deemed necessary to plans for national economic and social development and to the state budget, in the course of their implementation; and to create military and other special titles and ranks.

The draft provides that members of the N.P.C. Standing Committee shall not hold posts in organs of the state administration or the judicial and procuratorial organs, that no deputy to the N.P.C. may be arrested or placed on trial without the consent of the N.P.C. Standing Committee when the N.P.C. is not in session, and that deputies to the N.P.C. shall not be subject to legal investigation for speeches or votes at its meetings.

The N.P.C. is elected for a term of five years.

The draft provides that the term of office of the chairman and vice-chairman of the state, the chairman and vice-chairmen of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, the chairman of the Central Military Council, the president of the Supreme People's Court, the chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate as well as the premier and vice-premiers of the State Council is five years. They may be re-elected but shall not serve more than two consecutive terms.

The term of office of the people's congresses of provinces, municipalities directly under the central government, and cities divided into districts is five years. The term of office of the people's congresses of counties, cities not divided into districts, municipal districts, townships, nationality townships, and towns is three years.

The draft provides that people's congresses and people's governments are established in townships and nationality townships as organs of political power at the grassroots level in the rural areas, and that neighbourhood committees and village committees are established in urban and rural residential districts as mass organizations of self-government at the basic level.

Organs of self-government of national autonomous areas have autonomous powers in administering the revenues and expenditures of their areas. They independently administer the economic construction in their areas under the guidance of state plans. They also administer education, science, culture, public health and physical culture in their areas, take charge of and protect the national cultural heritage, develop the good culture of the nationalities and help them to flourish. The state safeguards the right of national autonomy of the organs of self-government and gives financial and material assistance to minority nationalities to accelerate their economic and cultural development. The state helps the national autonomous areas to train cadres, specialized personnel and skilled workers from among the nationality or nationalities in the given areas.

The draft provides that the chairmen of autonomous regions, heads of autonomous prefectures and heads of autonomous counties shall be persons of the nationality or nationalities exercising regional autonomy in those areas.

The fourth chapter provides that the national flag of the People's Republic of China has five stars on a field of red, that the national emblem is Tiananmen in the centre, illuminated by five stars and encircled by ears of grain and a cogwheel, and that the capital is Beijing.

OW271212 Beijing XINHUA in English 1200 GMT 27 Apr 82

[Text] Beijing, April 27 (XINHUA) -- China will reinstate the post of state chairman to represent it in domestic affairs and relations with foreign countries. The post of vice-chairman, who assists the chairman, will also be reinstated.

According to the draft of the revised constitution made public by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress for discussion by the people of the whole country, the chairman and vice-chairman are to be elected and removed by the N.P.C. Standing Committee. The term of office for each is five years. They may be re-elected but may not serve more than two consecutive terms.

China's first constitution (adopted in September 1954) called for a state chairman but the position was abolished in the second constitution adopted in 1975 and was not mentioned in the third constitution in 1978.

Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the national constitutional revision committee, said in explanations that reinstatement of the position accords with the custom and wishes of the Chinese people of all nationalities.

The draft stipulates that the functions and powers of the chairman, in line with the decisions of the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee, promulgates laws, appoints and removes the premier, vice-premiers, state councillors, ministers, chief auditor and secretary general of the State Council; confers state orders, medals and titles of honor; grants special pardons; proclaims martial law; proclaims a state of war; and orders mobilization.

The chairman also receives diplomatic representatives of other countries and, in line with the decisions of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, appoints and recalls plenipotentiary representatives stationed abroad, ratifies and abrogates treaties and important agreements concluded with other countries.

The draft also provides that the vice-chairman may exercise those functions and powers of the chairman that the chairman entrusts to him.

Should the office of the chairman fall vacant, the vice-chairman succeeds. Should the office of the vice-chairman fall vacant, the National People's Congress holds a by-election to elect a new vice-chairman. Should the offices of both fall vacant, the National People's Congress holds by-elections to elect a new chairman and a new vice-chairman. Prior to the by-elections, the chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee functions as acting state chairman.

Committee Powers Expanded

[Excerpts] Beijing, April 27 (XINHUA) -- Some of the functions and powers of the National People's Congress, which exercises the highest state power, will be vested in the N.P.C. Standing Committee, thus expanding its legislative authority. This is provided for in the draft of China's revised constitution.

The constitutions adopted in 1954, 1975 and 1978 provided that laws should be enacted by the N.P.C. while decrees were to be formulated by its Standing Committee.

Hu Qiaomu, secretary-general of the national constitutional revision committee, said that this change was in line with China's actual conditions and would enable more legislation work to be performed.

On the division of legislative work between the N.P.C. and its Standing Committee, the draft provides that the N.P.C. has the power to amend the constitution and make and amend the basic law governing criminal offences, civil affairs, state structure and other matters; the Standing Committee is empowered to enact and amend all other types of laws.

As regards decrees, the draft provides this explanation: Except for laws, all the decisions and resolutions adopted by the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee are to be called decrees and have the same binding power as laws.

The draft provides that the chairman, vice-chairmen and secretary-general of the N.P.C. Standing Committee form the chairman's council that attends to important routine work.

The draft also provides that members of the N.P.C. Standing Committee (namely the chairman, vice-chairmen, secretary-general and other members) shall not hold posts in organs of state administration or the judicial and procuratorial organs.

Hu Sheng Interview

[Text] Beijing, April 27 (XINHUA) -- Hu Sheng, deputy secretary-general of the committee for revision of the constitution, answered in an interview here today questions raised by BEIJING REVIEW and XINHUA correspondents. Excerpts of the questions and answers follow:

Question: Would you please tell us in brief reasons and process of revising the constitution?

Answer: In March 1978, the first session of the Fifth National People's Congress adopted a Constitution of the People's Republic of China. It was adopted in a hurry, because at that time the political and ideological confusions caused by the 10-year "Cultural Revolution" had not been eliminated and not all the experience and lessons of the socialist revolution and construction over the past 30 years since the founding of new China had been summed up. It does not conform to the conditions and needs of the new period of historical development at the present time. It has thus become utterly necessary to revise the constitution in an all-round way as soon as conditions become ripe.

Over the past one and a half years since its establishment, the national constitutional revision committee has formulated this draft which is being submitted by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress to the people of various nationalities for discussion.

Here I want to mention the Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China adopted in June 1981 by the sixth plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee. It summed up the basic experience of China's socialist revolution and socialist construction, and clarified many major theoretical and practical questions. The resolution has won the support of the people of the whole country. The present draft of the revised constitution takes this resolution as its guiding principle. Our political, economic and cultural life have all been full of vigor and made advances during the more than three years since the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee. This proves the correctness of the principles and policies of the party and state in various fields. The conditions for a constitution suitable to the new historical period have become ripe since we now have the resolution as well as the experience gained over the past three years.

Q: Why has the power of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress been enlarged?

A: In the future, many laws will be enacted on the basis of the new constitution to cover various fields. The National People's Congress is composed of a large number of people and holds its session only once a year. It is unrealistic for it to enact all the laws. To enlarge the legislative power of the N.P.C. Standing Committee will obviously spur the progress of a great deal of the legislative work.

Q: Why reinstate the post of chairman of the People's Republic of China? How many vice-chairmen will there be? Is there any difference between the present draft of the revised constitution and the 1954 constitution with regard to the functions and powers of the chairman?

A: The 1954 constitution included a provision for the post of the chairman of the state. Mao Zedong held the post until 1959 when Liu Shaoqi succeeded him. The existence of a chairmanship conforms with the customs and aspirations of the Chinese people. A chairman of state elected by the N.P.C. to represent a country in domestic and foreign affairs will have an important and positive influence on the political life of the nation. Reinstatement of the post shows that China's political system has become as stable and sound as in the years before the "Cultural Revolution."

As stated in the draft of the revised constitution, there is only one vice-chairman.

With regard to the functions and powers of the chairman of the state, the present draft is basically the same as the 1954 constitution. The only difference is that the 1954 constitution stipulated that the chairman commanded the armed force of the country, was chairman of the council of national defence and had the power to convene the supreme state conference. The present draft, however, does not have such stipulations. It transfers the policy-making power with respect to national defence to the chairman of the Central Military Council. As to the supreme state conference, history has proved it to be not necessary in the political life of our country.

Q: Why establish the Central Military Council? What are its functions? Will the State Council continue to set up a Ministry of National Defence?

A: The Chinese People's Liberation Army is the army of the People's Republic of China. As the fundamental law of a country, the constitution should have an explicit stipulation concerning the position of the army in the state. Both the 1975 and 1978 constitutions state that the chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China commands the Armed Forces of the People's Republic of China. This confused the functions of the party and the functions of the state, which are obviously different in nature. This also obscured the status of the armed forces in the state organs. The draft of the revised constitution not only confirms the leading role of the Chinese Communist Party in state political life but also stipulates that the party must carry out activities within the scope of the constitution and the law. This explains in explicit terms the relationship between the party and the state. Therefore, the party's leadership over the armed forces could not be taken to mean that the armed forces do not belong to the state.

The Central Military Council adopts the system of personal responsibility of its chairman, and its chairman is to be elected by the National People's Congress and responsible to the National People's Congress or its Standing Committee.

Thus, the position of the supreme policy-making organ of the armed forces in the state system is correctly stipulated.

The draft of revised constitution does not specifically prescribe the ministries under the State Council. However, it stipulates that among its functions and powers the State Council is entrusted to "direct the building of the armed forces." Therefore, the State Council will naturally have a ministry to perform this function, that is, the existing Ministry of National Defence.

Q: What are the new stipulations for the democratic rights of the people in the draft of the revised constitution? Why isn't the "freedom to strike" included among the "fundamental rights of citizens?"

A: In the chapter of the fundamental rights and duties of citizens, the current draft reinstates the stipulation that all citizens of the People's Republic of China are equal before the law, as stipulated in the 1954 constitution. Clear and specific stipulations provide for citizens' inviolable freedoms of person, personal dignity and homes. Their freedom and privacy of correspondence are protected by the law. In the article on citizens' freedom of religion, "no one may use religion to carry out counter-revolutionary activities or activities that disrupt social order, harm the health of citizens, obstruct the educational system of the state" and "no religious affairs may be dominated by any foreign country" have been added to the draft.

These stipulations reflect the will of the broad masses of the people, including those who believe in various religions. The aim of it is to provide better state protection of religious activities.

As for the freedom to strike, it was included in the 1975 and 1978 constitutions. But experience in the past few years have proved that the democratic management of enterprises can be improved and strengthened by various means under a socialist system. In order to safeguard their own rights and interests, prevent the damage caused by the bureaucratic style of work on the part of enterprise leadership and promote the sound development of enterprises, working people can utilize means other than striking to express their demands and to achieve their aims. Striking is not only disadvantageous to the state, but also harmful to the interests of the workers. Therefore, the right to strike has not been included in the draft of the revised constitution.

Q: Why do you reinstate the system of political power of townships? Why do you want to change the system of "integrating government administration with commune management" of the people's communes?

A: Experience over the past years shows that this system, while proving to be positive in certain ways, has produced many negative effects. Its main defects are: on the one hand, while mainly engaging in economic work, the leading body of the people's commune neglects its functions as the grassroot level organ of state power. On the other, compulsory administrative methods are often applied to economic work, which is disadvantageous to the development of the collective economy. Overcentralization in the people's communes is disadvantageous to the democratic management and supervision of organs of state power and collective economic organizations at the basic level.

In short, altering the system of integrating government administration with commune management is advantageous to the improvement and strengthening of the work of the organs of state power at the basic level as well as to the development of the collective economy in the rural areas.

Peng Zhen on Constitution

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- China's new draft constitution "defines the nature of our country and the status of various classes in the state" said Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the national constitutional revision committee, at the Standing Committee meeting of the National People's Congress on April 22.

Article one of the general principles of the draft stipulates that China is "a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants." Noting that the people's democratic dictatorship in China is a concrete form of the dictatorship of the proletariat, Peng Zhen said, since China has a rural population of 8 hundred million, without a consolidated worker-peasant alliance there will not be broad united front led by the working class and stable People's Republic of China, nor will socialism be realized.

The worker-peasant alliance covers intellectuals since the majority in China are part of the working class and there are quite a few intellectuals among the peasants, he said. "This stipulation of accurately [as received] reflects China's actual conditions and the status of various classes and helps prevent distortion and abuse of the dictatorship of the proletariat," he said.

The draft provides that "state institutions apply the principle of democratic centralism," he said. "This is the system of our government. China's political power in in the hands of the people, the people who account for more than 99.9 per cent of the whole population."

He said, "The people have the right to administer the affairs of the country and its economic, cultural and social affairs through various channels and in various forms." They practised high degree of centralism on the basis of high degree of democracy and were responsible for the destiny of the state, the nation and their own.

Peng Zhen pointed out: "The basic experience of China's modern history has testified that we must uphold leadership by the Communist Party of China. Upholding party leadership lies fundamentally and mainly in the correctness of the party's ideological and political leadership, in the correctness of the party's line and policies, and in the close links between the party and the people."

In formulating its policies, he said, the party repeatedly consults the masses, seeks their opinions, and reflects the fundamental interests of the overwhelming majority of the people. The party also relies on its members to take the lead and set an example for the people.

Chinese Communist Party leadership and activities in the life of the state are carried out within the framework of the constitution and law. The party should also lead the people in abiding by the constitution and law. "In China," he said, "the constitution and laws reflect the unity of the party's proposals and the people's will."

China's economic system consists of the socialist sector of ownership by the whole people, socialist collective sector of ownership by the working people and individual economy. They all have their own advantages in certain areas and are indispensable.

The draft constitution stipulates that the socialist state sector is "the dominant force in the national economy." The collective sector is the main economic form in China's rural areas, and appropriate for the level of development of China's agricultural productive forces at the current stage, he said.

China permits foreign enterprises and businessmen to invest in the country or undertake various forms of economic cooperation with it. "China will use foreign investment and introduce advanced technologies of other countries on the basis of self-reliance and under the principle of equality and mutual benefit and this will speed up China's socialist modernization program."

The draft provides, he said, that "the basic task of the Chinese people in the coming years is to concentrate on socialist modernization," and "continually raise labor productivity, improve economic results and develop the social productive forces" through various forms.

China has a population of one billion, abounds in natural resources and has a great potential of people and materials. If the people of the whole country get mobilized, give full play to the superiority of the socialist system, and rely on their hard work, China's socialist modernization program will certainly be realized, Peng Zhen said.

The vice-chairman said that China had a long-range task of creating a highly developed socialist ethics. "The task involves two aspects," he said, first "to carry out ideological and moral education; and, second, to develop education, science and culture. All these are aimed at fostering the people of all nationalities of the whole country, men and women, old and young, into people who have ideals, high morality and values, observe discipline and are cultured."

Peng on Citizens' Rights

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- China's citizens will enjoy more rights than under a capitalist system through the political power and socialist system of the people's democratic dictatorship, said Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the national constitutional revision committee, at a meeting of the National People's Congress Standing Committee here on April 22. Explaining the principal points on this question in the revised draft, Peng Zhen said that China's laws are made by the people led by the working class, therefore they are the concentrated expression of the people's will and interests, and are consciously accepted as such. That all citizens are equal before the law is a fundamental right of the citizen and a basic principle of the socialist legal system.

Delegates are elected democratically by the people to form people's governments and run the country. They supervise and have the power to recall or remove members of political power organs at various levels. This is the most basic right of the people. Statistics for the 1981 general election show that the right to vote covers more than 99.9 percent of all those 18 years old and over. This extensive democracy is a characteristic of socialist democracy.

He said that the draft also stipulates that freedom of person and their personal dignity are inviolable. Citizens enjoy freedon of religious belief. The revised draft restores the relevant stipulations set out in the 1954 constitution, but more clearly and concretely. "In our country," he said, "citizens may believe in religion or disbelieve, but politically they have one thing in common, that is, they are all patriotic and support socialism."

He said, it is an objective fact and a question of social ideology that some people believe in this or that religion. It should never be settled by compulsory means. The draft provides "the state protects legitimate religious activities," but "no one may use religion to carry out counterrevolutionary activities or activities that disrupt public order, harm the health of citizens or obstruct the educational system of the state." At the same time, he said, all religions in China are self-propogated, self-administered and self-supported by Chinese believers. Therefore, the draft stipulates "no religous affairs may be controlled by any foreign power."

The draft provides, "the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. Every citizen enjoys the rights prescribed by the constitution and the law and at the same time has the duty to abide by the constitution and the law." At no time, Peng Zhen explained, have there been freedom and rights that are absolute and subject to no restriction. He said, "In our socialist country, no freedom or right of exploitation of man by man is allowed. The state guarantees citizens' legitimate freedom and rights and permits no violation of these by any organization and individual. But, it also permits no person to make use of freedom and rights to conduct counter-revolutionary activities and other criminal activities disrupting social, production and work order."

Peng on New Structure

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- Some provisions of the draft concerning state structure reforms in China's system were discussed by Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the national constitutional revision committee, at the Standing Committee meeting of the National People's Congress here on April 22.

These provisions include: strengthening the system of people's congress; expansion of the functions and powers of the N.P.C. Standing Committee; reinstatement of the post of chairman of the People's Republic who represents the state in its domestic affairs and its relations with other states; establishment of the Central Military Council of the People's Republic to lead the armed forces of the country; the system of personal responsibility of the premier in the State Council; division of functions and powers between central and local state institutions, strengthening the functions and powers of the local governments under the unified leadership by the central authorities; strengthening regional national autonomy; strengthening political power at the grassroot level; and establishment of people's congresses in townships.

The revised draft stipulates that at the central level, the chairman of the People's Republic, the premier of the state council, the chairman of the Central Military Council, the president of the Supreme People's Court and the chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate are elected by the National People's Congress. Each with his own duties, they are responsible to and supervised by the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee. Division of labor and effective enforcement of state power will enable China, Peng Zhen said, to face any danger more effectively and guarantee the advance of the socialist cause. At the same time, the better and clear-cut division of functions and powers between the organs of state power and the organs of administration at all levels from center to grassroots will facilitate strict implementation of the system of responsibility for work, raise efficiency and combat bureaucracy.

Peng Zhen said the National People's Congress is the highest organ of state power exercising supreme state power in a unified way. China was a large country with a very large population of more than 50 nationalities and more than 2,000 counties. Every strata of the population, all nationalities, all localities, all fields of work and various political parties were entitled to appropriate representation in the National People's Congress. This meant a large number of deputies, making it cumbersome for the N.P.C. to carry out its work and exercise its functions frequently. That was why, he said, the revised draft delegates part of its functions and powers to the N.P.C. Standing Committee.

The draft stipulates that the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee exercise legislative authority in the country and enact laws and decrees; the N.P.C. establishes necessary special committees to examine, discuss and draw up relevant bills; the chairman, vice-chairmen and secretary-general of the N.P.C. Standing Committee make up the membership of the Chairman's Council which attends to important routine work; and members of the Standing Committee shall not hold posts in state administration bodies or organs of the Judiciary or procuratorates, and thus most of them will have specific duties.

The people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government and their standing committees, under the new draft, may formulate and promulgate local statutes promptly based on the local situation. This gives fuller play to initiative and enthusiasm by local authorities in speeding up construction of the whole country.

He said the application of regional autonomy to any area where a minority nationality lives in compact community has been a consistent policy of new China. The draft gives the national autonomous areas more autonomy. The chairman of autonomous regions, heads of autonomous prefectures and heads of autonomous counties shall be persons of the nationality or nationalities exercising local regional autonomy.

The state helps the national autonomous areas to train large numbers of cadres, specialized personnel and skilled workers from its nationality or nationalities and provides financial, material and technical assistance to minority nationalities to accelerate their economic and cultural development.

In line with the principle of the separation of government administration and commune management, Peng Zhen said, the draft stipulates that township governments will be set up and people's communes will regain as organizations of the rural collective economy. This will help improve and strengthen the work of grassroot government in the rural areas, link the governments better with the local people and develop the collective economy.

Radio Urges Debate

[Station commentary: "Let Everyone Discuss the Draft of the Revised Constitution"]

[Text] The NPC Standing Committee has decided to make public the draft of the revised constitution for discussion by people of all nationalities across the country. This is a major event in the political life of our country. It symbolizes the fact that our country is making big strides in socialist democracy and the legal system, and that our socialist modernization program is developing successfully.

The revision of the constitution this time is not merely the amendment of certain articles, but rather a systematic revision of the constitution on the basis of the new historical conditions. The prupose is to work out a new constitution suited to the situation in our country, meeting the needs of the new period. As everyone knows, shortly after the downfall of the gang of four, we began to revise the constitution, and in 1978 the constitution being used today was adopted. At that moment, the whole party and the people throughout the country had not enough time to sum up all the historical experiences since the founding of the PRC and to determine a correct path suited to our country's condition for developing the program of socialist modernization. Because of this, the 1978 constitution is far from perfect. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, however, there have been significant changes and developments in the political, economic and cultural aspects of our country. The Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China, adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, gave a systematic summing-up of positive and negative experiences over the past 30 years or so since our country was founded. This regulation also fulfilled the historical task of clarifying confused ideas and restoring the correct guiding ideology. As a result, a favorable condition has been created for us to work out a scientific and stable socialist constitution.

As the fundamental law, the draft of the revised constitution presented for discussion by the people of all nationalities in the country affirms the necessity of upholding the four basic principles and contains more comprehensive stipulations than the 1978 constitution regarding China's social system, the nature and system of our state, the fundamental tasks of the Chinese people from now on, the basic rights and obligations of our citizens, the structure of the state and other most radical and important questions concerning the state. It is explicitly stated in the draft of the revised constitution that, from now on, the basic task of the Chinese people is to concentrate their efforts on socialist modernization, that is, to gradually build China into a highly democratic and civilized socialist country with modern industry, agriculture, national defense, science and technology. This stipulation on the people's basic task reflects the fundamental interests and aspirations of the people of all nationalities in our country.

The draft of the revised constitution contains many other important stipulations, which are of vital significance to restructuring and perfecting our country's political, economic and cultural systems. This will perfect our state system as a whole and ensure the smooth progress of our socialist modernization program.

NANFANG RIBAO ON PROPER USE OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE

[Short commentary: "Foreign Exchange Must Be Used in the Right Places"]

[Text] Since the open-door policy was implemented in Guangdong Province, more and more foreign exchange has been placed in the hands of localities and departments. How should this foreign exchange be properly utilized? The foreign trade department concerned imported advanced equipment with its foreign exchange for the Guangzhou No 8 plastic products plant last year. By using this equipment as a model, this plant has modernized their old equipment of the 1960's. This is an example of using foreign exchange in the right places. Foreign exchange acquired by other localities and departments should also be used in the same way.

The fundamental purpose of the open-door policy is to import foreign advanced equipment and technology and to promote development of domestic production. Therefore, while utilizing foreign capital and foreign exchange, it is necessary to proceed from developing production, giving priority to construction projects, such as building power stations, highways and bridges, so as to strengthen the weak links in the economy of Guangdong Province. Foreign exchange can also be used for transforming our old enterprises by importing advanced equipment. By making use of our favorable condition of an abundant labor supply, we can process imported materials for foreign businessmen and assemble machines for export. All this can help set up our modernization construction. However, some of our comrades are not willing to do this "stupid" work; instead, they are keener on "making foreign fortunes." They take all sorts of measures, legal or illegal, to import consumer goods in large quantities with the foreign exchange in their hands. Some of them even smuggle in goods and resell them to reap staggering profits. As a result, domestic industry was impaired and the domestic market was disturbed. This is a profound lesson.

While using foreign capital and foreign exchange to develop production, it is also necessary to consider whether they are reasonably utilized and whether they can bring benefits, and it is inadvisable to act blindly. At present, some people have blind faith in foreign goods. They like to buy those things from abroad that can obviously be produced by themselves. Even a screw has to be imported. Some of the imported items are duplicative, since after one factory imports an assembly line, another factory imports the same line. Some imported items are not advanced, but are junk discarded by foreign businessmen, yet our comrades still treat them as treasures. In the final analysis, this is because their blind faith in foreign things is making mischief in their minds. They only believe in other people's things but not in their own things. Our purpose in learning foreign advanced technology and using other peoples' experience as a reference is to enrich and improve our own but never to rely on foreigners for everything. Our modernization construction will finally be accomplished by ourselves and it can never be brought in. The Guangzhou No 8 plastic products plant is commendable because they not only learned from foreign advanced experience, but also displayed the spirit of self-reliance and have modernized an old enterprise with their own hands.

SICHUAN RIBAO VIEWS RURAL LEADERSHIP BUILDING

HK250648 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Report on 25 April SICHUAN RIBAO commentator's article: "Suit the New Situation and Learn New Skills -- Commenting on Strengthening the Building of Rural Grassroots Leadership Groups"]

[Excerpts] Strengthening the building of grassroots leadership groups in the rural areas and ensuring that these groups suit the new situation of the establishment of responsibility groups is a current urgent task to be solved in the area of rural work. Since this spring, the party committees and government at all levels have acted according to the plans of the central and provincial CCP committees and taken a series of effective steps to grasp the building of grassroots leadership groups while perfecting and stabilizing the agricultural production responsibility systems. A certain degree of success has already been achieved.

The article points out: The great majority of basic-level cadres in rural Sichuan are good. Most of the problems in the leadership groups are problems in understanding. To arm the cadres' thinking with the spirit of the central document and thereby unify their understanding is the current most practical and effective form of ideological building. We must organize the basic-level cadres to study in depth the minutes of the national rural work conference and conduct education in upholding one thing, keeping two things unchanged, and taking account of three things. On the basis of solving the cadres' problems in ideological understanding, we should act according to the stipulations of the central document, base ourselves on the reality of the local responsibility systems and clearly define the cadres' duties. We should correspondingly set up cadre post responsibility systems and put them on a sound basis, institute a strict reward and penalty system, and encourage the cadres to exert their best efforts in work.

YUNNAN INDUSTRY MEETING DISCUSSES YEAR'S TASKS

[Summary] A recent Yunnan provincial industry and communications work conference, convened by the provincial government, discussed and decided on striving to improve economic returns in seven respects so as to achieve a sound growth rate this year. The meeting seriously studied Premier Zhao Ziyang's important speech at the national industry and communications work conference and other important documents.

The meeting stressed: "We must correct the guiding ideology for industry and communications and sh t from emphasizing output value and growth rate to stressing economic returns. Industry and communications this year must be closely centered on improving economic returns." The improvement of economic returns should be concentrated on the following aspects this year: 1) raise industrial and communications production by 4.5 percent over last year and strive for a 5 percent increase, on the basis of producing marketable products that sell well; 2) examine the increase in sales income of enterprises, which should not be lower than the increase in their production; 3) profits of industrial enterprises should rise by 9 percent; 4) production costs of comparable products should fall by 1 percent and losses by 20 percent; 5) strive to improve product quality; 6) develop 350 to 400 new products by making full use of the province's resources, to satisfy the needs of the markets and the people; 7) do everything possible to reduce energy consumption. This year the industry and communications enterprises in the province should save 350,000 tons of coal, 40,000 tons of coke, 100 million kilowatts of electricity, and 10,000 tons of oil.

Provincial CCP committee First Secretary An Pingsheng made a speech to the principal leading comrades attending the conference.

HEBEI MILITARY LEADER ON SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

HK240205 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 14 Apr 82

[Speech by Hebei Military District Political Commissar Fei Guozhu entitled "Strengthen Ideological Education, Do a Good Job of Building Spiritual Civilization"--recorded; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Gratifying changes have taken place in the spiritual outlook of the numerous cadres, armymen and militiamen throughout the district since last year by unfolding extensively and in a thorough way the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" and of helping armymen have lofty ideas, good morality, knowledge and good health, stressing the army's standards of appearance and bearing, good manners and good discipline and fearing neither hardship nor bloodshed or sacrifice, particularly by unfolding the all-people decorum and courtesy month activities. Although some achievements have been scored in building spiritual civilization in our district, it should be noted that the development of these activities has been uneven. For example, some comrades still do not have a sufficient understanding of the importance and necessity of building socialist spiritual civilization. They do not have sufficient confidence in the substantial improvement of party work style and the changes of social habits and have not enacted specific measures for conducting these activities regularly and systematically in the light of the realities in their own units or departments.
